But the butterflies, where are they?—those beautiful children of sunshine and of summer which have been flitting around us day by day—now that summer is gone and the sun hidden behind the dark wintry clouds, what has become of them? The yellow sulphur butterfly, like a flying primrose, which we hailed so gladly in the early days of spring; the white butterfly, born among the cabbages, which has been following us everywhere; the lovely little blue butterfly, which danced before us on the breezy downs; fairest of all, the glorious peacock-butterfly, which spread out its painted wings upon the dahlias all through the autumn—these, and a hundred others, where, where are they? Ah, they have not taken flight with the swallows; they are not sleeping with the squirrel; one or two may be hiding under the ivy leaves, and may perchance live through the winter, but beside these, alas! they have melted away and perished before the frosts and the fogs of the dark November days.

But you need not be sorry; they lived happily in the sunshine, they did the work they had to do, and then, and not till then, they died. Is it not a strange thing to think that no butterfly ever sees either its parents or its children? The same may be said of other insects, but we can follow the life of a butterfly better than theirs. It is like an island cut off from all that went before and from all that is coming after.

The tiny eggs are laid upon leaf of oak-tree or maple, or some far humbler plant, and the baby caterpillars, when they are hatched, find themselves just in the right place; their unknown mother has had a mother's care for them, and the food which is closest to them is always that which they would have chosen for themselves. So they eat and eat, and keep growing and growing, till their skins get too small for them, just as your clothes might do for you. But they cast them off, and find a new skin all ready underneath. Two or three times over this goes on, then the eating comes to an end; the caterpillar spins for itself a silken bed, and, wrapping itself up within it, turns into a chrysalis. The word means something golden, because many of them are of a burnished yellow color outside. Within, you would think it was nothing but a grain; there is no sign of life; you would say the caterpillar was dead. So you would say of the trees in winter; but they are not dead; they are only getting their new robes ready; and it is just the same with the caterpillar. Wait but a little while and forth from this living tomb springs the perfect creature—a radiant, many-colored butterfly—wonder of wonders, only that we have grown too used to it to marvel.

And the butterfly spreads its wings to the sunshine, and it settles on the flowers, just to sip a little honey; but it has not much to do with eating now—that is too commonplace a matter for such an airy creature; it enjoys its new world for a few brief days, and then it lays its eggs and dies. The eggs mostly lie dormant through the winter, and then are hatched by the heat of the sun in the spring; and so the history of the butterfly ends.

First creeping and then soaring—feeble and despised, and then admired and courted—born in a hovel and then raised to a throne—put to sleep in a golden cradle, and waking up with ugliness turned to beauty—the old life dull and dreary, the new one bright and sunny—is it not like a fairy tale? And are there not hundreds of such tales written for us on every hedgerow and almost every blade of grass? And has not God put into them morals and lessons for us, if we have only eyes to see them and hearts to understand them?

Let us take away one lesson to-day from the butterfly. Do you know where some of the largest and loveliest of them spring from? Their birthplace was the nettle-bed—a humble and despised place, you will say, and truly. And we must begin low if we would soar high. We must be humble before we can be great. We must enter at the gate of humility if we are ever to be exalted. The butterfly and its story only echo back the Bible words: "Before honor is humility." "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted."—Children's Hour.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Pasturing Hogs.

To raise hogs cheaply and profitably they should have green food the year round. Clover in summer and rye in winter give the most satisfactory results. It is best that pigs should always have some grain, but they will require very little if they have a good pasture. Most farmers permit their clover to head out before turning on it; but this is not our practice, and years of experience has satisfied us that it is not the most economical plan. We turn our hogs on the clover so soon as it will afford a good bite, and keep enough on it, if possible, to prevent it from heading out at all. In this way the clover will last through the entire summer and fall, and will be much more likely to survive the winter than if permitted to head out. Upon the contrary, if hogs are kept off until the clover is in bloom, they will simply go through the field and bite the blossoms off, and the remainder will be trampled under foot and lost for all feeding purposes. Now we do think that the land is more benefited by this method than the other. In fact, our experience is in favor of short pasturing, for we always feed our store hogs corn when on clover, and the droppings, which are very rich, will be scattered all over the land, and improve it more than the dead clover stalks. We always provide rye for winter pasturage; it is the best thing, after all, and it is astonishing the amount of stock that a good field of rye, sown in August or September, will carry through the winter with very little assistance from the granary or the mow. With plenty of clover and rye, green food can be had the entire year, and stock hogs will always look thrifty that have plenty of this in addition to a moderate supply of grain. If a farmer has good stock, either Berkshire, Chester or Essex, or any other improved breed, or a mixture of them, and treats them this way, he will always have a supply of good healthy pork, and it wont cost him ten cents per pound either. If he feeds regularly and salts regularly, and pays attention to the cleanliness and general health of his stock, he need not fear cholera or any other disease of the kind.—Rural Alabamian.

SAVE YOUR ORANGE-TREES.—The Plaquemine Sentinel of a recent date, in alluding to this important fruit-tree, says:

Lately we have had occasion to notice particularly the condition of the orange-trees in town and country. These trees are neglected to an extent which will hereafter cut short the orange crops of the State extensively if a remedy is not applied. On many trees moss hangs, and it looks as though it were several years old. The bark of the trees looks dead, or in a diseased condition. The lands look dull and unthrifty; the fruit is small and sour, and the rind hard and tight.

Fork up the earth all around within six feet of the tree, but avoid, as much as possible, disturbing the roots. Make the soil rich with old manure, or muck, or rotten wood, or Sterne's fine-bone superphosphate.

Draw the earth away from the body of the trees, and leave the large ends of the roots bare. Leave a circular levee around the tree from six inches to a foot high, if the surface around the tree is not too flat. This levee and mellow earth will appropriate all of the rains that fall on or around the tree to the roots over which they fall.

A thrifty orange-tree protects itself against its enemies like a strong man. The first thing to be done in applying a remedy to a sick orange-tree is to feed it at the roots; give the roots a chance to luxuriate in rich, mellow soil; give it sufficient moisture, but not too much, and its enemies will shun it as ticks and vermin shun fat cattle.

SUCCESSFUL APPLE-GROWING.—Joshua Jeffries is mentioned by the Practical Planter as one of the most successful apple-growers in Pennsylvania. His orchard is located on a hillside sloping gently to the south and southwest, is of limestone soil, and made fertile by surface application of manure. This system he has pursued for fifteen years. Trees, he maintains, should be fed regularly, not too much, but just enough to enable them to maintain a healthy, moderate, uniform growth. He applies the washings of the roads on his own farm, all the refuse ashes and those made in the neighboring lime-kilns in burning lime with wood, and also manure from the cattle yards. Whenever he has a spare load of fertilizing matter it goes to the orchard. Spreading the materials on the surface, although a green grass sod is on the ground all over it, the soil is so mellow he can kick it up with his foot—the young roots coming to the surface, or nearly so, not being more than an inch or so under it for their food. There they come in contact with light, heat, moisture, the important elements of plant food. Trees treated under this system are healthy, strong and vigorous. Although in a deep valley, liable to the late spring frosts, he secures crops of fruit, while his neighbors in more favored localities fail.—Field and Factory.

COTTAGE CHEESE.—Boil two chickens till tender, take out all the bones, and chop the meat fine, season to your taste with salt, pepper and butter, pour in enough of the liquid they were boiled in to make it moist, put into whatever mold you wish, and when cold turn out and cut into slices. It is excellent.

TO CURE SORE THROAT.—Take the whites of two eggs, and beat them with two spoonfuls of white sugar; grate a little nutmeg, and then add a pint of lukewarm water. Stir well and drink often. Repeat the prescription, if necessary, and it will cure the most obstinate case of hoarseness in a short time.

LEMON PIE.—Four soda crackers soaked several hours in two teacups of water, two cups of sugar, the rinds and juice of two lemons. Bake in pastry for two pies.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact they are the most reliable, strongest and best Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin is lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has been agent of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans, and has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinder of the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other Cotton Gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more power than they are more than equal for the thirty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the large cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily seen. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin of well established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a machine which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on hand in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Parties should be particular to state if they want a right or left-hand motion gins.

THE GREAT HOUSEHOLD REMEDY.

AS AN INVIGORATOR, LIVER CORRECTOR

AND BLOOD RENOVATOR

Is superior to all the Bitters, Elixirs, Cordials and Sarsaparillas in use.

It is so adapted to the whole system that every organ and function in the body is brought under its exhilarating influence. It gives tone and strength to the digestive apparatus, dispels langour and debility, invigorates the Liver, regulates the Kidneys and Bowels, removes the effect of excess or over-taxation of any kind, and gives vitality and richness to the blood.

Its curative powers alter and completely reorganize the entire mass of fluids, and even the solids of the human system, thereby preventing and curing Dyspeptic and Consumptive symptoms, Fever and Ague, Bilious diseases, Fevers of all kinds, Nervous Debility, Affections of the Stomach and Bowels, etc. As a mild and delightful Invigorant for delicate females it has no superior.

By its use new life and vigor is given to both body and mind, sending a glow of vitality through every part, which is PERMANENT AND LASTING.

It is the most effectual remedy for the relief of human suffering ever discovered, and is pleasant to the taste.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The weather was mild and pleasant until Tuesday, when it was cloudy and showery. Nothing of any importance has transpired with regard to the crops. Under more liberal receipts at all the ports there seems to be a general disposition to put crop estimates at 3,600,000 bales, while many count on 3,800,000 bales.

The river is 11 feet 3 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the seventh instant:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales | 20,238 |
| Lake | | 312 |
| Tennessee | | 9,655 |
| Mobile | | 1,093 |
| Florida | | 160 |
| Texas | | 676 |
| Total | | 32,144 |

On Saturday the sales summed up 7,800 bales, exclusive of any on the day previous, when 250 bales changed hands in addition to the amount reported. On Monday the market opened at about previous rates, but, as the demand was slack and the few buyers who came forward claimed concessions which factors would not admit, only a limited business was done during the morning, partly in Saturday's figures, and partly at a shade less, after which, although the latter met the demand more freely, the movement showed no animation, and the closing rates indicated a partial decline of ⅛c. The sales embraced 4,300 bales. The business would have been on a more liberal scale had factors been willing to give way a fraction, on one negotiation for a list of some magnitude parties being only 1-16c. apart. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair supply of the ordinary run of the receipts, but light offerings of the better qualities, and a manifest tendency to weaker prices, at least for the former, which continued to prevail throughout the day, without, however, causing any quotable decline, except in average low middling and the lower grades, which gave way about ⅛c. The demand was general, although showing only a fair degree of activity, but as two buyers took together 2,100 bales, the sales summed up 5,850 bales, twenty-one brokerage houses participating in the business. Good ordinary sold at 17⅛, 18@18⅛c., the last for benders, strict good ordinary at 18⅛c., low middling at 18⅝, 18¹⁵⁄₁₆@19⅛c., a style better than low middling, but hardly strict—usually styled low middling to strict low middling—at 19⅛c., strict low middling at the same, strict middling, high style, at 20⅛c., and strict middling to good middling at 20⅛c. Dusty cottons could not be forced off unless at liberal concessions.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 753,455 bales, against 690,486 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 368,817 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 134,726 to Great Britain, of 36,638 to France, and of 121,177 to other foreign ports.

SUNRISE.

BY M. A. H.

The pearly fringes of the eastern sky
Redden to rubies at his touch afar,
Who opes the world's shut doors. At his bright eye,
Abashed, Night's Queen hastens her silver car,
And draweth after her each constant star.
Pale, and dissolving, lesser glories lie
Within the golden chalice raised on high,
Whence pours the sun his matchless radiancy.

So rose on earth, with all-absorbing blaze,
The "Sun of Righteousness." Man, who had trod
With awful wonder nature's mystic ways,
Sees all her lights melt in diviner rays:
No longer hymns his vedas to her praise,
Nor raises altars to an unknown God.

OCEAN WAVES.

The speed of the waves is only an apparent speed, like that of the folds of a cloth raised by a current of air. Thus, although the water pressed by the wind rises and sinks by turns, it nevertheless hardly changes its place, and objects floating on its surface move but slowly and in an undulatory manner. The real movement of the sea is that of a drifting current, which gradually forms under the prolonged action of the wind; but this general movement of the liquid mass is, after all, inconsiderable. The only part which advances with the storm is the foaming, which, curling over the summit of the waves, dashes down the slope in front.

Before all seaports and roadsteads where great works, such as sea-walls and breakwaters, have been constructed, seamen have been able to observe the prodigious power of the angry water. On all the exposed works at Holyhead, Kingstown, Portland, Cherbourg, Port Vendres and Leghorn the waves have been seen to seize blocks weighing several tens and hurl them like playthings over the dikes. At Cherbourg the heaviest cannon on the rampart has been displaced. At Barra Head, in the Hebrides, Thomas Stephenson states that a block of stone of forty-three tons was driven more than one and three-fourths yards by the breakers. At Plymouth a vessel weighing two hundred tons was thrown, without being broken, to the very top of the dike, where it remained a wreck, as on a shelf, beyond the fury of the waves. At Dunkirk M. Villarceau has ascertained, by the most delicate measurements, that during a heavy sea the ground trembles at nearly one mile from the shore. In the Gulf of Gascony, so frequently visited by tempests, the waves coming from the west and northwest are drawn into a sort of funnel, and hurl themselves against the shores with a force at least equal to that of the waves in the Channel and the English seas. The works constructed by engineers to protect the roads and forts against this terrible pressure have been frequently swept away or much damaged by the waves. Man must incessantly continue the strife he is engaged in with the sea under pain of seeing the work of a century destroyed in a day. During the winters of 1867 and 1868 M. Paloa says that blocks of masonry thirty-six tons in weight, placed at the extremity of the dike at Biarritz, were thrown horizontally from eleven to thirteen yards. One block was even raised seven feet, carried over the breakwater, then thrown down and rolled to a great distance during the storm. At St. Jean de Luz the surf is still more terrible, and some of the masses of stone now employed in constructing the dike of Socoa, at the entrance to the roadstead, are not less than from eighty to ninety cubic yards; and yet even this strong wall would not be strong enough if not additionally defended by stones scattered loosely here and there, forming a range of protecting rocks in front of the dike upon which the sea expends its fury.

The only places where the waves display a still greater power than in the Gulf of Gascony are those that are sometimes ravaged by the tornadoes. In the Isle of Reunion there is to be found in the middle of a savanna a mass of block of madreporic stone, which is no less than five hundred and ten cubic yards in size. It is a piece that the waves have detached from a reef and driven before them across the land.—Elisee Reclus.

HEROISM.

I must protest against a misuse of the words hero, heroism, heroic, which is becoming too common, namely, applying them to mere courage. We have borrowed the misuse, I believe, as we have more than one besides, from the French press. I trust that we shall neither accept it nor the temper which inspires it. It may be convenient for those who flatter their nation, and especially the military part of it, into a ruinous self-conceit, to frame some such syllogism as this: "Courage is heroism; every Frenchman is naturally courageous; therefore every Frenchman is a hero." But we, who have been trained at once in a sounder school of morals, and in a greater respect for facts, and for language as the expression of facts, shall be careful, I hope, not to trifle thus with that potent and awful engine—human speech. We shall eschew, likewise, I hope, a like abuse of the word moral, which has crept from the French press now and then, not only into our own press, but into the writings of some of our military men, who, as Englishmen, should have known better. We were told again and again, during the late war, that the moral effect of such a success had been great; that the morale of the troops was excellent; or, again, that the morale of the troops had suffered, or even that they were somewhat demoralized. But when one came to test what was really meant by these fine words, one discovered that morals had nothing to do with the facts which they expressed; that the troops were in the one case actuated simply by the animal passion of hope, in the other simply by the animal passion of fear. This abuse of the word moral has crossed, I am sorry to say, the Atlantic; and a witty American, the other day (whom we must excuse, though we must not imitate,) when some one had been blazing away at him with a revolver, he, being unarmed, is said to have described his very natural emotions on the occasion by saying that he felt dreadfully demoralized. We, I hope, shall confine the word demoralization, as our generals of the last century would have done, when applied to soldiers, to crime, including, of course, the neglect of duty or of discipline; and we shall mean by the word heroism, in like manner, whether applied to a soldier or to any human being, not mere courage; not the mere doing of duty, but the doing of something beyond duty; something which is not in the bond; some spontaneous and unexpected act of self-devotion.—Charles Kingsley, in Cornhill.

OUR PERSONALITY IN DREAMS.

One remarkable thing as to the stuff of our dreams is well worth a moment's consideration—and it is this: Of whatever stuff we are ourselves made (so far as regards our moral constitution and character, that is,) of such stuff our dreams will assuredly partake, in a very great degree, whatever may be the forms and phases—grotesque and ridiculous, or awful and solemn—under which they occupy the mind in sleep. It has been frequently asserted by writers on this subject that the dreamer is at one time brave as a lion, at another a mere poltroon—at one time a knave, at another a saint, etc. But all such descriptions are false and baseless—the moral individuality undergoes no change in dreams. The coward never dreams that he is valiant, or the brave man that he is a coward; the sordid man has no generous emotions in the land of shadows, nor does the free-handed, hospitable man become a churl in his sleep. The dreams of the miser will never be visions of self-sacrifice and benevolence, nor those of the base, mean and impure be a whit more noble or elevated than the acts of their waking hours. It is true that in dreams we often acquire wealth, honor, dignity, reputation or power; in fact we may, and it is likely enough that we do, in our dreams realize, as it were, in the course of our lives, all those various longings and ambitions which we are in the habit of picturing to ourselves in those waking myths and day-dreams in which all men, from the necessities of their nature, indulge more or less. But throughout all these changes, endless as they are, the moral individual remains the same, and cannot or will not undergo a moral change. Again, in dreams we never lose our personal identity; one man never dreams that he is another man, and, though he may dream that he is two men, or ten men or twenty, yet each and all of these will be none other than himself, multiplied he knows not how. From these considerations, and others which they have a tendency to suggest, it would appear that we have ourselves a part to play in furnishing the stuff of our dreams. To what extent we are ourselves the creators of our dream-life may perhaps be shown in subsequent chapters.—Leisure Hour.

WANTED—A LANGUAGE.—Mr. Mori, the Japanese minister at Washington, has written a letter to Prof. Whitney, of Yale College, stating that the leading men of his nation are convinced that their language, particularly the written language, is inadequate to their necessities, and that the best thing for them to do is to adopt "some copious, expansible and expanding European language." They would prefer the English were it not for the difficulties in the structure of the language, especially "the absence of law, rule or order in its orthography."

THE WEDDING GARMENTS.—The dresses worn by the young Emperor and Empress of China, at their wedding, were covered with precious stones, and each cost about $900,000.

SCHOOL BOOKS—SCHOOL BOOKS.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of strictly unsectional, unpartisan, and entirely not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

WE DESIRE TO CALL THE ATTENTION of our friends and the public generally to our large and well assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and

NOCTURNE.

BY HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD.

In the soft, starless summer night
No murmur swims along the air,
Wrapped in her dim and dusky vail
Earth seems to slumber everywhere.

All the still dews in hiding lie,
With unrobbed sweetness droops the rose,
Nor up nor down the garden walks
A slight or stealthy zephyr blows.

Darkness and hush, profoundest peace:
The falling leaf forgets to float;
When with one deep and mighty throb
Along the headland strikes the note!

Strikes with the awful undertone
Of some great storm's tremendous blast,
That far through white mid-seas plows on
To scream around a broken mast!

But here the swell shall heave to shore
A muffled music, till it seem
The trouble of the sea become
Only the burden of a dream!

DIAMOND-DIGGING AT THE CAPE.

THE CAMP.

The nearer we drew to our journey's end the more busy became the road. Carts passed every five minutes, many of them handsome vehicles, and handsomely horsed. Empty wagons lumbered by, on the homeward journey. There was no chaff. Passers-by paid no more attention to each other than in London streets. Yet many of them were colonial-born, arrived within a very few weeks from some distant farm, where a strange face is the rarest of all chances. So quick is a man's education to self-dependence in a prosperous and democratic community.

On a sudden the driver pointed with his whip. "New Rush!" he said, calmly, and flecked the wheeler's neck. We looked out in great excitement. Far off, on a low swell that reached our horizon, appeared a broken crest, faintly white against the sky. No towers or pinnacles, such as one dreams of in a fairy city. Only a white sheen of tents along the ridge. A few yards more the sight was lost behind a dip in the plain, apparently so level. Another rise, and it was seen again, defined more clearly. So on, lost and regained alternately, with every glimpse more dingy and more broken, until the pale-gray mounds of "sorted stuff" came into view. Then lonely little camps occurred, consisting, perhaps, of a family wagon with two or three gipsy tents around, and little heaps of whitey soil; the whole encircled with a six-inch ditch, and a fence, may be, of thorns. These are mostly occupied by boers, who carry their stuff home for wives and children to "sort." Further on are more pretentious dwellings, houses of canvas stretched on wooden framework, with neat windows cut in them, bound with colored braid or ribbons round the edge. Many of them stand upon a pavement of nodules thrown from the sieve, about the size of marbles or under; it is not very rare to pick up a diamond under one's feet on these platforms. The mounds of "sortings" are now close by, thronged with busy men, black and white. Our road, however, is still the veldt. Wherever no tent stands, nor hole is dug, nor heap of sand conceals the soil, the thin, dry grass appears, with trefoil-leaves of caesia, and vetch-like, golden flowers. It is thus even in the busiest street, where houses are of wood or metal. One never can forget that all this great town has no longer history than of three months, nor expects to exist for twelve months more. Ruins it has in plenty, however—poor, old, broken tents, rusted and rotted sieves, holes abandoned. At every step one kicks aside the bones of oxen. Vile smells assail the nose. An utter recklessness of decency is one of those camp-features which most speedily impress the visitor.

Through the straggling purlieus of the place we trot, with crack of whip and warning shout. The roadway swarms with naked Kaffre and brawny white man. Dressed in corduroy or shoddy, high-booted, bare as to arms and breast, with beard of any length upon their chins, girt with a butcher's knife on belt of leather—one could not readily believe that among these bronzed fellows might be found creditable representatives of every profession. The roadway grows snowy white. Our wheels sink in "diamondiferous sand," brought from a depth of fifty feet. Piled up on either hand, it narrows the road to the last inch. We seem to be in a "cutting" ten feet deep. Above us, on each side, the sieves are endlessly at work, throwing a cloud of poisonous dust upon the wind. Screened from the merciless sun by an old umbrella sits the master of the claim, "sorting." His arm goes regularly to and fro. Our view is bounded by the close horizon of these artificial hills, save, here and there, the mound falls back to give a "canteen" place for plying trade. The work of diamond-digging is all going on within ten yards of us. The "claims," the pits whence comes the "stuff," lie on the right, shielded by the barrier of their own produce. The treasure-bearing sand is borne past us each moment in screaming bullock-dray and mule-cart and sack and bucket of the Kaffre. It goes to those solitary tents outside. The vehicles are pushed half up the hill to let us by. We approach the business quarter. Banks lower. The excavated road becomes a street. Wooden houses show themselves, all hung about with miscellaneous goods. Broadcloth and snowy puggaries are seen. Thicker and thicker stand the tents, closer presses the throng. A din of shouts and laughter fills the air. We pass large drinking-shops full of people; negroes go by in merry gangs. One stares amazed at such a crush of dwellings, such a busy, noisy host. One more sharp turn, and the market square opens before us, with Main street on the right.

An anticlimax ridiculous. Brimful with astonishment one reaches this point of view, and all the wonder disappears. It was the confusion, the "jam," of dwellings that so amazed us new-comers. Market square and Main street are as regular as mathematics can make them. The former is an immense expanse, set round with buildings, wooden, metal and canvas. Great gaps intervene among them, for the instinct of trade does not approve the situation chosen for its center. Main street is the favorite site. Here are great warehouses one story high, pretty frame tents of "diamond-koopers," neat canteens and luncheon bars. There are glass windows in abundance, set in the walls of plank and iron; well-dressed people form one-half the crowd; the street is thronged with passenger carts, many of them really handsome vehicles, with fine horses. Perhaps all this fixed order and arrangement is more justly marvelous than the pell-mell outside; but it does not so much impress the visitor. The oldest of these big stores has not three months' existence yet, but the blistering sun and grinding dust of Africa have given them an ancient, rusty look. There is little of the "camp" visible as one glances up and down the street; but behind, within arm's length of their neat back windows, the jumble of tent and hole and Kaffirs-shed, and cart and tethered horse and rubbish heap spreads out again. At the upper end those white mounds bar the view, with the busy, seething population upon them and behind.

MANNER OF WORKING.

The method of working is the same identically at all the four dry diggings. Diamonds are found there in two qualities of soil: first, in the surface sand; and second, in a whitey-gray, nodulous, limey earth, which Mr. Dunn describes as "tufaceous limestone." This is found in layers at different depths. Between them are strata comparatively unproductive, but the prudent digger passes nothing by unsorted. Gems are discovered in the most unlikely matrix.* In some parts of each kopje the surface soil is found to be very rich; in other parts much less so; but the digger, of course, relies on his tufaceous limestone. It is dry and gritty, mostly knotted up into cakes of all sizes, from that of a walnut downward. When adhering in a larger mass it often has sufficient elasticity to resist considerable pounding, and each rebellious lump are thrown aside, used for the building of walls and such-like purposes. The smaller pieces, and those broken up with ease, are loaded in carts, piled in sacks and buckets, or conveyed by some means to the sieve. They are first passed through an instrument of course mesh, which throws out the larger lumps. For the fine sieve the form of a parallelogram is found most useful on the fields. It is about three feet long by eighteen inches broad, with a stout wooden frame, and a bottom of perforated zinc or iron wire. At one end are two handles, made by elongating the sides of the frame. The sifter fixes in the ground two posts; to these he suspends the end of his sieve by a rope at each corner. Grasping the handles, to hold it horizontal, he directs the negro to pile on a heap of "stuff." He then, with an easy and untiring motion, works it about upon the sieve, backward and forward. The nodules grind against each other, and mostly break. The finer parts fly off in a cloud of villainous dust, or drop beneath through the meshes of the wire. When nothing is left but the dry little lumps, like fine gravel—and the diamonds—he unhooks the sieve and carries its contents to a neighboring table, on which it is poured before the panting "sorter."

This part of the business is the most important and the most delicate. A man may dig and sift in vain, if the sorter be incapable or untrustworthy. No mechanical ingenuity will help him in his work; it must be carried out with mere patience and vigilance. His table ought to be about three feet by two feet six inches, perfectly smooth, and fitted with a rim round three sides; but tables are expensive articles out yonder, and a few boards nailed together often give results much more pleasant to view than any beautiful upholstery. Such as it is, the sorter seats himself beside it, armed with an iron scraper six inches long and two or three wide. With this he helps himself to a convenient quantity of the stuff, spreads it out before him, and turns it off the board. The operation is done in three motions of the elbow, taking from the heap, spreading and throwing away. An experienced workman, who has confidence in his eyesight, performs these acts with wonderful quickness and regularity. His arm seems to move like a machine. Although there is great abundance of mica in the gravel—flakes that shine in the sunlight more brightly than diamonds—you will scarce ever see him pause in doubt.

By the mode of searching I have detailed, it is quite evident that very many diamonds are lost. * * * But the most serious of all these losses is that caused by the big nodules I have mentioned. These will vary in size from the diameter of a man's fist to that of his head. Hundreds are daily thrown away, of a capacity to enwrap a thousand-carat jewel—ay, or a five thousand! The roads at New Rush are lined with them like a parapet. They are built up as a wall to keep back the mountainous heaps of sifting. They are piled round tents to block out the draught, erected into cattle-kraals. In short, every purpose for which rough stones are suitable is there supplied with "lumps." This would be the most incredible of assertions to me had I not seen its truth with bodily eyes. There is not one among the diggers there who does not know better than most people what his building materials may perhaps contain. Were he so inexperienced, the first heavy shower would give him cause to suspect the truth, for he would see all the loafing population bent in earnest scrutiny of the sopped earth, and he would shortly hear of treasures picked up, perhaps, at his own tent-door. But no one is so ignorant. Every man knows that the fortune he is seeking may lie hidden in that dirty ball he tosses from him with a curse. And yet he tosses it! If a blow of the spade, a kick and a few hasty thumps against the ground do not shatter the lump, he lets it lie. Comes heavy rain, and from out the mass dissolved rolls forth a monstrous gem, picked up, most likely, by a "masterless" Kaffre or an idle follower of the camp, in open roadway. Or long exposure to the sun will make it friable, and then some passer-by, with careless kick, will get the prize. Every day such incidents occur. The newspapers are full of them. Schemes there are always afoot for "washing out" these nodules, a process than which nothing could be simpler. It is in human nature that the men who would not pick out the treasures at their door should yet object to others picking them. The diggers of New Rush are not so greedy. I caused the question to be put to many, whether they would allow myself and partners to cart off their "lumps." Not only was permission granted, but some fellows actually offered to load the cart if I should send it round. Anything to get rid of those "lumps." During the heavy rains which swelled the rivers, in the month of January last, two men came from Hebron with their cradle, and washed out as much as they could carry. The result of one day's work was thirty-three diamonds! The size we did not hear, but it was apparently such as to content these enterprising fellows. Next day they vanished, leaving their cradle in the veldt, and the place of them was known no more upon the fields, whether wet or dry. But to this day the lumps continue to be thrown out with rage.—To the Cape for Diamonds, by Frederick Boyle.

* I use this word matrix to express the substance in which diamonds, at the cape, at least, are actually found, and where, as I feel sure, by nature's alchemy, whatever that was, they were crystallized.

Some recent English statistics show rather a sorry state of things in Ireland. During the past year the actual decrease of land in cultivation is estimated at over one hundred and thirty thousand acres; the increase in emigration from Irish ports for the first seven months of 1872 is nearly six thousand persons. Does any one ask impatiently what they all come to this country for? He gets an answer in the fact that over half a million of the Irish population are confined in hovels which afford but one room for the whole family, of every age and sex and condition.

The newspapers give us some statistics from the forthcoming census tables. From these it appears that our native population is in round figures 33,000,000, our foreign-born population 5,500,000. The country is not, therefore, in immediate danger of being overrun by foreigners, provided it maintains such educational systems as assimilate the immigrants and render their children, born on our soil, true Americans. Of the 5,500,000 foreign-born citizens, 1,690,000 are of German extraction, 1,855,000 are Irish.

SCIENTIFIC.

The muscles in the human body are more than five hundred in number, and almost every motion is produced not by the action of one, but of several muscles.

In a discussion of the source of solar heat, published by J. Ericsson in Nature, he attempts to show that the contraction of the sun is the most probable source of its heat. He supposes it to contract at the rate of ten feet per month, which would be enough to explain its expenditure of heat. But this hypothesis also requires that there should be a gradual diminution of the amount of heat received from the diminished bulk of the sun sufficient to make a difference of one-thirty-seventh of a degree in four thousand years.

A little instrument, recently invented by a French physiologist, does for the pulse what his countryman, Daguerre, made the sun do for the face—that is, paint its features with an accuracy and minuteness before unknown. A pen or pencil, made to rise and fall by the motion of the artery at the wrist, traces a series of wave-like lines upon paper or smoked glass carried by clock-work. The upward lines are made by the swelling of the artery, with each contraction of the heart as it sends out the crimson jets. The downward sloping lines are made by the regular subsiding of the jets as the stream of life passes into the minute blood-vessels for the nutrition of the tissues.

M. Planeth, says Les Mondes, has found that if a flame burning in the open air be approached to a vibratory tuning-fork, the sound of the latter is considerably increased, as if it were placed in contact with the box of a stringed instrument. The sound acquires its greatest intensity when the flame is placed between the two branches of the fork. This phenomenon is believed to be analogous to the singing flame, only in such case it is the flame that excites the vibratory movement of the tube in order to place itself in similar synchronous vibrations; while, in the above-mentioned instance, it is the fork that gives the tone, and the flame takes up vibration in unison.

A curious and perhaps important discovery is stated to have been made recently by M. Kletzinsky, a Viennese professor. Noticing that persons sick with the smallpox were often visited by flies, he placed near an open window of the hospital a saucer filled with glycerine. Soon the flies gathered, and were caught like birds with glue. In their endeavors to free themselves all the foreign matter which had adhered to them was left in the glycerine, which was at once submitted to observation with the microscope. It was found that the glycerine, which was chemically pure when offered to the flies, was full of strange cells very similar to those seen on persons attacked by smallpox, but never on flies—a discovery which proves conclusively that these insects are not only filthy, but can be a very dangerous means of spreading contagious diseases.

Future Eclipses of the Sun.—Mr. Robert T. Paine communicates to Silliman's Journal a list of eclipses visible in the United States during the remainder of this century. The first central eclipse will be that of September 29, 1875, which will be annular in part of the State of New York and in four of the New England States. The duration of the ring on the central line will be three minutes thirty-nine seconds. At Boston it will be only two minutes twenty-nine seconds. The belt of country over which the annular eclipse will extend will be one hundred and ten miles wide. Within it are situated the observatories of Hamilton College, Albany, Harvard University, Amherst College and Dartmouth College. The first total eclipse will be that of July 29, 1878, when the shadow of the moon will pass over British Columbia, Montana, Colorado, Texas and Cuba. At Denver, Colorado, the eclipse will be total nearly three minutes.

A new invention has been adopted this year at the Prince Consort's farm and the Norfolk farm at Windsor, England, for the preservation of hay-ricks from the heating occasioned by confined air and moisture. A long perforated tube, fixed in short lengths which fit into each other, is built into the body of the rick as it is carried up, and surmounted by a cowl, which turns with the wind and provides a constant downward current; an upward current is also arranged for an inner tube, which is solid, opens at the bottom, and so completes the circulation. This invention is also adapted to granaries and ships in transit, but in these cases several arms are provided, running out from the central shaft at right angles, so as to distribute the air through the body of the grain. The use of perforated tubes for preserving grain, meal, etc., in storehouses, granaries and in barrels, is an American invention, and has long been in use in the United States.

possessing a peculiar and thrilling quality of tone, most pipe-like in its nature, and which can be used in many passages with charming effect.

The above Stops are in every case separate, and additional sets of reeds, are entirely distinct from the "Tremolo," which always accompanies them, and which is never perfect without them, and can all be brought at will into the full organ, adding greatly to its power and richness of tone.

They take pleasure in announcing to the musical public and the trade the valuable addition to their Organs of a most beautiful Solo Stop,

THE ÆOLINE.

It is an additional set of reeds, exquisitely voiced and ingeniously arranged in a separate wind-chest (patented September 13, 1870.) Its quality of tone is the most delicate and soft imaginable. It is capable of the greatest variety of effects in combination with their other stops, the improved VOX HUMANA in particular. It has elicited the warmest encominms from all organists and musicians who have examined it. It is perfectly simple in its construction, and they predict for it the highest degree of success. Its charming effects, especially when used in connection with their improved styles of cases, can but be appreciated by every musician.

IMPROVED CASES, ETC.

By the construction of these Cases the quality of tone in their Instruments has been greatly improved, every facility for the comfort and convenience of the performer has been provided for, and the effect of their beautiful and graceful design is such as to entirely obviate the disagreeable boxy appearance which has been for so long a time an unpleasant characteristic of the Reed Organ.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—The electoral vote of Louisiana was thrown out by the Senate, and will not be counted.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—Ex-King Amadeus and family have gone to Lisbon, where they will remain until spring.

It is stated that Don Carlos is preparing to take advantage of the crisis in Spanish affairs, and will push for the crown.

A hundred million francs were subscribed at the meeting held at the residence of the Duke de Aumale to aid the Duke De Montpensier in operations against the movement for a republic in Spain.

Masses will be celebrated for the success of the Bourbon cause.

The consort of ex-Queen Isabella has left Paris for Madrid. The Spanish minister, Olosenga, has taken leave of President Thiers, and will probably leave soon for the same destination.

Neither Victor Emanuel nor the Italian government advised King Amadeus to abdicate.

RICHMOND, Feb. 13.—There was an immense turnout this afternoon to witness the demonstration in honor of the arrival of the first through train from the Ohio river over the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad.

The procession, which was very long, was composed of the First Virginia Regiment, the fire department, various commercial associations, the City Council, other city officials and many private citizens, was formed and marched to the Chesapeake and Ohio depot.

Soon after their arrival the expected train came in, and was saluted by two batteries of artillery stationed on the neighboring hills, each firing one hundred rounds. Several of the church bells and all the city bells rung their joyous peals, while the steam whistles of the engines of the fire department kept up a continuous blowing.

GALVESTON, Feb. 15.—The steamer Henry A. Jones, with a cargo of four hundred and forty bales of cotton from Houston to Galveston, was destroyed by fire in Galveston bay this morning at five o'clock.

Twenty lives were lost. Among them are Captain J. J. Price, first clerk, and James B. Hogan, second clerk, both well known in New Orleans and in this city.

NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—Horace Greeley's estate is estimated at about $12 000. It is said that Samuel Sinclair owes the estate at least $8,000. There is about $100,000 bad debts and worthless securities.

The appraisers say that C. Vanderbilt, Jr., owes the estate $50,000 borrowed money. Commodore Vanderbilt has given each of Mr. Greeley's daughters $5,000, saying: "They can have what money they need at any time."

ALBANY, Feb. 15.—William Lowrey, J. Ross Stewart and Robert Hayes Mitchell, Kuklux prisoners, were released from the penitentiary to-day. There still remain fifty of such prisoners.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 17.—A scouting party of Modocs last night burned the house of Dennis Crowley. General Gillem immediately sent a detachment of troops in pursuit, but they did not succeed in overtaking the Indians.

PITTSBURG, Feb. 17.—The recent heavy rains caused a heavy rise in the Monongahela river.

At two o'clock this morning the current was so strong that the coal fleet, consisting of thirty boats and barges, broke from their fastenings at Smithfield bridge and moved off in the current. The alarm was instantly given by blowing whistles and other signals, and efforts were made to save the lives of the unfortunate men who were on board the canal fleet. Some were saved, but it is reported several were lost. One man was seen to be carried under the steamer Hercules, and another under the Andes, both floating past on the barges, and endeavored to jump on the wheels of the steamers, but fell in the water and went down.

SELMA, ALA., Feb. 17.—Through trains, after a suspension of three months, were resumed on the Alabama Central road to-day.

The Alabama river at this place is within three feet of the great July flood, and is still rising.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—The majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections will, it is understood, report in favor of a new election in Louisiana.

There will be two minority reports—one sustaining McEnery as Governor of that State and admitting McMillen as senator; the other sustaining Kellogg as Governor and admitting Ray to the Senate.

This is the present condition of the committee, although they may, before making a report, unanimously recommend a new election in Louisiana.

In the House to-day Mr. Poland, of Vermont, chairman of the Credit Mobilier committee, made a long report, reciting in detail all the facts in the evidence against each one of the members implicated. The speaker was entirely exculpated from all connection in the matter, he having declined to take any interest in the Credit Mobilier stock.

In regard to Dawes, Garfield, Kelly, Bingham and Schofield, the facts in each case were stated with more or less severe criticism on their action, which was contrasted with that of other members who were approached under like circumstances, and also with the consideration shown by the letter from the venerable Senator Bayard, of Delaware, who declined to take a pecuniary interest in any matter that might come before him as a legislator. In regard to Messrs. Ames and Brooks, their conduct was severely reprobated, and resolutions of expulsion, in reference to each of them, were reported to the House. The report having been read, further action on it was postponed till Tuesday next.

In regard to the senators involved, the report states that evidence implicating them has been sent to the Senate for its action.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Feb. 12.—The Cortes yesterday was the central point of interest, and bulletins of its proceedings were anxiously awaited by crowds of persons in all public places of the city.

The two houses assembled at a late hour in the day.

The formal message of the abdication of King Amadeus was read in each chamber separately. It opens with the statement that the King has maturely considered the question as to what course he ought to pursue with reference to the Spanish throne, and has firmly resolved upon that course.

When he accepted the crown he did so under the belief that the loyalty of the people who called him would compensate him for the inexperience which he brought to his task. He had found that herein he was deceived. If the enemies who had beset his path had been foreigners he would not have taken the course now determined upon; but they are Spaniards. By them Spain had been kept in perpetual disquiet. All his efforts to quiet her and put an end to intrigues, which were the source of her agitation, had proved unavailing. It was not enough that he had a partisan support. He had no wish to remain on the throne as the King of a party. He therefore announced his abdication on behalf of himself and his heirs.

Upon the completion of the reading the Senate and Congress met together in the chamber of the latter, and constituted themselves "the Sovereign Cortes of Spain."

Senor Rivero, president of Congress, was called to the chair, and in a brief speech he declared himself ready to answer for the preservation of order and the execution of the decrees of the sovereign power. A vote was then taken on the question of accepting, without discussion, the abdication of Amadeus, and it was accepted unanimously. A commission from the members of Congress was then appointed to draft a reply to the message, and another commission to accompany the King to the frontier. Senor Pio then proposed a resolution establishing a republic and vesting in the assembly the supreme power. The resolution was adopted by a vote of 256 yeas against 32 nays. The assembly was still in session when the foregoing was telegraphed from Madrid.

Figueras, for president of the Council, received 244 votes.

Cordoba, minister of war, 239 votes.

Pio Maigill, minister of the interior, 244 votes.

Nicolas Salmeron, minister of justice, 247 votes.

Francisco Salmeron, minister of colonies, 238 votes.

Beranger, minister of marine, 246 votes.

Castellar, minister of foreign affairs, 245 votes.

Becera, minister of public works, 233 votes.

Echegera, minister of finance, 242 votes.

The newly elected members of the government took their seats upon the ministerial bench.

LISBON, Feb. 12.—The mail steamship from Rio de Janeiro has arrived here, bringing advices from that city to the twenty-second of January. Yellow fever was raging yesterday in Rio. Number of deaths from the scourge averaged forty per day.

The census of Brazil, then completed, shows the population to be ten million, including nearly two million of slaves and two thousand five hundred aborigines.

BERNE, Feb. 12.—The Council have decided to expel Bishop Mermillad from the Canton of Geneva.

The Federal Council addressed a letter to the charge d'affaires at Rome denying, in a sharp manner, the right of the Pope to dismember the bishopries of Switzerland. The Legislature also instructed Bishop Mermillad to decide quickly whether he intends to obey the Pope or the Swiss government.

ROME, Feb. 13.—The Pope yesterday gave audience to several officers of the United States navy, now in Rome. In the course of conversation his holiness asked how he would be received in America. The officers said that the people of that country would regard his residence among them as a great honor.

VIENNA, Feb. 14.—The exhibition palace is now completed and goods are being received.

The foreign commissioners are actively engaged in arranging their respective departments.

The sections assigned to France, Egypt and Turkey are in a remarkable condition of forwardness and already attract public attention.

The commissioner for the United States is anxiously awaited, with architects to put the American section into shape for receiving goods.

MADRID, Feb. 15.—Among the measures contemplated by the ministry are the separation of Church and State and the appointment of judges for life. Bills providing for the same will soon be presented to the National Assembly.

Senor Castellar, minister of foreign affairs, in a dispatch acknowledging the receipt of congratulations of South Americans in Paris, says to them that they will have to withdraw their support from the Cuban separatists, now that the Antilles are under a republican form of government.

He also says it has been decided to await the arrival of deputies to the National Assembly from Cuba before arrangements for reforms in that island will be made. The government intends to suppress the ministry of colonies, of justice and public works, and to abolish the system of retiring on pensions officials under sixty years of age.

ROME, Feb. 17.—King Victor Emanuel visited the theater on Sunday evening, and was received by the audience with shouts of "Long live the King, Italy and Amadeus!"

The Parliamentary committee on religious corporations decided to abolish the house of heads of religious orders, but to provide for the support of the heads themselves, and other indemnification for the loss of property.

GENEVA, Feb. 17.—The Rev. Mr. Mellod, having declared to the Federal Council that he was determined to exercise the functions of vicar apostolic, despite the prohibition of the authorities, has been sent to the French frontier under escort.

American Colonization Society.

The American Colonization Society held its fifty-sixth anniversary on the evening of January 21, at the Fourth Street Presbyterian church, Washington. Judge Latrobe, of Maryland, called the meeting to order, and prayer was offered by the Rev. J. C. Smith. The president made some appropriate remarks as to the Christianizing of Africa by the freedmen of this country, since it was hardly possible to accomplish it by the white man, because the climate was so injurious. A whole nation of missionaries had been raised up upon our shores for this grand and noble purpose. Our interest in Africa has increased with the growth and prosperity of Liberia. Year by year Africa has been opened up by travelers to our view, so that we can see how much is to be accomplished to elevate this down-trodden and degraded race. Hence he felt justified in saying that this was a meeting of more than ordinary interest. Mr. Coppinger, the secretary, then read the annual report. The receipts for the past year were: Donations, $10,603.73; legacies, $16,921.45; and other sources, $5,811.98, making in all $33,337.22. Disbursed, $33,075.18, leaving a balance of $262.04.

The bark Jasper left New York, November 21, with 150 emigrants, all from Georgia, 91 of whom settled at Philadelphia, and 59 at Arthington, Liberia.—Fifty-six were communicants of the Baptist and Methodist churches. The whole number colonized since the war was 2,987, making altogether, with the 5,722 slaves captured and inducted to settle in Liberia, and 14,825 from this country, a total of 22,547 there colonized. The most of those who have gone have written satisfactory statements to the officers of the society and their friends. There are now 3,000 applications filed, 300 of whom will leave in May next. There are 552 of these from Georgia and 550 from Alabama, who are now anxious to leave their adopted for their native country. Peace and order have prevailed during the past year. The schools of Brewerville and Arlhington are flourishing, having faithful preachers, and 100 pupils in attendance. As soon as the Arthington building is finished another school will be opened. There are 38 scholars in the college grammar school, five of whom are native Africans, and ten students in the college proper. Liberia has a bright future. The commerce is growing, the English language rapidly spreading, Christian colored people are fast settling the coast and the interior, and, together with wholesome laws, schools, churches, a college, a profitable trade and genial climate, there is much to encourage.

The following officers were re-elected for the ensuing year, namely: Financial secretary and treasurer, Rev. William McLain, D. D.; traveling secretary, Rev. John Orcutt, D. D.; corresponding and recording secretary, William Coppinger, Esq.; and the executive committee, Dr. H. Lindsley, J. H. Bradley, Esq., William Gunton, Esq., Hon. P. Parker, Hon. J. B. Kerr, Dr. C. H. Nichols and Prof. Wellling, of Columbia College, District of Columbia. A committee was appointed to wait upon the government and urge the establishment of a line of steamers to Liberia.

THE sun of prosperity dwarfs intellectual life, and spiritual beauty often fades into insignificance. Like the dew and the shower, God sends affliction grievous as bidding his grace, but working for his children a far more exceeding glory.

ALL MEN have frailties, and whoever looks for a friend without imperfections will never find what he seeks. We love ourselves, notwithstanding our faults, and we ought to love our friends in like manner.

LOOKE to Christ, cleave to Christ, turne not aside from him, looke for no other Instructor to make thee wise unto salvation.—Alexander Grosse.

European Excursion.

Rev. A. B. Stark, president of Corom College, Lebanon, Tennessee, is organizing a party to visit Europe during the coming summer. Persons wishing to join the party can communicate immediately with President Stark, Lebanon, Tennessee. We give some extracts from a circular which will give our readers some idea of the time, route and expense:

For this excursion I am organizing a select party of twenty or thirty Southern ladies and gentlemen. Already about half the required number—ladies and gentlemen of the best culture and highest character—have signified their intention of joining the party. You are respectfully and earnestly invited to become a member of the party.

We will leave Nashville on Monday morning, June 9, and sail from New York on Wednesday, June 11. We will be absent eighty-four days, viz.: twenty on the ocean, fourteen in Great Britain and fifty on the continent, reaching New York on the return September 3.

I give a brief outline of the route, necessarily omitting many points of great interest. Reaching Liverpool on Saturday, June 21, we will proceed via Manchester and Derby to London, to spend our first Sunday in the world's metropolis. After some days spent in examining the wonders of London, we go on to Paris via New Haven, Dieppe and Rouen. After a sufficient stay in Paris, we go direct to Italy, through Mont Cenis tunnel, to Turin. From this point we make a general tour of Italy, visiting Genoa, Pisa, Civita Vecchia, Rome, Naples, Pompeii, Vesuvius, Florence, Bologna, Padua and Venice, besides many other less important places. From Venice by way of Trieste to Vienna, for a week at the great International Exhibition. We proceed next via Linz and Salzburg to Munich, a great center of art and education. The next thing is the Swiss tour. Passing Augsburg and Lindau, we enter the land of Tell across the Lake of Constance, to Ramskorn, Zurich and Lucerne. We next ascend the Rhigi by a wonderful railway, to spend a night among the clouds and see an Alpine sunrise. Descending, we go over the Brunig Pass to Giesbach, to see the illuminated waterfalls; one of the most beautiful sights in the world. We then visit Interlachen, Berne, Lausanne, Geneva, Neufchatel and Basle, where the Swiss tour ends. Thence to Baden-Baden, Heidelberg and Mayence. From Mayence we go, in splendid steamer, down the Rhine to Cologne, passing the finest scenery on that celebrated river, besides Bingen, Bonn, Johannisberg and other towns. From Cologne to Brussels, Antwerp, over the Channel to Harwich and back to London. From this point an excursion will be made to Cambridge, to see the great university. The next movement will be to Edinburg, visiting on the way Melrose and Abbotsford, the home of Sir Walter Scott. From Edinburg to Glasgow by Stirling, the Trossachs, Loch Katrine and Loch Lomond, a most delightful excursion. From Glasgow back to Liverpool, whence we sail homeward about the twenty-third of August.

The price for the entire trip from New York back to New York will be only $675, in United States currency, for each person. This amount pays all necessary expenses, including steamers, railways, hotels, porterage, omnibuses, guides, fees for sight-seeing, servants, etc.; also carriages to Pompeii, Melrose, Abbotsford, to the Louvre Gallery and Jardin des Plantes in Paris; Royal Gallery in Munich, and three days in Rome, under the guidance of a competent archæological lecturer; ponies for Vesuvius, and railway up the Rhigi. Traveling and hotel accommodations are first-class everywhere. I expect to get reduced rates between Nashville and New York. I will be able to give definite information on this point in due time. This trip, made in the ordinary way, would be far less satisfactory, and would cost at least $1,000.

Ladies can go in this party under my care without any other escort. As my wife will accompany me, we will be glad to take special charge of half a dozen young ladies or schoolgirls. As a means of education, this tour will be of incalculable value. Parents who cannot leave home have here an opportunity of giving their daughters the advantages of foreign travel, in a manner entirely safe and pleasant. I am informed that four millions of persons have made excursions to different parts of the world under the Messrs. Cook, and that not a single fatal accident has ever happened to any one.

Statistics of Religion.

The six New England States, with a population of 3,515,013, have but 5,421 churches, while the six Southern States upon the Atlantic, with a white population of 3,450,903, or virtually the same, have 11,567 churches; but, apart from this amazing revelation, there are other items of interesting ecclesiastical information to be gathered from the report. The population of the thirty-seven States is 38,115,641, and the total number of churches for this multitude is 62,522, with 21,395,542 sittings, leaving 16,720,099 of our people apparently unprovided for. The truth is, however, that the population of ten years and over amount to 27,809,535, which leaves but 6,503,993 of church age, so to speak, who could find no accommodation should every man, woman and ten-year old child in the Union be simultaneously moved, of a bright Sunday morning, to attend religious worship. Still, that as many as 6,503,993 persons, or about one-sixth of our entire population, have no church accommodation, is a pregnant reflection for divines. The aggregate value of church property is $81,619,780.

For the current fiscal year the expenses of the United States government, exclusive of the enormous payments of interest on the public debt, are $173,495,045.55, or about one-half of the entire value of all the church property of the Union.

Coming to particular denominations, the disciples of Wesley and Whitfield tower, in point of numbers, above all; the Baptists come next, the Presbyterians next, then the Catholics, the Christians or Campbellites, the Lutherans, the Congregationalists, the Episcopalians and the German Reformed, in the order named. The number of churches is as follows:

| Denominations. | 1850. | 1860. | 1870. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Methodist | 21,357 | 19,883 | 13,302 |
| Baptist | 14,002 | 12,150 | 18,563 |
| Presbyterian | 7,071 | 6,406 | 4,858 |
| Catholic | 1,222 | 2,550 | 1,277 |
| Christian | 1,042 | 2,068 | 1,225 |
| Lutheran | 1,276 | 1,725 | 1,231 |
| Congregational | 1,715 | 1,234 | 1,325 |
| Episcopal | 1,091 | 2,145 | 1,450 |
| German Reformed | 1,165 | 676 | 341 |
| Friends | 662 | 726 | 726 |
| Universalist | 672 | 663 | 560 |
| Unitarian | 190 | 251 | 215 |
| Mormon | 171 | 24 | 16 |
| Jewish | 152 | 77 | 26 |

The several rates of increase or decrease for the two decades are as follows:

| Denominations. | 1850-60. | 1860-70. |
|---|---|---|
| Methodist | 7.00 | 33.00 |
| Baptist | 4.47 | 46.00 |
| Presbyterian | 8.24 | 24.00 |
| Catholic | 1.00 | 49.00 |
| Christian | 0.4 | 41.00 |
| Lutheran | 1.00 | 24.00 |
| Congregational | 28.00 | 7.00 |
| Episcopal | 1.00 | 32.00 |
| German Reformed | 30.00 | 50.00 |
| Friends | | decrease. |
| Universalist | 1.25 | decrease. |
| Unitarian | 1.8 | 17.00 |
| Mormon | 1.0 | 33.00 |
| Jewish | 1.01 | 67.00 |

It will be seen that none of these denominations, except the Mormon and Unitarian, maintain in the last census decade the rate of increase shown in the one prior. The falling off in the case of the Methodists, the leading denomination in point of numbers in the country, is particularly great—as notable, in fact, as the portentous growth of Mormonism. The wealth of the leading denominations compares as follows:

| Denominations. | Churches. | Value. |
|---|---|---|
| Methodist | 21,357 | $23,854,021 |
| Catholic | 3,806 | 30,035,536 |
| Presbyterian | 7,071 | 25,265,263 |
| Baptist | 13,962 | 13,208,198 |
| Episcopal | 2,091 | 25,511,619 |
| Congregational | 2,715 | 25,000,938 |

Our Foreign Missions.

A COMPARISON.

New York city is properly considered a great field for Christian effort. Thousands are poor, ignorant, vicious, wretched and going to perdition. The fields occupied by our Arcot mission in India and our Amoy mission in China are also in great need of Christian work. Superstitious, silly, debasing and vile, rule over them. The degradation of the people is beyond description—corrupt are they, and altogether filthy. Compare, for a few moments, New York city with these districts of heathen:

Population.—New York city about 1,000,000; our Arcot field over 3,000,000; our Amoy field over 3,000,000.

Churches and Chapels.—New York city, 380; Arcot, 30; Amoy, 7.

Ordained Ministers.—New York city over 400; Arcot, 7; Amoy, 7.

Professing Christians.—New York city, 72,000; Arcot, 712; Amoy, 497.

The United States have a population of less than 50,000,000, and have over 50,000 Protestant Christian churches, and more than 50,000 ordained Protestant clergymen, and more than 3,000,000 of church-members. China has a population of 400,000,000—nearly all, according to the word of God, going to perdition—and has less than 200 ordained Protestant clergymen, less than 300 Christian churches and chapels, and less than 8,000 professing Christians.

More money is expended annually by the various churches for the maintenance of Christian institutions in New York city alone than is expended annually by all the churches of the United States in maintaining their missions to the entire heathen world, including every outlay of every kind for those missions.

The Reformed Church in America expends more in sustaining its churches and Christian work in New York city alone than in maintaining all of its missions to the heathen. The Reformed Church in America collected and expended during the financial year reported to the last General Synod, for Christian institutions at home and abroad, $1,623,709.31—reckoning the income from invested funds at $200,000; of which large amount only $61,953.26 were given by it for and expended upon our missions to the heathen.

The expenditure at home in the United States is not too large; but that upon our foreign missions is too small.—Christian Intelligencer.

LONGEVITY OF MISSIONARIES.—Dr. Jonas King has spent half a century in Greece. Dr. Hamlin thirty years in Constantinople. Of eighty-four Baptist missionaries sent to Asia since July, 1855, only three have died. Of forty-six who have gone to Burmah, not one has died in seventeen years. They do not have to undergo the same privations as formerly. Life and property are made safe by treaty. They have learned how to adapt themselves to Eastern life. They are, moreover, free from harassing anxieties.

Franklin Station, Louisiana Conference.

ITS PROSPECTS, ETC.

MR. EDITOR: After having enjoyed a most delightful visit among my numerous relatives and friends in Georgia, and having gotten to myself again the long-absent companion, we reached our new home in the delightful town of Franklin, on Thursday evening, the seventh instant.

Although it was quite late at night, we were met and conducted by Judge McKerall to the parsonage, which we found brightly illuminated, everything having been set in order by the ladies, even to the tea-table, which was quite tempting to our appetites, though we had already been served to a good supper.

Sister Saunders, one of our leading members, noted for standing always heart by the interests of the church, was waiting in the parlor to lead in the welcome. We were soon made to feel quite at home. Oh! how cheering to the new pastor and family to be thus greeted. No pains had been spared to make our home comfortable.

Bro. White, our presiding elder, was also here to greet us, and also to hold our first Quarterly Conference, which he held on the day following.

On Sunday morning I had the pleasure of being introduced to my Sabbath school. While I stood before them and heard them sing "Greeting to Our Pastor," my heart was stirred to its very depth. By the way, I must say that the Franklin Sunday school is destined to be "no a whit behind the chiefest."

The condition of the church, in every point of view, is quite encouraging. Already do I begin to feel burdened with a sense of responsibility in viewing the vast amount of material here to be developed and cultivated. The general interests of the town have been represented to me as improving; and I must say that I already feel quite sure of a happy and prosperous year. Please pray for our success. Yours truly,

AMOS W. WILLIAMS.

Mexico and Christianity.

At a missionary meeting held in Brooklyn, on the twenty-eighth of January, Rev. Dr. Riley, while not concealing the difficulties in the way, gave a very encouraging account of the religious condition of Mexico and its readiness for the reception of the truth. He said Protestantism continues to gain strength, both in the capital and in the surrounding towns. What the Protestants of Mexico want is means to employ missionaries and to purchase Bibles and tracts. Many of the highest classes are becoming Protestants. There are now, he said, fifty congregations of Protestants in the City of Mexico and its neighborhood, a printing-press, boys' and girls' school, and two large stone churches and a chapel held by Protestants—one of these churches the finest in that city, next to the grand cathedral. Ten thousand dollars are required to repair the latter for occupation. It will seat three thousand persons. The chapel and one of the churches are now used constantly for gospel preaching. Several of the congregations have adopted the title of the "Church of Jesus." No denominational name as yet has distracted this native church. Miss Rankin has been working for many years in Monterey, in connection with the society which conducts this Mexican mission. She has long directed a seminary for young ladies, and has instructed over two hundred Mexican girls. She has had associated with her for some time past Rev. Mr. Beveridge and other laborers. Another missionary has been sent to San Luis Potosi, peculiarly fitted for the work—Dr. William H. Cooper, who labored six years in Spain.

Our missionaries are emphatic in their joint testimony that, to be successful in Mexico, Christian work must be conducted apart from all American denominational names among this intensely sensitive people, so jealous of foreigners.—Christian Intelligencer.

Notice.

To the Members of the Alabama Conference:

Having made a contract with our Publishing House at Nashville for the publication of the Minutes, I forwarded copy on the third day of last January. Some delay, of the nature of which I have not been advised, has occurred in the publication; but I have no doubt that before this notice reaches you the Minutes will have been forwarded. As I did not know the postoffices of some of the preachers I ordered their packages sent to the care of the presiding elders of the districts in which such circuits were located.

The Minutes intended for the Camden district I ordered forwarded to Rev. M. E. Batt, who will please forward to the brethren and charge the cost of same to me. Any brother failing to receive a package will please notify me at once.

I LOVE TO HEAR THE STORY

I love to hear the story
Which angel-voices tell,
How once the King of glory
Came down on earth to dwell.
I am both weak and sinful,
But this I surely know:
The Lord came down to save me,
Because he loved me so.

I'm glad my blessed Savior
Was once a child like me,
To show how pure and holy
His little ones might be;
O may I try to follow
His footsteps here below,
Who never will forget me,
Because he loved me so.

To sing his love and mercy
My sweetest songs I'll raise;
And though I cannot see him,
I know he hears my praise!
For he has kindly promised
That I shall surely go
To sing among his angels,
Because he loved me so.

Report of Committee on Temperance, Louisiana Conference.

Your Committee on Temperance presents the following report to the Bishop and members of this Conference for their consideration and action. After taking a general and comprehensive view of the subject of temperance, and of the importance of the cause, we thought it best and proper first to direct your attention to the almost universal and malignant character of the evils of intemperance.

The manufacture and traffic in and use of alcoholic liquors have ever been coextensive with the progress of civilization. That public opinion and the laws of civilization should approve and protect an evil of such magnitude and malignity as results from intemperance can only be accounted for on the ground that there is so much money in it, and so much gain to be realized by it. They make it and sell it for the money that is in it, for since the days of Judas there have always been those who would do anything for money, if it were even to sell their Lord.

They drink it first because of its exhilarating effects upon their spirits; secondly, because of its paralyzing and benumbing influence upon the senses; thirdly, because it enters largely into the habit of a social, courteous and polite life, which is looked upon as popular by the public eye; and in the fourth place many drink because they know not the dangerous and deceptive character of it. These incentives are enough. With these men take it and go into every place. You may find it in every city, village and hamlet, and even at every cross-road. The effects of drunkenness are appalling and fearful to contemplate. These effects are seen in the halls of Congress, in the various legislative bodies of the land. They control to a great extent the ballot-box, and the government of the nation itself is influenced very much by the current of dissipation. The church of God in all its various branches, in its membership and ministry, has been infested by it. The evil is not only great in magnitude, extending to every extreme point, and embracing the world in its circle, but it is also malignant in its character.

It inflames and irritates the very worst passions of fallen human nature. It degrades man to the lowest depths of degradation. It corrupts the human heart to such an extent that it is odious to God and hateful to man. It breaks up the peace of families, and leaves scores of widows, and hundreds of orphan children with an inherent tendency in their nature to drunkenness, entailed on them by their drunken parents.

With this monster evil in our midst, as deceptive as satan and as alluring as art and interest combined can make it, ready to bite as a serpent and to sting as an adder, we would ask, with all the interest that the cause demands, what can be done to arrest the mighty current of evil?

In answer to this question numerous suggestions have been made.

First, it has been suggested that it should be exclusively the work of the church, and that the church of itself is all-sufficient. While we hold that the church is supreme and first to be relied upon for restraint, we are compelled to admit, by facts which are occurring every day, and with which we are all familiar, that she has been unable to keep drunkenness out of her pale. We do believe that when an evil becomes special, prevalent and malignant, as that of intemperance, there should be special and concentrated effort made to arrest it. Hence we recommend temperance societies or organizations as an efficient means of advancing the cause of temperance.

In their justification, we hold that they are no new thing. Jonadab, among the patriarchs, organized a temperance society six hundred years before the Christian era. This society, in its principles and practice, was total abstinence. It was commended by the Lord, and this society was held up to the Jewish church by the Lord as an open rebuke, for many of them were wine-libbers. The Nazarites, in the days of the apostles, pledged themselves to total abstinence, and in our judgment Paul himself belonged to this order.

In further justification of a temperance society as an efficient means of promoting the cause of temperance, we hold that the fears of some are unfounded and unjust, that their tendency is to create dangerous isms. A temperance society is similar in its character and as innocent in its tendency as a Sabbath school organization, a Bible or a missionary society. We hold that a temperance organization is the best method of securing special addresses, speeches and sermons on the subject, which are more efficient in awakening a general interest than a simple paragraph in an occasional sermon which is so often relied upon. We hold, further, that a temperance society is the best method of furnishing and distributing temperance literature, and wielding the magic power of the press. This we deem absolutely necessary in order to enlighten and educate the public mind, without which the cause can never hope to have a final triumph.

We hold, further, that any compromise in the character of the pledge, so as to admit the use of wine and the milder liquors as beverages, has been a failure, for it has been satisfactorily ascertained that in England, Prussia, France and California—wine-growing countries—drunkenness has not abated, nor has the use of alcohol been less. Therefore we recommend teetotal abstinence from all that intoxicates as the only safe method of avoiding the evil.

Your committee is glad to report that the cause of temperance is progressing in the land. There is in successful operation a national publishing house, that is daily issuing hundreds and thousands of pages of temperance literature, the production of scientific and literary men, both in Europe and America. We have constant evidence of the power of the press upon the subject. There is also a national temperance council, composed of some of the best talent of the land. These hold annual meetings for the purpose of devising the best means of prohibiting the evils of intemperance and of promoting the cause of temperance. Besides, every State in the Union has its various temperance organizations, and by their public harangues and the distribution of their literature they are educating the public mind, and hundreds and thousands are every year pledging themselves to total abstinence principles.

Notwithstanding the evil abounds, in view of what is being done we confidently hope that the time will come when a prohibitory law will be the law of the land. We also hope that there is too much pious intelligence in this nation to permit such a paltry nuisance as intemperance to go unchained, that is annually costing the nation $1,200,000,000, and of sending five hundred thousand of her citizens to premature and disgraceful graves. Therefore,

Resolved, That we will agitate the subject of temperance, and bring it before the public mind in that way and by those means which we may deem the most effective.

JOHN PIPES, Chairman.

Infant Church Membership and Salvation.

MR. EDITOR: After a close examination of the right of infants to church membership and salvation through the blood of Christ, I think we have other and higher reasons for claiming these privileges for them than the mere absence of actual transgression or any implied command. We are born into this world depraved, and this nature has to be regenerated before it can enter the paradise of God.

Now we know that the adult can be brought into the adoption of sons in Christ upon only one condition: "Repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ." But we cannot conceive of such a prerequisite in the case of infants, for they are incapable of either faith or repentance; and yet all agree that they are saved through the agency of the Holy Ghost. If, then, infants are saved through the operation of the Holy Spirit vouchsafed them in the death of Christ, at what period in life do they receive the Spirit of God savingly? Some tell us that they receive it in death. But we can see no reason why it should be deferred until death, but many why it should not be.

The work is bound to be accomplished before the dissolution of soul and body, or else the doctrine that in this life only can we obtain the remission of sins is false. If, then, they are regenerated before death, may we not ask how long before? If a minute, may it not be an hour? If an hour, may it not be a day, a week, a month, or at the very beginning of life? But if such an extension of time be not admissible, what is it in death that qualifies the heart of the infant for the reception of the Holy Ghost? It would be perfectly gratuitous to say that there were special arrangements made in the atonement to reach the case of the dying, that would not also apply to the living infant.

Let us illustrate: Here are twin infants, A. and B., born of the same parentage, partakers of the same nature, and incapable alike of sin or faith. A. dies, receives the Holy Ghost and is taken home to heaven. Now why may not B. receive the Spirit as well as A.? It is absurd to talk about death preparing the heart of A. for the Holy Spirit. Such would be salvation through death, and not through Christ.

If there is nothing in death to entitle the child to the saving influence of the Holy Ghost—and we cannot suppose for a moment that there is—how are we to account for that administration of divine justice that extends salvation to one person, or class of persons, and withholds it from another, when all things are equal?

But does not the Bible teach, when rightly understood, that all infants, irrespective of condition, receive the Holy Ghost savingly before they come to years of discretion? I think it does. Let us examine it for the real purport of circumcision. Paul tells us, Romans iv, 11, that Abraham "received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had, yet being uncircumcised." Now if circumcision was to Abraham a sign of his righteousness at the age of ninety-and-nine, what was it to Isaac at the age of eight days? Could it signify to Abraham that he was righteous, and at the same time signify to Isaac his great need of righteousness? Impossible! We cannot conceive of God instituting an ordinance attended with such ambiguity. We have as little reason to believe that Christian baptism signifies one thing to the adult and another to the infant as to suppose that circumcision was a seal of Abraham's righteousness and a sign of Isaac's want of it.

But this text is to the point, Mark x, 14: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom (or church) of God." And the comment of the Rev. Dr. Lange is quite pertinent. The learned doctor says: "The Lord welcomes the little children not as mere figures of the poor in spirit and of simple believers. The symbol is inseparably connected with the reality—the child and the believer are one. In the child-likeness there is present the typical precondition of faith—that is, a germ of susceptibility which the word of God will fructify." If this position be correct—and we cannot see how it is to be successfully contraverted—the duty of all parents and churches is apparent: bring the little ones into the church by baptism, and disciple or teach them.

Some may think it strange, if children are regenerated in infancy, that some of them do not continue to progress in divine life, and supersede the necessity of repentance and regeneration in adult age. I knew one instance of this kind. It was a lady of fine culture, a devout member of the Methodist Church, and one of the best Sunday school workers I ever saw. She told me that as far back as she had a knowledge of anything she remembers loving God. And though she had oftimes had reasons for lamenting her lukewarmness in a spiritual life, and applying to God for fresh supplies of divine grace, she had no recollection of that first influence of the Holy Spirit about which there is so much preaching and talking. She was raised by one of those devout Christian ministers that began at the cradle preparing the subject for the Master's use.

If parents and churches would do their duty, would not the instances be increased to a large and demonstrative number? But the spiritual culture of the blessed lambs of God is neglected; their little hearts are filled with malice, pride, a love of the world, and all those vices that are calculated to exclude them from the kingdom of grace and glory.

The precious plant of life, the offspring of the Holy Spirit, is made to wilt and droop, while the world is drawn over it like a mantle, to exclude the continued supplies of grace that would descend upon it from Christ, like the dewdrop upon the flower, and cause it to sparkle in the sunshine of faith and hope.

O that parents and the church were filled with that holy zeal that caused St. John to write these beautiful words: "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous." The following significant comment upon this text, by Spener, is worth our attention. He says: "Every age should diligently cultivate the virtue becoming it before others, which is especially done by each particular age applying its natural gifts to the growth of life: understanding in the case of the old, strength in the case of the young men, simplicity in the case of children.) Those who overcome satan as young men may afterward truly and fully know Christ as fathers." The command of Heubner is no less striking: "Fathers are spiritual adults, mature Christians; they have known Christ, the Son of God, from personal experience, made proof of this power, or he has been fully formed in them. The image of Christ has a feeble and tender beginning in childhood; it continues growing in youth, but does not attain perfect clearness with open face until manhood."

If these advantages are not given the church to bring children into the fold, and train them up in the service of the Lord, when shall "the earth be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea?"—Isaiah xi, 9. When shall the time come when all "shall know the Lord, from the least to the greatest?"—Hebrews viii, 11. Shall not the kingdom of our Lord subdue the kingdoms of this earth? If not, charity demands that we should pray the Lord to sound the knell of earth's existence; for this broad and beautiful world, which once reflected the moral image of God, is now peopling hell. And that system of religions ethics that carries with it indifference to or stilts itself above the "lambs of the flock" will never correct this evil. But, brethren, the work of the Lord will go on until perfected; and we have the means to accomplish this great end. Then let us, united, sing, preach and teach the little ones that they "Cannot be too young to love

That Jesus whom we preach."

The Trial of Affliction.

Many of Christ's dearest disciples, and those he loves best, are oftentimes called upon to pass through the furnace of affliction—through many severe trials and temptations. This seems to be necessary, in a great degree, for our spiritual welfare here, and our eternal happiness and peace hereafter. Hence we are exhorted to think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try us, but we are to rejoice, inasmuch as we are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed we may be glad also with exceeding joy. Let us, then, go forward in the discharge of duty with a cheerful heart, having the confident assurance that all things work together for good to them that love and serve God, and encouraged with the precious promise:

"When through fiery trials thy pathway shall lie,
My grace all-sufficient shall be thy supply.
The flame shall not hurt thee; I only design
Thy dross to consume and thy gold to refine."

And while in affliction, while enduring these trials and temptations, let us improve them to the best advantage. Then shall we find that these light afflictions, which are but for a moment, work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Take comfort, then, poor tempest-tossed soul. Though thou art called upon to pass through these severe trials and calamities, yet let this thing console thee: thou art not on the enemy's side, but art still the object of God's love and care. And remember that whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. Take comfort, then. Hope thou in God, and go on thy way rejoicing in hope of the glory of a blessed immortality and a crown of life, which the Lord has promised to them that love him.

To Conference and Back.

MR. EDITOR: On the first day of the new year we left home to attend the twenty-seventh session of the Louisiana Annual Conference, to be held at New Orleans. Having no railroad connection with the city, and only poor and uncertain navigation in Red river, the difficulties in getting there were increased. The first day's travel of forty miles on horseback brought us to Shreveport. Here we hoped to get a boat, at least of small size, but soon found that our hopes were disappointed.

We had left to us the alternative of going through Texas, via Galveston, or east by Vicksburg and Jackson, Mississippi. For a day we consulted everybody and ourselves as to the better way, and finally decided in favor of the eastern route.

January 3.—We took the stage for Monroe, Louisiana, one hundred and ten miles distant. Forty miles' travel, over a road as bad as you could well imagine, brought us to Minden at eight P. M. We got our supper at the hotel—price, seventy cents—and got the worth of our money, for we were hungry. We met Bro. S., who gave us a cordial welcome to his prophet's room, with a promise that we should have a cup of coffee next morning, as we had to travel ten miles before breakfast. Those who know our weakness understand that a cup of coffee goes a long way in our bill of fare; so we went and spent a pleasant evening. * * * *

January 4.—It rained, it poured, the stage was open and rickety, and it was with difficulty that we kept from getting soaked. To add to our trouble, our carpet-sack and clothes were safe, as we thought, under the seat. Wife had taken much pains in doing up our clothes, that we might appear as well as any of the preachers when we got to Conference. But when we came to examine it it had been well steeped in a puddle of water; and our clothes—oh, my! what a mess! A drive of forty-five miles on a cold, rainy day, over a miserable road, high waters, with rickety old stage-coach, is anything but comfortable; but this day was not without an incident. In changing horses, on one occasion, four grays were hitched to the stage. We said to the driver: "You are gone up now—four grays and a preacher." Soon after, tugging along in a terrible muddy place, a crash was heard—a single-tree was broken and all was stopped, and passengers turned out in the mud and rain. The driver, in his droll way, said: "Parson, here it is!" Eight P. M. brought us to Vienna, the place of stopping for the night. Here two stages met with their contents—men, women and children, and two blooded dogs. Here, we think, was the coldest night, the least fire, and the coldest, wettest crowd that we ever remember to have seen where accommodations were pretended. Here too, we believe, we heard more swearing, more bitter oaths, more new-coined and vulgar oaths, than we ever remember to have heard before in the same length of time. On leaving the place, as Dr. Pierce would express it, we felt like hell had spit on us.

January 5.—After another dreary day's staging we got to Monroe, Louisiana, at six P. M. Here the stage line ends, and here we met with several preachers on their way to Conference. What a relief! We felt like a traveler on a rail-car, coming from a dismal tunnel, when the light breaks upon him.

January 6.—We took the cars for Vicksburg. After a pleasant day's travel, taking on another preacher ever and anon, we got there at five P. M., and after a few jerks and frights with a haulky team in an omnibus we all found ourselves safe at the Prentis House. Soon supper was announced by a song, and the bill of fare was sung, when all at once we woke up to the fact that our host was the same Macmacken of whom we had heard so many pleasant anecdotes. It is said of him, when keeping hotel at Jackson, Mississippi, the seat of government, on being asked why he sung his bill of fare in preference to having it printed, he said that the members of the Legislature put up with him and he had to do it for their accommodation, for there were so many of them that could not read. Hotel-keepers at seats of government, in these times, may get an idea. The best of all, the song and the supper, with the lucident thrown in, cost us nothing but our good wishes for our host and kind remembrances.

After supper we took the cars for Jackson, Mississippi. While awaiting the pleasure of the conductor at the depot, a young man came staggering in, too drunk to disguise it, whom we recognized as one raised by a tender, loving aunt, in the lap of religion and in the shade of the church. Having no children of her own, her affection for him was undivided. But he has fallen by the demon, whisky. Why the hopes of so pious a heart should be thus crushed is hard to divine. That young man has our prayers and sympathies.

January 7.—At twelve o'clock A. M. we got to New Orleans, and found a home, for the time being, with the genial family of Dr. L. Parker.

After a session of Conference for six days, which was harmonious and quiet, we adjourned on Monday, the thirteenth, at four P. M. We attended the inauguration of Governor McEnery. But when we begin to talk about our government it savors to us much of children's play. The idea of the solemn inauguration of two governors on the same day and at the same hour! There is a radical wrong somewhere.

We left for home on Tuesday, the fourteenth. Stopped a day in Baton Rouge, visited the State University, and found the president gloomy as to his prospects. He depends on the State bonds for support, but they are worthless in the present confusion. Prof. Magruder took a half hour from recitation to talk with us, and said that it was well spent; but we were the obliged party. St. Joseph Institute, an adventure of two young men, graduates of the State University, numbers some sixty pupils. Hope it will be a success.

January 17.—We left Baton Rouge on the steamer Texas, and got to Shreveport on Wednesday, the twenty-second, at four A. M. We found Mac entirely recovered from the epizooty and in good condition. Thanks to our good friend, Bro. R., for it. A change from a steamboat to a horseback ride was refreshing to us, and forty miles of travel brought us home again.

Just three weeks gone! Cash paid out for expenses to Conference and back, $58.70. But who wants to know that! With gratitude for a gracious providence, we are glad that we are at home again. J. P.

Woman's Mission.

We hear a great deal now-a-days about "woman's mission," particularly from the class of females rejoicing in the enviable (?) distinction of "advocates for woman's rights." Well, what is woman's mission? I think our inquiry would be doomed to fatal oblivion were we to depend upon those individuals; so we will ask ourselves the question: What is woman's mission?

Some answer, "The whole aim and end of woman's life is marriage," or, in fashionable parlance, a brilliant match. Others: "To perform some grand, noble work, to attain which I must neglect the commonplace, trivial drudgeries of every-day life to foster that elevation of thought and action requisite for so high an aim." Another says: "To perfect my spiritual life." So, selfishly absorbed in its cultivation, she snubs everybody she meets, shutting herself and capabilities for doing good from the world's contaminating influence.

I am not pleased with your answers, O my sisters! Do you, whose solemn is the magic circlet of gold, ever think of making yourself worthy of wearing with true dignity that little shining signet which solemnly binds you "till death do us part?" And in plunging into the gay whirl of fashionable life are you fitting yourself to adorn the hearth-stone? Will the giddy votary, the butterfly of fashion, be a fitest one to lead you gently toward a higher development, to help you bear patiently the ills of life?

And you, lofty dreamer, know you not that the noble aim is only attained by the cheerful use of the little, humble stepping-stones? Do you ever think how much potent influence the grain of sand possesses?

And you who would strive for spiritual perfection—the grandest aim this side of eternity—how can you make any progress while you neglect its grand principle—self-denying, practical labor in the cause of Christ—that charity which, hiding a multitude of sins, endeavors to find the best side of humanity, instead of picking out the flaws.

Oh! how much beauty and consistency in those silent lives, who cheerfully, lovingly perform a routine of homely duties, the monotony varied by no smile of approbation—of silent heroisms which would shame some of the heroes whom the world load with praises, grasping every opportunity, however trivial, for doing good, exerting a gentle influence which, like the pebbles, widen away into the distance when the cause has long been forgotten, while their hearts yearn toward a wide, unfettered field of action—a more potent influence. Steadily, patiently, from the webs of confusion, temptation, suffering, they are working out life's problem, till, standing out in all its purity and loveliness, woman's mission will appear clear, glowing in letters of fire: "Working steadfastly, contentedly in the sphere God has placed thee in—this is thy mission, O woman!"

The Model Family.

The model family is an orderly family. "Order is heaven's first law." To have order there must be system, there must be rules and regulations. The laws of the family should not be too stringent nor too flexible. There should be a place for everything and everything in its place—a time for everything and everything in its time—a way for everything and everything in its way. "Let all things be done decently and in order."

The model family is a polite family. They need not study Chesterfield; but they must learn the manners of common sense and good breeding. The members should treat each other as gentlemen and ladies. "What?" should not be used for "sir?" or "ma'am?" and "yes" and "no" should be followed with "sir" or "ma'am."

The model family is an agreeable family. In any family where there is individuality, spirit and independence, there will be differences; but they should not be permitted to grow into disagreements. "For where envying and strife is there is confusion, and every evil work."

The model family is an industrious family. Rich or poor, every one is bound to be busy in some good work. Manual labor or mental toil, or both, is a binding obligation. The diligent parents will bring up their children to honest industry. "Why stand ye all the day idle?" "We commanded you that if any man would not work, neither should he eat."

The model family is a cleanly family. Tidiness, neatness, cleanliness, is amiable. The cleanliness must respect the house, the furniture, the crockery, the person. "Be clean and change your garments."—Gen. xxxv, 2. "Let them wash their clothes."—Ex. x, 10. Ceremonial, but founded on the literal.

The model family is a cheerful family. At home there ought to be more sunshine than shadow. Books and papers are funds of enjoyment, as well as information and profit, and, first of all, the good book and religious paper. "A merry heart doeth good like a medicine."

The model family is a pious family. A Christian home is, next to the sanctuary, the place where God records his name and where he delights to dwell. "It shall be well with them that fear God."

The model family, in a word, is a family where love is the ruling spirit—love to God, love to each other, love to man.—Christian Instructor.

OBITUARIES.

WILLIAM LLOYD, the subject of this memoir, was born in the neighborhood of Red Lick church, Jefferson county, Mississippi, December 2, 1810, and died, at his home in Copiah county, Mississippi, January 21, 1873.

Bro. Lloyd had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for some years, but never made an open profession of religion. In his last illness he was peacefully tranquil and resigned to death. No one doubted more to support the church and the ministry; but he felt that this would not secure for him life and salvation in a dying hour. The loss of two of his sons grieved him to his heart, and he felt that it was too much to bear, but in a dying hour he counted all things but loss for the knowledge of Christ Jesus, his Savior. The Bunkerton church, of which he was a member, has lost one of her best supporters. The workmen die, but still the work goes on. God will take care of his church and his cause by raising up another to take his place. Let the church be more faithful.

C. T. F.

AT THE first Quarterly Conference of Jackson circuit, Selma district, held at Grove Hill, January 25, 1873, the following preamble and resolutions were offered:

WHEREAS, It has pleased almighty God to remove from our midst our beloved brother, DANIEL McLEOUD, in his fifty-third year;

AND WHEREAS, Our Quarterly Conference has sustained great loss by the removal of one of our official members; therefore,

Resolved, That this Quarterly Conference appoint a committee of three of its members to prepare a suitable obituary for publication in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Died, at his residence near Grove Hill, Clarke county, Alabama, on the eighteenth of January, 1873, Daniel McLeoud, in his fifty-third year. The subject of this memoir was born in the State of Georgia, October, 1810. Many years ago he emigrated to the State of Alabama, and for several years previous to his death had been a citizen of Clarke county. In 1837 he attached himself to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and soon afterward embraced religion, from which time his walk and conversation was that of a Christian in whom there was no guile. Bro. McLeoud was a man of great firmness and unflinching integrity in all things, both great and small; and in nothing did his firmness and integrity stand out in bolder relief than that of his religion. He loved the church, and made it a matter of conscience to attend the services of the sanctuary. His pastor will miss his presence at his prayers, for he was an attentive, appreciative hearer of the word. Large-hearted and liberal, he dispensed a generous hospitality, and was ready to contribute to the relief of the distressed. In his heart he cherished supreme love to God and universal love to human kind. This love he exemplified in his life by seeking to adorn the doctrine of God, his Savior, in all things. His mind was clear and vigorous. In the social circle he was pleasant, elegant and entertaining. In domestic life he was active, industrious and energetic, even beyond his strength. His home was his little earthly paradise, over which he ruled and governed with honor to himself and to the delight of others. There his elastic step, busy hands, cheerful tones and sunny smiles ministered to the pleasure and profit of wife, children and guest. He was a true friend, a kind neighbor, an affectionate brother, a devoted husband and a self-sacrificing father. Bro. McLeoud's voice was rarely ever heard in the church or her councils; still his seat was seldom vacant, and his duty as a steward neglected. He was a man who did not look upon Christianity as consisting in an outward show, in word or in forms, but in deeds. But he has left us. His seat is now vacant in the church and at his hospitable fireside; and now while a widow and children mourn a husband and father gone, the church a member taken away, there are many others with whom he held sweet counsel who are now sad because they can no more walk and talk with him. His friends and relations mourn not as those who have no hope, for they know he is not dead.

"But dropped the mortal here,
And winged his flight to a brighter sphere."

It was enough to make hearts beat with a strong pulsation, and many eyes to swim in tears, as they listened to the sobs and groans of broken-hearted ones.

"And surely it is no sin, those tears they shed—
For even Jesus wept over Lazarus dead!"

HOW TO BREAK OFF BAD HABITS. Understand the reason, and all the reasons, why the habit is injurious. Study the subject till there is no lingering doubt in your mind. Avoid the places, the persons and the thoughts that lead to the temptation. Frequent the places, associate with the persons, indulge the thoughts that lead away from temptation. Keep busy; idleness is the strength of bad habits. Do not give up the struggle when you have broken your resolution once, twice, a thousand times. That only shows how much need there is for you to strive. When you have broken your resolution just think the matter over, and endeavor to understand why it is you failed, so that you may be on your guard against a recurrence of the same circumstances. Do not think it an easy thing that you have undertaken. It is folly to expect to break off a habit in a day which may have been gathering strength in you for years.—Pittsburg Prompter.

IN GOD'S great plan there is nothing small or trivial; the humblest life cost the death of the Son of God. Does it not throw a vail of sanctity around the poorest and most unworthy when we think of the ransom paid for such a life?

THE love of Christ brings us to the Bible. The love of the Bible brings us to Christ.

GO AND LABOR.

Waken, sleepers, for the sunlight
Flecks with gold the shining blue,
And the labor-hour is waiting
With a nation's work to do;
Wake and listen for your mission,
On the earth is toil begun,
Rouse to action, hence nor linger,
Till the prize ye would is won.
Haste, oh! haste, the world glances over;
Say, then, if 'tis time to sleep
Ere the day fades, and the shadows
Over the mountain-summits creep.

Over there contending armies
Gather now in fierce array;
From the realms of Light and Darkness,
Truth and Error meet to-day.
See, oh! see the ranks are filling
On the side of death and sin;
Long and fierce must be the conflict,
Ere the Right at last shall win.
Will you join the Right? Oh! hasten.
Hark! the Captain calls for you,
For, alas! the valiant-hearted
Are on the side of Truth are few.

There, the ripened grain abundant,
Bends above the fertile plain,
And the Master's voice is calling:
"Laborers, gather in thy grain."
Here and there a sturdy reaper
Thrusts his sickle in the grain;
But the Master still is calling:
"Shall he call for you in vain?"
Shall the wasting sheaves, ungarnered,
Lie among the clumps of even,
When you might have borne them upward
To the granary of Heaven?

You who have no heart for conflict,
And no strength to bind the sheaves,
See the vineyard over yonder,
With its clusters fading leaves;
There the Lord is standing, waiting,
Waiting, it may be, for you,
Hear you not his soft tones saying:
"Here is work for you to do?"
Pride grapes, in gleaming pigmposs,
Hang from every drooping vine;
You might gather these and crush them
Into sacramental wine.

"It matters not what portion
Of the Master's work may fall
To this laborer or the other,
But he lets a place for all.
Ever did a sorrowing sinner
Fall before the mercy-seat,
There were uttered words of pardon,
But were added deep and sweet:
Toil and labor till the starlight
Glitters in the heeding blue;
Will help thee in thy toiling;
I have work for thee to do."

Faith-Talent Wanting Education for the Pulpit.

BY HORACE BUSHNELL, D. D.

I read an article in the Advance with much satisfaction, a few days since, suggesting a new professorship or lectureship on Christian experience in our theological seminaries. The article was written with much thoughtfulness and evinced a very just comprehension of the subject. Will you now second the proposal?

There is abundance of complaint in our Christian public, including both ministers and people, that our theological seminaries do not, for some reason, turn out preachers duly qualified. Their preparation, some-how, does not reach the mark. They have something of theological learning in all the branches. The marks of the school are quite sufficiently distinct. Sometimes they are even a little too ambitiously forward in the matter of style. They have, in short, obtained kind of culture begun that is well enough; but they disappoint expectation, in the fact that they fail to carry impression. After all they have only learned, as yet, how not to do it. They whir on the surface like bullets, and are pitched into the ground like bullets that do not penetrate. They counterfeit energy, and it is a counterfeit. They raise a forced heat, which is strangely cold. Saying nothing of the many who are tight-laced, full of worldly notions, or who close upon the confines of a doubtful morality, for which they, of course, and not their teachers, are responsible, there is a marvelous lack of other world-power in their demonstrations. Seeing all this, the good people begin to lose their patience, and fall back on the apparatus of the ordinary life, and finding it as their fathers did that a very expensive machinery does very poor work. Why, the true thing now in the young preacher (how often do we hear it) is to forget all that he has learned, and make a new beginning at first principles for himself. He either must do this or settle into utter nihility. Where he just been taught how to do; had some streak of really living idea or touch of divine life in the gospel been let in as a gleam upon him that would stay, it is judged, would grow, and become the fructifying power of an efficient and glad ministry.

Now, as far as this kind of stricture may fall upon the professors, I do not feel called to justify it. They are personal, and, of course have their faults; but their chief fault is that they do with only too much absorption the work that is given them to do. They are appointed nominally as teachers of Christian truth, but chiefly to handle it for and before the understanding; to work out the grammar and exegesis, the metaphysics and dogmatics, ranging always in the field of cognitions, and in the really transcendent matter given to faith. And the result is that they are carried down, as by gravity, in the stress of their engagement, to be occupied almost wholly with the school-work they are doing for the understanding; when, of course, they let the faiths and intuitions go. They probably quite forget how poor a heathen the understanding is, and how little capable it is of containing the real matter of religion, in the transcendent verities of God and his truth. Not being put upon the matter of teaching religious experience—which their pupils are to know far themselves—they are all the while just coasting experience along its shores, and fishing in what is counted the deep soundings; but they do not often take their pupils to the outside of knowledge, where there are no soundings and no shores, to practice them in sailing by magnet and celestial observation in that moral world. Of course they have faith to say of faith, for they believe in faith; but their school-problem is to develop the understanding view of things, and the drumming of debate and lecture and lesson on the cognition side of the gospel gives it such eminence over the faith side that it settles very much into a form of cognition, and ceases really to have much distinct significance.

To correct this evil, or make up the deficiency, it is not quite enough, it seems to me, to urge some new attention to religious experience. The danger is that, under that so entirely practical form, the new lectureship, if a new lectureship were instituted, might not get body enough in the respect of the school to go abreast of the more pretensive ranges opened for the understanding. Whatever might be done for a better and higher experience would be well, and without that nothing will be well; but the effort should begin, it seems to me, a little way back at another point. Thus one may look upon the faith-power in man as a kind of talent, the highest that he has, and one that above all others is the prophet's and preacher's talent. It is that which, as a kind of sixth sense, reports the inner verities—perceives them, takes their flavors, and becomes enlarged by their dimensions. It is the opening of this gate that lets in all the inspirations, revelations, unctions, gifts, and so, in a very peculiar sense, all the higher endowments of power. The understanding, as related to this faith-talent, is a purveyor only, in the preparation of facts and questions; and what we call the reason has its highest function as a veto-power to stop off faith from what might be credulity or extravagance. But the inner sense of God and Christ and eternity and heavenly truth is not in them; faith only keeps this field. Hence the miserable work that has been made of inspiration, when it has been had not at all as in the life, but as a theologic factor only and sine qua non of the infallible in a book. And who has ever known God by just looking round with his eyes, sending out no faith-sense, as in prayer, to behold him outside of horizons and above all heights? What ear have we but faith that can hear his whispers? And who is Christ, the Life, the Ever-living Son of the Father, when he is not found by the immediate discovery of faith, but is only tabled, as it were, for dissection in the school? Oh! there is nothing so dreadful as this ding of exposition to the head, which gets no further scope and height from the inwardly discerning grace of faith.

Here, then, is the place at which we may better propose to begin. It is, in fact, the same thing as a new undertaking for religious experience; only we phrase it in a way to make it more impressively a matter for the school. For what can be a greater mistake than to raise a form of culture for religion which proposes wholly to ignore the summit faculty of religion. And it is all the more unreasonable that this highest of all faculties is closed up in the world by sin, and is very nearly closed up in all decayed believers, and such as have, it for their habit to carry the whole administration of religion and settle all its questions by their head. And, if it comes to this in our schools that they are practically engaged to preoccupy the brain, and let the believing nature go, what but a dismal and dry clatter must our preaching finally become? Nay, worse than that, it will be infidelity at last.

By these brief suggestions I do not pretend to have covered the whole ground of the subject. One very great difficulty will be to get a lecturer for such a work who is duly qualified. The man for any and all professorships would more easily be found. Then it is a question for how long a time he should be chosen, and whether, if chosen for permanence, he will not practically die of routine. The questions are many, and I must leave them for the present.—Independent.

A Good Subject Well Handled.

BY REV. A. G. VERMILYE, D. D.

"The father to the children shall make known thy truth."

The subject here is God's "truth" or faithfulness to his promises—to the expectations he has raised as to his actions. The Bible has raised our expectations very high about God and what he will do concerning his creatures. The New Testament especially is a great budget of promises. Our hopes take hold of these promises; and the anchor of our security is his faithfulness to them. If divine power be not supplemented by divine faithfulness, that very power, which now upholds, may peradventure prove our deadliest enemy—deadly as the locomotive when it leaps from the track, and ends the hopeful journey by wrecking the train and crushing the bones. What if God should ever so swerve from his "truth" and promises!

The proof of his truth, and the only proof possible, is experience. The argument is cumulative, increasing in solidity and bulk as time rolls. What the patriarchs experienced of it, and inspiration has recorded; David's psalms, so rich in selections from the diary of his own life; what we ourselves can add, of instances as numerous as our days—all these are elementary parts of that "great cloud of witnesses," the glow and magnificence of whose testimony shall ultimately fill all heaven with the glory of his faithfulness. Actions, the old adage says, speak louder than words. And, judged by this test, every life proves him greater than our faith—too great to break the least of his promises. Every life, however humble, has some links of evidence to add to the chain that makes us believe, lovingly, in God. So I have read of a poor woman whose Bible was plentifully marked in the margin with the letters T and P, which she explained by saying: "These promises I have tried and proved, and I know them to be true." Let that Bible go down to her children; and amid the trials of after years, what comfort may they not get from these promises, tested in the crucible, and attested by a mother's hand to be pure gold!

"The father to the children shall make known." No firmament sparkles with brighter proofs of the divine faithfulness than that little world of which fathers and mothers are the observers. Luther thought it a great miracle when he could see no pillars or props on which the stars and the sky and the clouds rested, and yet they did not fall. So it was. But look at a family of children—growing up, amid what dangers! What twitterings, alarms, escapes, are the portion of every nest; from that of the sparrow in some tuft of grass, with feeding cattle around, up to the human home! How often the hoof of calamity has trodden just by, and how frightfully loud and near has been the monster's breathing! But it passed by an hand-breadth; by what instinct, or thought of pity, or rather—has it not been—by what an intervention of divine faithfulness? The covering hand of omnipotence, the omnipresent Father's, was there. These things also are miracles, if you please; but miracles of which a father can tell his children a great many. And how important that he should do so! In these days we send our children to the Sabbath school for pretty much all they learn about God. The Sabbath school book takes the place of the father's or mother's telling. And yet the latter would probably be the best-written story—written deepest upon the heart and memory. What echoes come back to us most sweetly from the far-off scenes of our youth? Which of the impressions then chiseled in the soft clay of our minds has time passed the most lightly over, and done the least toward effacing? What one of our instructors gave us our best lifehints? Does not every one of us carry about in some sacred pocket of his memory a little book, with this preface, "My good old father or mother used to say," and refer to it often? The best corrective to the skepticism that gets into so many young minds is here. The lessons of experience are unanswerable; and when they drop from the revered lips of a father or mother they have the value of pearls, that one looks at often and carefully guards. I know a lawyer of a skeptical turn, whose kicklings and fightings against the truth had never yet enabled him to break entirely away from his mother's faith. Though long dead, she holds and will hold him till he dies. And what more beautiful use can the parental relation, especially in advancing years, be put to than to utter the wise lessons of experience as the children need them? Is it not the best teacher? Can they learn the story of the divine faithfulness, as these witnesses can tell it, from any other source? When, then, the children come to them bearing the burdens that have befallen them in life, is it not reward enough for all that they themselves may have gone through to be able to say: "I will tell you how it happened to me, and how faithful the Lord was to his promises." Such words, from such lips, shall be as stern-lights over the rail to guide them in difficult and tortuous passages. And the parent himself, when much of him is old and decaying, shall, like the banyan-tree, be the originator and center of new growths of experiences, to the glory of God's truth from generation to generation.—Christian Intelligencer.

The Miseries of Self-Importance.

Observe how self-importance makes a man moody and unhappy. He who is always thinking of his own excellences renders himself thereby unfit to enjoy the good of others, and is prone to imagine that every token of affection given to another is an insult offered to himself. Hence he is touchy, sensitive, irritable and envious. He takes offense when none is meant, and even when those around him are not thinking of him at all he interprets their conduct as if it were studiously discourteous, and goes through the world smarting from wounds which have sprung not so much from neglect of others as from his own overweening self-conceit.

There is no surer way to make ourselves miserable than to think of ourselves more highly than we ought to think. It isolates us from all about us. It cuts us off alike from human sympathy and divine assistance. It makes us very Ishmaels, with our hands against every man and every man's hands apparently against us. It gives a jaundiced hue to the behavior of those who, so far from meaning to do evil to us, have our best interests at heart, and love us with self-sacrificing affection. The man who has a wound about him, no matter where it may be, feels it to be always in his way. Let him do what he will, or go where he may, he cannot move himself but he is conscious of its pain. In like manner he who has this feeling of self-importance is continually smarting. Somebody has always been slighting him. He is constantly complaining of having been insulted, and when honor is given to another he feels nothing but that he has been overlooked. Thus he shuts himself out from every festival, and mopes most of all when others are merry. May God deliver us from this idolatry of self, on whose altar all true nobleness and real happiness are completely immolated.—Rev. W. M. Taylor.

EFFECT OF GOOD READING.—A correspondent of the New York Observer says: "The pleasure of listening to a good reader was never better illustrated than by a little ten-year-old girl of our acquaintance, a few Sabbaths ago. The circumstances of the household were such as to render it necessary for her to be sent alone to church. That day the theme of the discourse was the heavenly city. It was distinctly and beautifully read, and when the child returned home she said: 'Father, did you ever read the twenty-first chapter of Revelation, in the Bible?' 'Certainly,' was the reply. 'But did you ever read it aloud to us here at home?' 'I think so,' he answered. 'Well, father, I don't think you ever did; for Mr. F., the minister, read it in church to-day, and it was just as if he had taken a pencil and paper and pictured it right out before us.'"

ONCE A WEEK, speaking of a Eucalyptus, says: "The hollow trunk was sufficiently large to admit three riders, with an additional pack-horse, entering and turning around in it without dismounting." This tree is reported to have been four hundred feet in height.

FAITH is the eye of the soul, and the Holy Spirit's influence is the light by which it sees.

Practical Preaching.

It would be the greatest reform that could be made in the Christian church at the present moment if our popular preachers were to give us fewer sermons, and when they did preach, take care, like St. Paul in his epistles, to have some distinct, practical point to speak to. For the difficulty of Christian as of all ethics, lies not in the general rules, but in the special application of the rules; and vague condemnations of sin, however severe, and commendations of holiness, however fervid, will have little effect if people are not to be made to understand distinctly what those phrases so awfully sounded forth on Sunday are meant to signify on Monday. The dignity of the pulpit, I suspect, like the dignity of history, has often made it dull; certain it is, that whether from a false sense of dignity, or from a religious zeal without ethical depth, or from ignorance of those affairs to which ethical maxims must be applied, or from fear to offend those whose support is thought necessary, the ministrations of the Christian pulpit lose not a little of their efficiency from dealing more in the generalities of sin and holiness than in the special vices and virtues, and from yielding to the easy temptation of expatiating on scholastic subtleties or ecclesiastical crotchets, instead of unravelling the perplexities of social practice, or unmasking the disguises of individual character.—Many things are left to be handled lightly by the novel-writer, which with much more effect might have been handled seriously in the pulpit; and, in fact, I have found not a few excellent sermons in novels, which I should have sought for in vain in our pulpits; but the misfortune is that people read novels mainly to be amused, and will see the living portrait of their own follies painted in the firmest lines, and with the most glowing colors, without making the slightest attempt to amend their faults. But of this enough. One thing is certain, that no amount of faith, no amount of preaching, and no amount of prayer, can be taken as a true measure of the genuine Christianity of any country, unless the faith professed shall be found to be permeating every form of social life, and elevating every trait of individual character. To any one who wishes to see what real Christianity can do for a district in the person of a truly evangelic and wise man, I recommend the perusal of the life of the Rev. John Frederick Oberlin, who in the latter half of the last century was, during the course of a long life, pastor of the mountain district of the Ban de la Roche, in Alsace. This remarkable man was not content with the common ministerial routine of preaching and praying; he saw that, in the circumstances in which he was placed, nothing was to be done by mere talk; so with pickax in hand he set himself to make roads; he became the forester of his parishioners, and planted trees; their schoolmaster, and built them schools; their architect, and reformed their cottages; their deacon, and taught them trades; their professor, and lectured to them on science; their physician, and taught them to live according to the laws of health. Thus the faith which he professed turned a neglected parish in a few years into a perfect museum of all good works, of which a religion of the purest love was the soul; and the unobtrusive Christian worker, who of this wilderness made a garden, was perhaps the greatest man in France at a time when the thunders of Napoleon were shaking the world from west to east, while his fame had scarcely traveled beyond the bleatings of the sheep of his own parish.—John Stuart Blackie.

TELL THE STORY IN ORDER.—In a private party, one evening, at which the late Andrew Fuller was present, the conversation turned upon the subject of preaching, when one of the party said preaching without notes was the hardest work in the world. Mr. Fuller said it was easy enough if they went to work in the right way. "Now," he said, "if I was told to tell my hired girl to go to the store and get some sugar and blue, some coffee and starch, some cakes, some soap and almonds, some candles and spice, some nuts and some tea, some potash and butter, she would say: 'Oh, dear sir, I can never think of all that.' Well, look here, Betty, you know to-morrow your mistress is going to have a large wash, and she will want some blue and soap, some candles and potash; the next day she will have company, and will want some tea and coffee, sugar, spice, nuts, cakes, butter and almonds.

"'Thank you, sir; now I can think of them all.' So it is in preaching with good arrangement."

A NOVEL CURE.—An inveterate drunkard once asked a Quaker whether he knew of a method whereby he could cure himself of his dominant vice. "Friend," answered Broadbrim, "it is as easy as keeping thy hand open." "How can that be?" said the drunkard; "every man can keep his hand open; but as to abstaining from liquor, that's quite a different thing." "I will tell thee, friend," quoth the Quaker. "When thee has gotten a glass of gin in thy hand, and before thee dost raise the tempting liquor to thy lips, open thy hand—and keep it open. Thee breakest the glass, but thee breakest not the laws of sobriety."

LIFE has been called a warfare. Blessed, then, is the periodical armistice of the Sabbath. Blessed not merely as a day of rest, but also as a day of retrospection. It is only in the pauses of the fight that we can see how the battle is going.

SIR CHARLES LYELL declares that the entire continent of North America will be washed away into the ocean in four and a half million years. And yet the people take an interest in real estate!

REMEMBER how many have stood before God and man as surely as thou dost, and yet have fallen and have been overthrown horribly.—John Bradford.

Religious Intelligence.

THERE ARE $2,000,000 worth of churches now being built in New York city.

THE Congregationalists of New York and Brooklyn have just organized a church extension movement for that latitude.

REV. JOHN STOCK SAYS, in a letter to the Christian Era, that the professors in all the English Baptist colleges are open communion, and their pupils are trained in sympathy with them.

THE women of the Episcopal churches in New York have organized under the name of "Niobrara League," in honor and aid of the new Episcopal Indian mission diocese of that name.

THE New Connection Methodist mission in China has suffered great loss by the death of Li Chun Tsin, a native convert of ability, who has studied medicine, and was intending to practice as a medical missionary.

REV. R. M. PATTERSON'S historical sketch of Presbyterianism in Philadelphia claims that, since 1687, this body has grown to 114 churches, 133 ministers, 30,301 communicants, and over 31,490 Sunday school members.

THE American Bible Society have just made the Dacotah Indians happy over the Bible printed in their language; have granted funds to print the Old Testament in the Mandarin colloquial, and also to print Mark's gospel in Japanese. They are about printing Ezekiel and Proverbs in the Zulu language.

INDIA.—The following are the statistics of the Christian missions in India within the Ganges. The numbers are those who have publicly renounced heathenism and embraced Christianity; but all are not yet members of the church. Bengal, 52,000; N. W. Provinces, 7,491; Oudh, 628; Punjab, 1,782; Central India, 1,020; Madras, 141,703; Bombay 4,173. Total, 211,497. Surely God has wrought great things in India.

FIJI.—The Fiji Times says that a missionary, about leaving for home after eleven years of labor, is addressed at a public meeting by the chief justice and the American consul, and the former said that the missionaries had laid the foundation of a kingdom. The people gave the departing missionary a purse of $500. Well done, Fiji, which a few years since was in the lowest state of heathenism—a race of cannibals. Does it pay to send missionaries to the heathen?

THE Wesleyan missionaries in the West Indies number ninety, of whom one-third are natives, many of them very efficient and self-sacrificing men. One of their number, who has recently died, Edward Frazer, of Jamaica, a man of rare mental and spiritual gifts, being anxious to build a chapel and mission-house, obtained with great difficulty the stone and wood requisite, and then sold his library, the accumulation of forty years, that he might have means to complete the building.

A LETTER FROM ROME in the Paris Temps states that there are now twelve Protestant places of worship of a temporary character in the city, where addresses and sermons are given by Evangelical and Methodist ministers almost every night. Some of these places of worship are very plain and unpretending. One near the Apollo Theater consists merely of a shop and a back room, the walls of which have been whitewashed and hung with placards containing texts of Scripture. A young minister officiates every evening to a congregation of some twelve or fifteen persons, protected by a couple of policemen.

AN ENGLISH PAPER accounts for the general prosperity of Sunday schools in Wales in this way: 1. They do not depend upon libraries for success. The Sunday schools of Wales have no libraries. 2. The Bible is the only text-book. 3. The Bible is studied by all the helps at command. 4. The Sunday school is made the subject of prayer. 5. It is made an object of congregational interest. 6. One-third of every Lord's day is devoted to the study of the Bible. 7. Every ecclesiastical organization fosters Sunday schools. 8. Every quarter the whole day is given to the school. Questions are proposed and briefly argued. The people honor God's word.

IN THE matter of religious progress none of our great cities make so good a showing as Philadelphia. In 1807 the Methodists of Philadelphia had 2,174 members, the Presbyterians 746, the Baptists 488; total, 3,404, or one in twenty-six of the population. Last year, under the presbyteries of the reunited Presbyterian Church alone, there were 19,365 communicants; in the Methodist Episcopal Church, 18,913; under the two Baptist associations, 14,798; total, 53,076, or one in twelve and a half of the population. The Episcopal Church has 10,936 communicants; adding this to the others, the total of the four great denominations is over 80,000, or one in eight and a half of the population.

THE new Trinity church (English Episcopal) is in course of erection at Rome. A correspondent writes: "The demolition of the premises occupying the site purchased for this church commenced on the eighteenth of November last. The basement foundations were laid in the first portion, December 11. In addition to the church the building will contain a vestry, a room for a library and a room for a Sunday school for the children of members of the congregation. The front will be of cut stone, 'Pietra Serena,' from the neighborhood of Florence. The walls will be built completely of brick. The services of this church will be conducted, as hitherto, in a hired room outside of the walls, on thoroughly Protestant, scriptural principles of the Reformed Church of England. This church will be for the sole use of the English residents and visitors. It will be the first Protestant church ever built within the walls of Rome."

THE American Seaman's Friend Society enters on the new year with new courage and fresh promises. One of the main features of the work of this society is the supplying of libraries to seagoing vessels. Since this work was begun 4,100 libraries have been sent out, with 185,000 volumes, which by frequent reshipment have been put within the reach of 200,000 men. More than 700 conversions have been reported to the secretaries as the result of this one agency. Doubtless there is a larger number which have not been reported. The society sustains over forty chaplains and missionaries in the chief seaports, and provides sailors' homes in many of the cities. The president and secretary say that a project is under consideration, to be announced in due time, which seems about all that is necessary to complete the reformation of the port of New York and render it a safe place for seamen ashore. The various denominational charities are now being pushed forward with unusual urgency, and there is danger that the claims of undenominational societies like this may be overlooked. We trust that in the enlargement of its work it will not fall of the support which it deserves.

A CONFERENCE of Friends was recently held in London, attended by from 300 to 400 persons from all parts of the kingdom, to consider whether certain kinds of Christian work, now carried on by individual Friends in the exercise of their religious liberty, could be brought into official connection with the Society of Friends. It was found that some 2,000 persons are every week brought under the religious influence of Friends in some of the metropolitan districts, or about an equal number to the members of the London and Middlesex quarterly meeting. It is the same in the country generally. The results of the conference, arrived at with great unanimity, are that the foreign missions, the home mission work, the temperance work and the Sunday schools are to be brought into official recognition. Of course this has to be confirmed by the next yearly meeting in May.

THE new University Avenue Methodist Episcopal church of Syracuse, New York, was dedicated December 12. The building is finely located and very beautiful in its architecture and finish, within and without. The dedicatory sermons were preached by Bishops Simpson and Peck, the former preaching in the morning and the latter in the evening. During the progress of the services it was announced that $40,000 would be required to discharge the church from indebtedness, and before the conclusion of the evening service the entire amount was subscribed. The church is opened with free seats. The Methodists of Syracuse have within the past five years expended $170,000 in the construction of new church buildings and the improvement of old ones. As items in this expenditure, the Centenary church and property cost $50,000; repairs upon the First church cost $25,000; the Geddes church cost $35,000; and the University avenue church $58,000.

GIFT FROM EMPEROR WILLIAM.—The Titusville (Pennsylvania) Herald states that at a meeting of the building committee of St. Paul's Reformed church it was resolved to ask of King William one of the French cannon taken by him in the late war, to be cast as a bell for the new edifice. The following letter from Charles H. Meyer, the German consul at Philadelphia, tells the result:

"PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 12, 1872

"G. H. Bausch, Esq.: I am happy to state to you that his majesty, the Emperor William, in reply to the petition of St. Paul's Reformed church, at Titusville, has presented one of the captured French cannon to them, weighing about 2,000 pounds. You will please communicate this fact to the congregation, and also state to them that this piece of artillery is now awaiting transportation at the depot in Berlin. I am ready to forward it at your convenience. I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

"CHAS. H. MEYER."

THE committee of both Houses of Convocation, which met at Lambeth Palace, December 3, resolved to recommend the publication of an explanatory statement of the senses in which the warnings of the Athanasian creed are accepted by the Church of England. The Guardian states that the principle of an explanatory declaration to be hereafter framed was carried by twenty-seven to eighteen. Various amendments were offered and rejected—one for delay by twenty-eight to nineteen; the omission of the damnatory clauses by thirty-two to eight; allowing the alternative use of the apostles' creed by thirty-four to six; the omission of the rubric before the creed by thirty-six to eight; the substitution in it of "may" for "shall" by thirty-two to seven; and the proposal, we believe, of a standard of Parliament did not find a seconder. The committee consists of the twenty-one members of the Upper House and forty-two of the Lower. It will be seen that at one time forty-seven voted, and this did not, we believe, include all present.

DR. THOMPSON writes to the Observer as follows: "The Protestants of Paris are hoping that Father Hyacinthe will this winter open a reformed Catholic service; and he seems quite ready to do this as soon as means shall be provided. It is doubtful whether the government would authorize such a service; and the recent imprisonment of an Old Catholic for continuing to wear his priestly garments is ominous. There is no disguising the fact that Hyacinthe has lost influence with the upper classes by his marriage. They regard him as having violated a vow as sacred as that of marriage, and so forfeited his estate as a priest. The same feeling prevails in Germany, even among Old Catholics. They look upon the marriage as an individual affair, establishing no new principle and tending to no public result; and they are too politic just now to cripple their own movement with measures of doubtful popularity. Still the common people of Paris would hear Hyacinthe gladly; and, if he shall now take a step forward in acts and measures of reform answering to his high and noble words of protest, he will have a great personal following, and then the example of his marriage will silently and surely tell where it is so much needed."

The Root of All Evil.

There is nothing new under the sun. As it was in the days of Paul, so it is now. The revelations made in the Credit Mobilier investigation, the ventilation of Louisiana affairs in Congress, and the exposure of the Kansas senators all point in one direction. Some of the men implicated were the boasted leaders of the party of moral ideas, and professed disciples of Christ. It is notorious that legislation in Congress and in the State legislatures goes upon a money basis. Measures, however worthy in themselves, are not expected to be carried unless paid for. Bribery has come to be regarded as perfectly legitimate, and reflects no peculiar stain upon those who give and those who receive. Elections are carried by money, candidates seek office for money, the administration of justice is swayed by the same all-powerful influence. All the higher and purer motives of honorable ambition and the public good have generally given place to this greed of filthy lucre.

Even the honest fanaticism which once was prominent in Northern politics has given place to a meaner and more contemptible spirit of sordidness. Philanthropy and sectional hate, compounded as they have been in past years, are now combined with a covetousness which predominates over both. The head of the image is gold, whatever other elements may compose the balance of the idol. Other passions there are, but the love of money is the root. Not alone in high places and in political circles, but in corporation rings and in business pursuits is this tendency exhibited. The idolatry of wealth is alarmingly prevalent in every section, in all classes of society. The path to all temporal good is by the possession of money. Public sentiment has become so debauched that riches cover a multitude of sins, and secure honors and influence which virtue and capacity find it most difficult to win.

The recent exposure of venality in high places is a gloomy fact in one aspect of the case. It is in some sense an indication of the general corruption, and establishes the presumption that what has been brought to light are mere glintings of what remains concealed. If this galaxy of the best men of a party—men to whom their opponents conceded the virtues of sincerity and integrity—men who prayed, lectured before Christian associations, professed religion, and advocated all moral reforms, and some of whose pictures have been sent out as premiums by religious papers—turns out to be a rogues' gallery, what of the rest? Those men upon whom the tower has fallen were not greater sinners than thousands who have escaped.

On the other hand, these exposures show that there are "some certain dregs of conscience left." It is a hopeful sign of a reaction in favor of truth and honesty, that such an apocalypse of corruption has been possible. The pressure which has compelled the investigations and exposures may not have come altogether from the outraged moral sense of the country. Envy, ambition, hate, and even greed, may have had something to do with it, but there is an appeal to public opinion which shows that all sense of right is not utterly obliterated. We may be near the dawn of a better state of things, and at the beginning of an era of justice and integrity. It may be, but it is with many fears that we indulge the anticipation.

THE SEA TRIP—VERA CRUZ.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

VERA CRUZ, January 26, 1873.

MR. EDITOR: Just as the Tabasco turned off from the wharf at New Orleans, early in the morning, and the farewell was waved between hearts long true to each other, "El Capitan" shouted out in Spanish: "The good ship Tabasco, from New Orleans to Vera Cruz; God give a safe voyage;" which, I suppose, has been shouted from port to port ever since the days of Columbus until now by every Spanish seaman. It certainly had this time one very hearty amen. And we needed it. The waste of waters lying between New Orleans and Vera Cruz is a wild, unfrequented part of the sea, of deep leaden-blue color, and very uneasy. Not a sail or anything significant of human life did we see from the balize to the Castle of San Juan de Ulon. For two days the wind stood ahead, the waters rolled together in masses until waves became hills, turbulent, unappeasable, threatening. Their curling summits were cut off by the sharp wind, their sides were flecked with rage and foam, and on the horizon they looked as the knots of some huge serpent creeping along against the sky. 'Twas a good place to study Jonah. But while the ship was rising, falling, driving forward under steam and wave, troubled and groaning, for the first time in my life I saw one of those brave little fellows which the Lord has made to cheer the heart of the voyager—a Portuguese man-of-war. His tiny sail was up, and he was scudding along over mountains and valleys as if the ocean was made all for himself. Many a wrecked seaman has taken fresh courage, I doubt not, from these adventurous little navigators. When the wind is very strong I noticed that they shorten sail, but when it is fair and breezy, they open wide their glassy sack and are out on a holiday. The body of this jelly-fish is five or six inches in length, shaped much like a gallot, and of a bright Prussian-blue color. As the ship pressed on a flying-fish would now and then spring up out of its path, and with a level flight of some fifty yards, just above the water, presently meet a wave and sink back among mere fish; though one of them flew three times that distance, and from wave to wave, as if choosing where to fall.

So much for out of doors. Within we were all Spanish. One had to learn to eat Spanish as well as talk it. Imagine a half bottle of sweet oil over every dish—peas, hash, fish, rice, everything! The smell of the viands presently became intolerably artistic. That and the motion of the vessel told wretchedly upon all my fellow-passengers. I escaped sea-sickness, but all my sympathies were excited for them. It is the one touch of nature that makes all the world akin.

But by and by we came, on a misty, cloudy afternoon, in sight of land. It was the range of mountains north of Vera Cruz, and in the distance the captain pointed to where Cortez burned his ships—brave fellow that he was, and shrewd, it may be, withal; for to have left them would have been only to return and find them wrecks upon this inhospitable, exposed coast. It was too foggy to descry the peaks of the Orizaba, which are seen forty miles above Vera Cruz. The night had come on. One hour more and we could have been in port. So we lay on and off until morning, with a strong wind and rough sea to toss and rack every bone that was left.

You may be sure, when the morning broke beautifully and the vessel stood head on within a few miles of Vera Cruz and her famous castle, it was a time to be remembered. There gleamed its white, grand palaces and domes of the olden time, full of the story of merchant princes, bold admirals and brave warriors of the palmy days of the Spanish monarchy. Still strong, as if that glory had never departed, everything well preserved, one expects to see in it the race that once owned the world. There is the cathedral, its dnomo like that of the great Florentine, from which, no doubt, this took some of its expression; its top perfectly rounded, covered with China-tiling, in blue and white mosaic, smooth, shining and fresh as if of yesterday. There too is the Campanile, carrying the mind straight to Venice, and not unworthy of the days of the Doges. In front is the single quay of granite and the wall that stretches entirely around the city. A quarter of a mile from the shore all the shipping rides at anchor, just between the Fortress de Ulon and the town. American and French steamers, ships, and a large Spanish man-of-war, every square inch of spar and stay covered with men and blankets—wash-day, I suppose. Full of wonder and gratitude, the Tabasco works her way in, drops her anchor, and waits the ponderous movements of the custom house officials. In a short time we are in the Hotel Mexico, near the quay, and not far from the railroad "estacion."

The newest house in Vera Cruz is one hundred and fifty years old. The outside of the cathedral, that looks so fresh, was finished ten years before Mr. Wesley came to America, as the date on its front shows. Several old churches are now apparently given up to bats, but still show, through their worn projections, the style and genius of their day. Upon the highest point of some of these structures the prickly pear has firmly established itself, and the carrion crow may be seen perched for the night. Flocks of these horrid birds are domiciled here; and with help of dogs, and prisoners from the jail chained two and two, constitute the city scavengers. The streets are all paved, have a clean look, and are full of people, mostly Mexicans. The donkey, sorely abused but strangely philosophic, here carries all that is put on him, though upon his own schedule; and the mule, not much larger than his kinsman, is hitched up in what would seem to be a purely extemporized style, with loose ropes and a horseman's saddle, to a huge cart, and at great disadvantage does a great deal of work.

This delightful climate, to a great degree, relieves the laborer of the cost of shelter and clothing, and requires him only to get bread. Here every washerwoman scrubs and rinses and chatters in a palace, and every beggar sleeps on tesselated marble floors, under lofty arches, in spacious courts. Those courtly senors and senores who first built and moved so grandly in these mansions, if now permitted, would revisit them but once. Here is conservatism enough to ballast the whole Yankee nation. Here the great problem of miscegenation has been worked out, and every imaginable dilution of Japhetic blood may be seen. Black and white Mezo, Mexican and mulatto may be seen in the orphan asylum side by side, on the same forms and eating out of the same dish. "Can these bones live?"—these Mexican dead! "O Lord, thou knowest." Can they? Yes, by the preached word and that Spirit that filled the valley with an exceeding great army of living men.

ROUTE FROM VERA CRUZ TO THE CITY OF MEXICO—THE RAILROAD.

CITY OF MEXICO, Jan. 29, 1873.

MR. EDITOR: At three o'clock on Monday morning we were seated in the cars at Vera Cruz, just starting for the City of Mexico. Nothing could be more unpretentious than the little wooden warehouse from which the train emerged. It was in keeping with the other depots all along the route, for this was only the sixth through trip, and as yet all the houses of the road are but temporary. Besides, nothing has been done for show—all for work. The thoroughness of the great originator of the present railway and locomotive, George Stephenson, has been well represented in the engineers and road-builders of this line. We were moving along on a seventy-pound-to-the-yard rail at the rate of twenty-five miles per hour, when the morning light revealed the country. On each side there was a rich growth of trees and shrubs quite new to me. Even the oak had another expression. The banana plant was occasional. Houses made of bamboo and thatched, well filled with Mexicans and Mezoes, were quite frequent, and considerable flocks of mules and donkeys were distributed about, considerably worn but ready for use. The face of the country was cleared, slightly undulating, the soil rich, cultivated here and there only, giving evidence that the wars have passed over it. Presently the train comes upon the Atoyac river and a most charming waterfall of thirty or forty feet. There we stop and get a cup of coffee such as was never brewed north of Maryland. Now we are in the coffee country, and for the first time in my life I see this grateful shrub. It grows in the woods. The ground is partly cleared, with most of the trees left, or else the banana is planted to shade it; and rows of this shrub, not higher than a Red river cotton stalk, alternate. It bears in seven years, and yields at its best some thirty pounds per plant. We stop at several small towns, amid crowds of peons, Mexicans, etc.—Oranges, pinque, bread, eggs, coffee, chocolate, and many other eatables are offered at the car windows, the cooking all of the best quality. The country, the air, the temperature are all refreshing, and the snow-white peak of the Orizaba is in full view. This is the most pleasant part of the year. It rains from the fifteenth of May every night until October. Thermometer all the year from sixty to eighty. Here is Cordova, and yonder is the place by the mountain where General Price and several American officers planted the year after the war. Every now and then a dome and tower has been seen all along the way, but in towns of six thousand inhabitants you will see some large churches, many of them imposing enough to be on our new St. Charles street church-lot. Where in the world did all the money come from that piled up this surplus of ecclesiastical masonry? Nor is there any falling off. On, on—one may almost count the miles by the churches. This ought to be or has been the most religiously inclined or the most ecclesiastically over-drained people in the world. Nearly all of these structures have architectural merit, and some have a great deal. Yet the mortmain tenure has been at last broken, and much of the estates of the Romish Church has fallen back into the hands of the State. What is there to show for this huge machinery worked so faithfully for so many years by this ancient system? Has it left the people with a right knowledge of God and of his Son? Has it given spiritual life to the multitude placed by God's providence under its tutelage? Has it distributed the word of God? That alone would have been a great work. All is silent as death; these huge altars are but the tombstones of the people.

Next comes Orizaba, for situation beautiful beyond comparison. The perfection of the genial influences of nature conspire to make it a paradise, if over it there might remain the great mercy of good laws; and I believe there is more hope in this direction than before for many years. Mr. Lerdo is a man of sound judgment—cultivated, benevolent, firm. His presidency has been so far characterized by a remarkably well-balanced, generous policy.

Meanwhile we have been rising on a grade of three per cent. An engine has been hitched on, of new pattern and great performance. It has four cylinders, twelve driving-wheels, two smoke-stacks, one before and one behind, and two boilers, as if two locomotives were put back to back and run together. It carries all the wood and water on the engine, thus constituting their weight part of its tractile force. The wheels are not over five feet in diameter, so there is no wrenching of rails and wabbling. Its weight is fifty-six tons, its length fifty feet. It climbs these slopes like a donkey, pulling eighty-six tons net up a four per cent. grade, at eight miles an hour—that is, in a fifty-foot passenger car you look down and see one end of the car two feet lower than the other.

With this wonderful, hard-working, plain-looking iron creature, without a brass spot on it excepting the letters of its name, Ixtaxihuatle, we move on and up into the heart of the Cordilleras—over the Infernello, the Maltrata pass, and the Cumbres of the Maltrata, heights and depths, gorges and canyons that fill the soul with the awful majesty of nature, and constantly excite admiration at the skill which has achieved such impossible heights. Every tunnel and every bridge is on a curve of three hundred and fifty feet radius, and is built, walled and supported with iron and masonry in the most substantial manner. There are no wooden trestles—all is iron—a third rail placed on all the curves. For solidity, for the mass of stone moved, security and permanency, it impressed me far beyond the Union or the Central Pacific. At the last dreadful point from which the eye commands the valley of the Maltrata, and the range of successive peaks which inclose it, there stands an oak whose top is about even with the road-bed, and on the top of this oak there gleams the brilliant hues of the orchid as a finish to the scene. This parasite was new to me. It is a bright scarlet cone, six inches long, regular in shape, two inches in diameter at the base, rising out of a tuft of leaves. From this cone shoots a deep-blue pencil-shaped flower two inches long, and above the flower rise the heads of its stamens, of a very bright yellow. It abounds at this altitude, and plants its glories above the clouds.

We are now eight thousand three hundred and twenty-six feet above the sea. Off to the right is Orizaba, lifting its hoary brow still seven thousand feet higher. The reader now doubtless prepares his mind to go down, for what mountain is there that has not two sides to it? Well, this is one. We do not go down at all; we are on a plain; we go on and on, and are come to a region of corn and barley—a cultivated, wide country, with dull adobe large haciendas at wide intervals, as if we had always been running on a level. The great locomotive has given place to an ordinary one. Here is a stiff wind; off to the right are mountain-peaks—but far off. We go on to the City of Mexico, arriving late in the evening, having come over two hundred and ninety-three miles, of which seventeen miles were four per cent. grade, twenty-three three per cent., and the rest one and a half to two. All the muscle necessary to move the rock and build this road was supplied by the native peons. Not fifty foreigners were on it, save only for bossing and engineering. They worked from early morn to dark, at from seventy-five cents to $15 a day. On the route we frequently crossed the great highway from Vera Cruz to Mexico, and on it donkeys about the size of two Newfoundland dogs were pegging away, carrying two hundred pounds. I asked Mr. John Quin, a most affable gentleman, and who built over thirty miles of the road, and now is roadmaster for over one hundred miles, and to whom I am greatly indebted for information: "Could this road have been built without these donkeys?" "I doubt if it could," he replied, "for all the water and all the machinery to build it were hauled up by these little fellows." I confess to a great respect for them.

Rev. James L. Cotton, D. D.

MR. EDITOR: It is with deep sorrow that I announce the death of Rev. James L. Cotton, D. D., of the Alabama Conference. He died at Durant, Mississippi, on the fourth instant, and his remains were sent to Selma, to be interred at Cahaba, where his wife and child are sleeping. On yesterday (Sabbath), at nine o'clock, his corpse was brought into the church here, where he had often administered the holy communion to the people, and preached, with a force that few can surpass, the unsearchable riches of Christ. Quite a large audience assembled at that early hour to testify their esteem for their former presiding elder; and the deep solemnity that pervaded the assembly, and the tears that flowed most freely, showed the strong hold he had on their affections. Bro. Briggs and Bro. P. R. McCreary assisted in the funeral services. Bro. Glenn, of East Selma, was also present. After the service at the church we carried the body to its resting-place beside that of his beloved wife, who some ten years ago preceded him to glory.

With mingled feelings we buried him in the old town of Cahaba, the ancient capital of Alabama. The desolation and silence that reigned around were in harmony with the emotions of our stricken hearts.—War's ruthless hand and the crushing events of the last few years have removed nearly all the white population from the once beautiful and thriving little city. In every direction could be seen lordly mansions, lovely cottages, and tastefully-arranged lawns and flower-gardens falling into rapid decay. The climbing ivy, unobstructed in its growth, had already mounted to the tops of the uninhabited houses, "the wild boar of the forest had broken in," and negroes and beasts were roaming and ruling where once all nature smiled and every prospect pleased.

We were sad when we viewed the desolation and remembered the past—sad when we contemplated the future of this once fruitful and inviting section—but far more sad when we looked down into the deep, cold grave that held all that was mortal of one who once awakened the echoes of the surrounding land with a clear note of eloquence and power that but few could imitate or equal, and still fewer surpass.

Near by where we laid him was the modest, tasteful little brick church—now, alas! entirely without a congregation—where for years he had preached Christ to crowded assemblies of admiring hearers. For ourselves and for his brethren of the Conference we dropped a tear on his grave and left him with the Redeemer till the resurrection.

He was born in North Carolina in 1817, moved to Alabama in 1842, and was licensed to preach and joined the Alabama Conference in 1845. He filled various important stations, and for the last nine years has been presiding elder, traveling the Mobile, Tuskaloosa and Enfaula districts. His work for the present year was Union Springs, upon which he had just entered when business called him to Mississippi. We have no particulars whatever of his death. His brethren in Alabama will be greatly obliged to any one in Durant who will give them to us through the ADVOCATE.

We have no doubt, however, about his future. Twenty-eight years of active, zealous, efficient ministry, during all of which time never a word was uttered, as far as I know, against his moral and religious character, leave no room to question the fact of his spiritual safety.

As a preacher he was of the highest order. Delighting in metaphysical and philosophical studies, his preaching was at times slightly tinged by the character of his reading and the cast of his mind, but was always sufficiently practical and unctuous to reach the heart and gratify the vast audiences that assembled to hear him.

He may have had errors (who is free from them?) but they were of the minor character arising from the abstracted manner of the student and man of thought, and served to bring out more fully by contrast his glittering pulpit powers. He was eminently spiritual in life and conversation, and specially tender of the feelings and good name of others. Truly we of the Alabama Conference are sorely afflicted. "Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth."

M. S. ANDREWS.

The New Republic.

Amadeus has abdicated the Spanish throne. He was, in fact, driven from it by the disaffection of at least a considerable minority of the people. No doubt papal influence had much to do with the matter, as the Pope was bound to be the enemy of a son of Victor Emanuel. Nothing but a Bourbon King will satisfy the Catholics. The Pope would prefer Isabella, the most faithful of papists, and the most licentious and corrupt of women, to the purest and most virtuous of republican governments. As her return is out of the question, her son or Don Carlos will receive his godly benediction and support. The Jesuits have probably been the instigators of the Carlist insurrections which have so much disturbed the tranquillity of Spain since the flight of Isabella, and their secret but powerful machinations will continue under the republic. What duration the republic will have it is difficult to conjecture. The religious and political elements of the country are fearfully discordant, the elements of trouble are many, and fomenting of conspiracies and insurrections may be regarded as certain. The presence of Castellar in the new government is an omen of good, so far as religious liberty is concerned, but we fear that the virtue and intelligence of the people are not equal to the present emergency. The real conflict in Europe, and in America as well, is between Protestant truth and liberty, and papal despotism. The Spanish question is but one section of a world-wide battle, which thickens every day.

Reasonable.

The New York Christian Advocate seems at present to occupy the same ground on which we have stood all the time. Apart from the utter impracticability of uniting the two Methodisms in our day, we believe that it would be a calamity to the cause of Christ in the world. Whatever evils may attach to the maintenance of separate organizations, we think the good far more than counterbalances. We believe most heartily in the divine mission of sects. Dr. Curry says:

> The organs of the Methodist Episcopal Church South have treated us very fairly. They seem to agree with us respecting the relations of the "two Methodisms"—that their only practical courses are for each to proceed as it is, doing its own work, and fulfilling each its calling in their providential allotments. Our brethren of the Methodistish bodies known familiarly as "Albrights" and "Brethren," appear to accept our estimate of their character and mission as satisfactory; and as we ventured no opinion respecting the desirableness of organic union between themselves and ourselves, so their papers are, so far as we have observed, silent upon that subject. There is evidently a prevalent concurrence in the opinion that the existence of separate and independent ecclesiastical bodies "sects" is not an unmixed evil, and in many cases not an evil at all, but rather something desirable. The expediency, or otherwise, of consolidating two or more such bodies into one is therefore a debatable question, to be decided in each case by its special facts and circumstances.

AN EXAMPLE.—Our old friend, Robert Babington, layman and merchant, of Franklinton, Louisiana, is a model agent. He keeps up a list of between thirty and forty subscribers in that community, and collects and pays over the money as promptly as he meets his business notes and obligations. Besides this, Bro. Babington is Sunday school superintendent, and, we doubt not, one of the best stewards in the whole Methodist connection. May the tribes of such men increase.

THE VERONA FEMALE COLLEGE, located at Verona, Lee county, Mississippi, is one of the best of our schools. The location is salubrious and easily reached by the Mobile and Ohio railroad. President Wier needs no commendation from us, as he is well known, and esteemed throughout the church as a preacher and educator. See advertisement of the spring session.

WE HAVE RECEIVED tickets to the Felicity street Sunday school jubilee. There will be singing and speaking by the children. The exercises begin at seven P. M., Friday, February 21.

THE New Orleans District Conference will meet at Baton Rouge, Friday morning, April 4, at nine o'clock A. M.

THE FACULTY of the University of Wisconsin have adopted a new course of instruction. It is described as comprising "less ancient languages than the classified course and less science than the scientific course, but more of modern language and literature than either."

Our China Mission.

We find the following communications from our missionaries in China in the Nashville Christian Advocate:

By the consent and sanction of the Missionary Board, I still continue my connection with the Anglo-Chinese College at this place. In the forenoon I teach, as usual, but in the afternoon my time is spent in the translating department, where for two years I have been engaged translating historical works. Perhaps it would interest you to know some of the results of my labors. I will mention, therefore, some of the works now ready for the press: 1. The Datebook, or a chronological history of the world, from the most ancient times down to 1861; 2. History of India, ancient and modern, to the Conquest; 3. History of Russia; 4. History of Germany; 5. History of France; 6 and 7. History of Spain and Portugal; 8 and 9. History of Norway and Sweden; 10 and 11. History of Hungary and Austria; 12 and 13. History of Holland and Belgium; 14. History of Switzerland; (15?); 16. History of Italy; 17. History of Prussia; 18. History of Denmark; 19. History of Turkey; 20. History of Persia; 21. History of Peru; 22. Rendered into Chinese twenty-five thousand geographical names for the Index to Colton's Atlas, which is soon to be published in Chinese.

In addition to the above labors, I still continue to edit and publish the Chinese Christian Advocate, which has now entered its fifth year, with large increase of subscribers. The paper has also been enlarged, and now contains twenty pages weekly.

In conclusion, allow me to express the great gratification I felt on learning from you that the missionary spirit is reviving. O for a general revival on the subject of missions! God has answered our prayers long ago—China and Japan are ready. Their doors stand open wide; the field is large and inviting. Why stands the church—the Methodist Episcopal Church South—there idle? At this moment we need, and could successfully locate, a dozen missionaries. Now is the time to send them—send a dozen for China, and not less than half a dozen for Japan. Great events are pending—political and religious. As a church we should be abreast of the times. Heretofore, though sanguine, I have not been enthusiastic; now I am both, and long to see greater commerce of the gospel between our church and these great nations. A demand has been created for our civilization, and while New York, Boston and San Francisco, London, Manchester and Liverpool, and countless other cities of the West, are taxing their means and appliances to furnish the material elements, China and Japan look to the churches to supply them with teachers and preachers to open the treasures of our knowledge, and guide them from their present darkness into the light of our more glorious civilization and religion.

Cry aloud and spare not, till the church awake to life and duty. Call upon the Conferences for more laborers, and let them assume the responsibility of their support—relieve the board from the necessity of begging to support only one man, by each Conference supporting its own—through the board, if you will; but by all means let each Conference recommend its candidate, or adopt one and sustain him. We must have the men. Send on enough to organize Mission Conferences, both in China and Japan, and when next the Bishops appoint their annual visitations, let these two Conferences be embraced in their schedule. I am in earnest, doctor, and these are earnest times. How I should rejoice to welcome that noble Bishop who appointed me to this work, coming to organize a Conference here! Who shall be our Coke? who our Asbury? Send us first the men, and those shall come in due time. Remember now, doctor, not less than twelve of your ablest men for China, nor less than six for Japan. We want them all within the next two years.

YOUNG J. ALLEN.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Dec. 10, 1872.

Bro. Allen has just informed me you wish the statistics of the mission for the past year. I am sorry I did not know it sooner, and for that reason I shall have to be very brief. I do not look upon this as the report for the past year. That report will be sent on by the first mail in January next.

1. We have in the mission-field of China two missionaries and their wives. I include their wives because I think they have a right to be, and should be included in the home report as helpers in the great work of evangelizing the heathen; two native helpers preparing for the ministry—Bro. Dsau Sierwhoa and Bro. Young Kyungsew. Bro. Dsau is stationed at Suchow; Bro. Young has not been assigned any particular work; one applicant for the ministry; eleven baptized during the past year; three have died during the year; two have been excluded; one returned to the London mission; eleven probationers at Shanghai; three probationers at Suchow; one church in Shanghai—preaching four and five times each week; one church at Suchow—preaching three or four times each week; one church at Naziang—preaching occasionally; two boys' boarding schools at Shanghai, with twenty-one boarders, besides eight day scholars; one girls' boarding school at Shanghai, with nine boarders and three day scholars; one day school in Suchow, of twelve boys; two Bible women in Shanghai; two Sabbath schools in Shanghai, having in attendance about forty persons.

These are the statistics of the China mission, in a few words, without going into detail. Hoping this may reach you in time, I remain yours in the bonds of Christian love,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Dec. 10, 1872.

The junction of the central shaft of Hoosac tunnel with the eastern cutting was a marvelous triumph of engineering. The deviation was but five-sixteenths of an inch laterally, and one and a quarter inches in level, the depth being measured from the top of the mountain.

MARRIED.

CONE—TORREY.—On the ninth instant, by the Rev. L. F. Dowdell, Mr. J. Conn to Miss Nannie Torrey, of Notasulga, Alabama.

MALONE—JENNINGS.—At the residence of Mrs. L. Lyerly, Enterprise, Clarke county, Mississippi, on the eleventh of February, 1873, by Rev. U. H. Phillips, Mr. John H. Malone to Miss Martha E. Jennings.

Periodicals.

Littell's Living Age for the week ending February 1 contains: The Progress of Medicine and Surgery, from the Edinburg Review; On Some Peculiarities of Society in America, Cornhill Magazine; The Azores, Dark Blue; A Visit to Shumil's Country in 1870, by Edwin Ransom, Fraser's Magazine; The Germans in South Africa, Spectator; The Fire Miller of Manneville, by Julia Kavanaugh; an instalment of "His Little Serene Highness," translated from the Platt-Deutsch, of Fritz Reuter, besides poetry and miscellany.

The Sunday school publications from Nashville for February have reached us late. They are all very good, and are, doubtless, in the hands of our readers before now.

Good Health and Mental Bliss for the current month is an excellent number, containing much curious and practical information.

The American Agriculturist for February is, as usual, filled with handsome illustrations and useful reading.

The Gardeners' Monthly, published at Philadelphia, is an excellent publication.

Le Bon Ton for February has its usual supply of patterns and fashion-pictures.

The Washington and Lee University, at Lexington, Virginia, has twelve schools in operation, and is increasing the number as rapidly as its funds will admit. It has received within the last year nearly $100,000 in bequests and donations—$70,000 cash from the late R. H. Bryley, of New Orleans, and $20,000 Alexandria city bonds from Mr. W. W. Corcoran, of Washington city, making its cash capital more than $300,000, and its aggregate capital, including real estate, buildings, libraries and apparatus, more than $500,000.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

One sip of this will bathe the drooping spirit in delight beyond the bliss of dreams. Be wise, and taste.—Milton's Comus.

Verily do the words of the inspired poet gleam with the light of prophecy; for if there is anything that is swift to operate beneficially on the human system, impaired by physical ailments, it is Price's celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Those whose lives "drag their slow length along," harnessed by the petty but fretful annoyances of indigestion, dyspepsia, debility, febrile excitement, nervous irritability, exhaustion, or the general suffering that results from hepatic causes, deserve the fate to which they are consigned when, like the physician to whom the voice of sacred wisdom cried, "Heal thyself," they turn away from the means placed within their grasp. Price's Bitters will do the work. A vigorous stimulant, an agreeable elixir, a strengthening tonic and a grateful adjuvant, the very universality of whose use is confirmative of its efficacy, it stands to-day stamped with the signet-seal of medical approval, and radiant with the award of a high popular appreciation.

A Stitch in Time Saves Nine.—If you have a cough do not neglect it. Thousands go to an untimely grave by neglecting what they call "a slight cold." These slight colds are very insidious. They soon become deep-seated and defy all remedies. Dr. Tutt's Expectorant will cure it. It can be had of any druggist.

TUSKEGEE, ALA., April 28, 1871.

Dr. Tutt: In gratitude for the benefit received by the use of your Expectorant, I do cheerfully add my testimony to its most wonderful effects in relieving Asthma or Bronchitis. For several years I had suffered dreadfully with severe attacks of Asthma or difficulty of breathing. I was induced by the high recommendations given to your Expectorant to try it, and found that it gave almost immediate relief. It is about five months since I began its use. I have used six bottles, and have not had an attack since. It has been a great blessing to me. I cannot afford to be without it, and I heartily recommend it to all persons who are at all troubled with Lung or Throat diseases.

Very respectfully,

Remove from the blood those wastes arising from the action of the system which, if allowed to remain in the circulation, give rise to diseases which speedily destroy life. Nature has appointed the kidneys and liver as her agents, by whose action impurities shall be eliminated from the system; and when these agents are torpid or debilitated, or disabled from any cause for their business, Hamilton's Buchu and Dandelion imparts fresh life and vigor to them, and makes of them the best blood purifiers one can have. # WOMAN'S FRIEND AND STEAM WASHER

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND SOLD.

WILL CLEANSE YOUR CLOTHES WITHOUT RUBBING.

EVERY ONE SOLD IS FULLY WARRANTED.

NO FLUIDS OR EXTRA SOAP USED.

IT CONSUMES LESS SOAP, LESS TIME AND LESS FUEL THAN THE USUAL method. It saves Labor, Wear and Tear, and the Annoyance of Wash-day. It requires no attention while the process of cleansing goes on. It will do the Washing of the Family while you are eating breakfast and doing up dishes.

Steam has long been known as the most powerful agent in removing dirt, grease and stains from clothing, and bleaching them white. Papermakers have for many years used steam in cleaning and bleaching their rags, and they succeed in making, by its agency, the liltliest picking from the gutter perfectly pure and white. Until the invention of the STEAM WASHER or WOMAN'S FRIEND, although often attempted, no method had been discovered of applying Steam directly to the clothing, which could be used in a portable manner for domestic purposes. The WOMAN'S FRIEND washes without labor. It will do the washing of an ordinary family in from thirty minutes to an hour. The STEAM WASHER is superior in all other devices for the following reasons:

1. It does its own work, thereby saving a large portion of the time usually taken in a family.
2. It uses much less soap than is required by any other method.
3. It requires no attention whatever while the process of cleaning is going on. A lady can do her washing while she is eating her breakfast and doing up the breakfast dishes.
4. Clothing wears double the time, washed in this Washer, that it will washed by a machine, or by hand-labor or a washboard.
5. Lace Curtains and all fine fabrics are washed in a superior manner. For Flannels this Washer is most desirable, as it will not full them, as a machine or hand-rubbing does. All fabrics, from the finest lace to a bed-blanket, can be washed perfectly and with ease without the rubbing-board.

IT IS TRULY A LABOR AND CLOTHES-SAVING INVENTION.

The Child's Corner.

UNDER THE WING.

Danger's at hand—
Pussy is out;
Chicks are abroad,
Scraping about;
"Cluck!" cries the mother,
Striving to bring
Little ones safely
Under the wing.

Will they neglect
Mother's fond cry?
Will they despise
Warning, and die?
No; see! they scamper,
Eager to cling
Close to their refuge
Under the wing.

Jesus, from danger
Guard us, we pray;
Suffer us never
From thee to stray.
Great is our danger;
Close would we cling,
Nestling in safety
Under thy wing.

Little Strawberry-Blossom.

In a damp green spot in the midst of a wood, hidden away from the sunlight by a wilderness of lady-ferns, there grew a little strawberry-blossom. Its broad leaves spread themselves out luxuriantly enough, but the solitary white flower was stunted and insignificant. The tall ferns and the foxgloves growing round rarely noticed the poor little pale thing.

"It seems hardly worth while," the Foxglove would say, "to have so many leaves for such a very small flower, and it takes up a great deal of room;" and the lady-ferns quite agreed with her.

When remarks of this kind reached the little strawberry-blossom's ear she felt wounded and sad, for she could not help her own existence.

"Pardon me, beautiful Foxglove," she would say, "I did not plant myself; I dare say I shall soon shrivel up and be out of your way. I wonder why I grew at all;" she thought; "it is very dark and lonely, and nobody wants me!"

One day a child came and gathered an armful of the fresh green lady-ferns, and then at last a bright sunbeam found its way in, through the break in the fern-forest, and lighted on the head of the tiny flower, making it glisten like a dewdrop or a pearl.

"I love you, little Strawberry-blossom, I love you," whispered the Sunbeam; but the poor little flower had lived so long unsought and unloved that she could not believe it.

"Not me, kind Sunbeam," she said, "not me; surely it is the Foxglove—the queen of the woods—that you love, with her splendid crimson bells, or the lovely wild rose climbing close by!"

"No, little Strawberry-blossom," answered the Sunbeam, "it is you that I love; you are so gentle and retiring! I had hard work to find you out; but now I shall come every day and stay with you all day long!"

"Listen to the Sunbeam making love to little Strawberry-blossom!" said the Foxglove to a lady-fern; "isn't it ridiculous! Her poor little head will be turned;" and even the sweet grasses and moss growing close round her laughed mockingly.

But she was too happy to heed them. All the long hot summer day the Sunbeam stayed with her; and when he said good night he promised to return the next morning. In the night a Glow-worm passing by stopped to speak to her.

"Oh! Glow-worm," said she, "I am so happy! A Sunbeam has come—a real beautiful Sunbeam—and he says he loves me, though I am such a tiny flower. And he's coming again to-morrow!"

"Hum," said the Glow-worm, who had seen a good deal of life. "Don't make too sure of that. The Sunbeam is a great traveler, and travelers are not always to be depended upon; they go here and there, and forget all about the last place they visited."

"But he said he would come!" said little Strawberry-blossom, "and he is so great and good I think he will keep his word."

"Well," said the Glow-worm, "I don't know much of him; I am more intimate with his cousins, the Moonbeams. I only wished to speak a word of friendly warning. My advice to you is to go to sleep and forget all about him."

And little Strawberry-blossom went to sleep and dreamed a bright, happy dream. But behold! next morning when she woke it was even duller and darker than usual; no Sunbeam was there. In truth, it was raining heavily, and the drops pattered through the fern-fronds all round her head. But she did not know it was rain.

"Kind leaves!" she said, "are you weeping for me?" at which they all laughed.

"No, no, little Strawberry-blossom," they said, "we don't waste our tears on such a poor little silly thing as you! Did you really think your fine visitor would come back?"

Little Strawberry-blossom was heart-broken. She could not see beyond her green canopy, and she did not know that the sun was even then struggling hard with the clouds. At last he burst forth in all his glory and splendor; the raindrops caught the rays as they passed, and there rose over the wood a wondrous arch of colored light. Little Strawberry-blossom could not see the rainbow, but she felt a glow of warmth and happiness steal over her, for there was her own Sunbeam creeping in through the dripping ferns.

"Ah! little one," he said, "did you think I had forgotten you?" and she hung her head with shame at having doubted him.

"You should have more faith, little Strawberry-blossom," he whispered. "I was only biding my time!"

And through the bright summer days the Sunbeam came again and again, and in the atmosphere of love and warmth little Strawberry-blossom expanded and developed till she was no longer a pale, puny flower, but a beautiful crimson berry, shining like a ruby in a setting of emeralds. Even the ferns and the Foxglove could not help admiring her, saying among themselves: "What can have happened to little Strawberry-blossom? She is quite changed!"

"And I will tell you who sent me to you," whispered the Sunbeam. "It was the glorious Sun himself. He is always there, high up in the sky, watching over all—even the tiniest bud—and he sends us into gloomy, cheerless dwellings with messages of love for lonely hearts."—Good Words for the Young.

The Spider and the Flea.

A Spider and a Flea dwelt together in one house, and brewed their beer in an egg-shell. One day, when the Spider was stirring it up, she fell in and scalded herself. Thereupon the Flea began to scream. And then the Door asked: "Why are you screaming, Flea?"

"Because little Spider has scalded herself in the beer-tub," replied she.

Thereupon the Door began to creak as if it were in pain; and a Broom which stood in the corner asked: "What are you creaking for, Door?"

"May I not creak?" it replied:

"The little Spider's scalt herself,
And the Flea weeps."

So the Broom began to sweep industriously, and presently a little Cart came by, and asked the reason. "May I not sweep?" replied the Broom:

"The little Spider's scalt herself,
And the Flea weeps;
The little Door creaks with the pain."

Thereupon the little Cart said: "So will I run," and began to run very fast past a heap of Ashes, which cried out: "Why do you run, little Cart?"

"Because," replied the Cart,

"The little Spider's scalt herself,
And the Flea weeps;
The little Door creaks with the pain,
And the Broom sweeps."

"Then," said the Ashes, "I will burn furiously." Now next to the Ashes there grew a Tree, which asked: "Little heap, why do you burn?"

"Because," was the reply,

"The little Spider's scalt herself,
And the Flea weeps;
The little Door creaks with the pain,
And the Broom sweeps;
The little Cart runs on so fast."

Thereupon the Tree cried: "I will shake myself!" and went on shaking till all its leaves fell off.

A little Girl passing by with a water-pitcher saw it shaking, and asked: "Why do you shake yourself, little Tree?"

"Why may I not?" said the Tree:

"The little Spider's scalt herself,
And the Flea weeps;
The little Door creaks with the pain,
And the Broom sweeps;
The little Cart runs on so fast,
And the Ashes burn."

Then the Maiden said: "If so, I will break my pitcher;" and she threw it down and broke it.

At this the Streamlet from which she drew the water asked: "Why do you break your pitcher, my little Girl?"

"Why may I not?" she replied; for

"The little Spider's scalt herself,
And the Flea weeps;
The little Door creaks with the pain,
And the Broom sweeps;
The little Cart runs on so fast,
And the Ashes burn;
The little Tree shakes down its leaves—
Now it is my turn."

"Ah, then," said the Streamlet, "now must I begin to flow." And it flowed and flowed along, in a great stream, which kept getting bigger and bigger, until at last it swallowed up the little Girl, the little Tree, the Ashes, the Cart, the Broom, the Door, the Flea, and, last of all, the Spider, all together.—From the German.

A Little Girl's Sunday Thought.

"When William comes home this morning I shall give him a good scolding. I meant to have called at his master's, and given it to him in the week, but I had not time."

This was said over the breakfast-table by the father of a family, who had reason to be displeased with his eldest son, who was an apprentice to a draper, at a little distance. There was a pause after the father spoke. It was plain that the mother and the children—of whom there were three—were sorry for William. At last the youngest child, a little girl, who sat next to her father, laid down her spoon, and, looking up in his face, said confusingly:

"Father, dear, I want to ask something."

"Well, my love, ask away."

"Doesn't it say in the Bible: Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thou hast to do?"

"Yes, my child, we must do our week's work in the week, and then we have the blessing of the Sabbath to rest in, and to praise God."

"Oh, then, father, you mustn't scold poor William. You said that ought to have been done in the week."

The father looked at his little monitor with a smile, and said, after a moment's pause: "You are right, darling. If I forgot or neglected this 'hard work' of scolding in the week it shall not be done to-day, for this is the day of love, given to us by God's love, and consecrated by a Savior's love."

Just then William came in, and as the kisses went round that welcomed him home, the others said: "You're not to be scolded, William; you're begged off because it is Sunday." William, who knew very well what he had done that was wrong, colored up, and his father said:

"Kiss your little sister, Willie, and try for the future to avoid doing anything that will cause you on any day to be scolded. To-day we will all bless God and be happy."

Oh, blessed home, where the love of God calls up sweet, holy family love—where parents and children try to think of and to do God's will! The Sabbaths in such a home are foretastes of that unending Sabbath, where there are joys unspeakable and pleasures for evermore.

MAKING THE BEST OF IT.—Little Minnie, only three years old, to amuse a homesick cousin, who was visiting at her house, brought out her choicest playthings. Among these was a tiny trunk, with bands of gilt paper for straps—a very pretty toy; but Freddie bent the lid too far back, and it broke off. He did not mean to do this; and when he saw what he had done he was frightened, and began to cry. Then dear little Minnie, with her own eyes full of tears, said:

"Never mind, Freddie; just see what a cunning little cradle the top will make!"

That was certainly a great deal better than fretting. She made the best of it.—Children's Hour.

Nitrate of Soda as a Manure.

M. Barral, an eminent chemist, has contributed an interesting paper to the Central Agricultural Society of France, on the subject of nitrate of soda as a manure. It is scarcely a year since this substance has been introduced into France for agricultural purposes, and only one hundred and fifty thousand quintals have been used. The nitrate comes principally from Peru. Chili sends but little of it to Europe; only the fifth part of the total consumption coming from that country. The chief center of the Peruvian nitrate of soda industry is at La Noria. The mineral is treated there, to extract the lye, which is submitted to evaporation, and supplies the nitrate, which is also called the saltpeter of Iquiqui. For a long while the transport from the mines to the coast was effected by mules, but at present a railway is employed to convey a portion of the stone. The national wealth of Peru in this material is almost inculculable. The province of Tara Paca has deposits extending for some hundreds of miles, and many feet in thickness, so that it is impossible to anticipate the time when the deposits will be exhausted. If the extent of these nitrates is compared with the rich guano deposits in the Chincha Islands, as well as with other beds, the quantity in which is almost daily decreasing, it will be easy to understand that not only does an immense interest attach itself to the nitrate, both as regards the national wealth of Peru and its effect upon agriculture.

The Apple-Twig Borer.

A small beetle has been found to considerable extent of late years boring into the stems of young apple-trees. It is the apple-twig borer. Walsh says of it: "Unlike the two common borers of the apple-tree, it is only in the perfect beetle state that this insect attacks the apple, and usually it is the twigs of good-sized trees that it preys on, boring in just above a bud, and working downward through the pith in a cylindrical burrow, for the space of one or two inches. The male is distinguished from the female by having two little thorns projecting from the hind end of the body, and both males and females are found in these burrows, and always with their heads downward, showing that they bore the hole not in the larva state, like other borers, but in perfect beetle state. Neither can they bore these holes as a breeding-place for their larvæ; for no larvæ have ever been found therein. Evidently, therefore, they must bore them as a means of supplying themselves with food, which we should also infer from the fact of both sexes occurring therein in about equal numbers. With insects, as a general rule, it is only the female that labors for the well-being of her future family."

AN EXCELLENT VARNISH FOR HARNESS.—Procure one-half or one pound of gum shellac, according to the quantity desired; break the scales fine, and put them in a jug or bottle, and good alcohol sufficient to cover the gum; cork tightly, and place where it will keep warm. In about two days, if shaken frequently, the gum will be dissolved and ready for use. If the liquid appears as thick as thin molasses add more alcohol. To one quart of varnish add one ounce of good lamp-black and an ounce of gum camphor. Such varnish will not render the leather hard, but will keep the harness from becoming soaked with water, and the surface clean and neat for a long time. A coat of it will effectually prevent the oil in the leather from soiling one's hands. Nothing is better to render a farmer's boots waterproof than an occasional coat of this leather varnish.

PARTRIDGE PIE.—Two braces of partridges are required to make a handsome pie; truss them as for boiling; pound in a mortar the livers of the birds, a quarter of a pound of fat bacon and some shred parsley; lay part of this forcemeat at the bottom of a raised crust, put in the partridges, add the remainder of the forcemeat and a few mushrooms; put some slices of bacon fat on the top, cover with a lid of crust, and bake it for two hours and a half. Before serving the pie remove the lid, take out the bacon, and add sufficient rich gravy and orange juice. Partridge pie may also be made in a dish in the ordinary way.

RIPENING PEARS.—Josiah Hoopes, of Pennsylvania, says all that is necessary will be to spread a blanket on the floor of a cool room, and thinly and evenly place the fruit on the floor. A second blanket must be spread over them, and in a short time the effect of this treatment will be apparent in the most golden Bartletts and rich, ruddy-looking Seckles imaginable. Pears perfected in this manner rarely have the mealiness of their naturally-ripened companions, nor do they prematurely decay at the core, as when left on the tree.

DR. HALL says that it ought to be extensively known that ordinary boiled rice, eaten with boiled milk, is one of the best remedies known for any form of loose bowels. Its efficacy is increased if it is browned like coffee, and then boiled and eaten at intervals of four hours, taking no other food or liquid whatever; its curative virtue is luteusified if no milk is taken with it and the patient will keep quiet in a warm bed; then it becomes an almost infallible remedy.

TO DESTROY THE CABBAGE WORM. I have been entirely successful, during the past season, with the following: Diluted mackerel brine applied on and around the plants three or four times per week until the cabbages begin to head. In my garden all that I treated in this way made good, sound heads, and others in the same patch were destroyed.—Correspondent of Rural New Yorker.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in large-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

WANTED MEN WHO WANT TO MAKE Money.—Here is an opportunity for making money rarely presented in a lifetime. We have got the best and surest-selling article ever invented, that every housekeeper buys on sight. It is a small Furnace, weighing only six pounds, that can be used with or without a stove. It will fit in the holes of any sized stove or range, and will do as much work with one quart of fuel—charcoal, chips, coke, corncobs, wood or soft coal—as can be done on any stove with one-half bushel. It will boil, broil, roast, toast, bake and stew. It is the best flat-iron heater in the world. Its economy in saving fuel is marvelous. You have no smoke, gas or heat in the room. It sells the year round. Retail price only $2. Thousands are sold every week. Any man with a small capital can clear from $20 to $50 per day by owning the right of any good county, and a whole State is of incalculable worth to a man of enterprise. We will send a sample Furnace to any part of the United States on receipt of $2. Address, for circular,

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The weather has been mild and pleasant, with light showers on Tuesday afternoon. Nothing of any importance has transpired with regard to the crops.

The river is 11 feet 3 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the fourteenth instant:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... | 21,713 |
| Lake | | 121 |
| Arkansas | | 1,939 |
| Mobile | | 1,431 |
| Texas | | 1,291 |
| Total | | 26,495 |

On Saturday the market opened inanimate and continued quiet throughout the day, operations being restricted by buyers claiming concessions which factors would not admit, as well as by the poor assortment offering, the sales summing up 4,000 bales. Prices closed without any quotable variation, the better qualities continuing firm at previous rates, and the lower grades being rather easier, without any marked falling off. On Monday, notwithstanding the favorable influence of an advance of ⅛@¼ ₱ cent. in foreign exchange, prices exhibited no quotable improvement, except for low middling and strict low middling, which, being in active demand and moderate supply, ruled ⅛c. more in favor of factors. The poorer qualities continued neglected and heavy, but without any marked variation. The sales summed up 5,100 bales. On Tuesday the market was quiet throughout the day, with a moderate demand, resulting in sales of 4,750 bales, at firm prices for low middling and the better grades, while the poorer qualities were unsteady and easier. Good ordinary sold at 18c., with very little to be had at less, strict good ordinary at 18⅛@⅛c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 18⅝c., low middling at 18⅞@19c., strict low middling at 19⅛, 19⅛@19½c., and middling to strict middling at 20@20⅛c. Some authorities quoted average low middling at 18⅞@19⅛c., and strict at 19⅛@19½c., showing the unusually wide extremes of ⅜c. At the close there were several offers pending within a fraction of the asking rates of the factors, who, if they had given way, might have materially increased the day's business.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 794,627 bales, against 727,244 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 398,386 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 154,010 to Great Britain, of 39,409 to France, and of 125,362 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

|---|---|
| Low ordinary | 14⅜ @ 15½ |
| Ordinary | 16⅛ @ 17 |
| Good ordinary | 17⅜ @ 18⅝ |
| Low middling | 18⅝ @ 19⅜ |
| Middling | 19⅝ @ 19⅞ |
| Strict middling | 20⅛ @ 20⅜ |
| Good middling | 20⅝ @ 20⅞ |

SUGAR.—The market has been dull, with the tendency in prices in favor of buyers. The receipts on Saturday and Monday embraced 1,300 hhds., which were partially sold at 5@6⅛c. for inferior, 7@7½c. for common, 7⅞@8c. for fair, 8⅛@8½c. for good fair, 8⅞@9c. for fully fair, 9⅛c. for fully fair to prime, 9½c. for prime, 9¾c. for strictly prime, 10⅛c. for choice, 10½c. for fancy, 11c. for seconds, 10⅜@11c. for yellow clarified, and 11½@11⅝c. for white clarified.

MOLASSES.—On Tuesday 208 bbls. were received. The demand was good and the supplies sold at 55c. for common and cistern bottom, 60c. for fair, and 65c. for prime. A cargo of Cuba sold to a refiner on private terms, and a cargo remains unsold.

CORN.—On Tuesday there were sales of 1,250 sacks, of which 250 mixed at 78c., and 1,000 sacks choice white at 90c. ₱ bushel.

OATS.—On Saturday the sales comprised 300 sacks at 58c. ₱ bushel, but on Monday the sales embraced 1,500 sacks, in lots, at 55@56c. ₱ bushel, with a good supply on the landing.

BRAN.—The market has been dull at unchanged prices since our last review. On Tuesday 150 sacks sold at $1.40 ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Monday 100 bbls. new mess sold, in two equal lots, at $15 ₱ bbl., but on Tuesday better supplies weakened the market, and prices gave way about 50c. ₱ bbl. New mess was offering at $14.75 ₱ bbl., and 192 bbls. sold on private terms. New mess was retailing at $15.25@15.50, and old at $14.25@14.50 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—Sides have been in very light supply, and the market is bare of shoulders. The demand was good. On Saturday 25 casks clear sides sold at 9¼c., and on Monday 175 casks, in lots, at 7¾c. for shoulders, to arrive, 8¾c. for clear rib sides, on the spot, and 8¼@9c. ₱ lb. for clear sides.

HAMS.—The market has continued in good supply and unaccountably dull, prices ruling at 12½@13c. ₱ lb. for sugar-cured, as in brand, showing a further decline. On Saturday 30 tierces choice sugar-cured sold, in lots, at 13c. ₱ lb. On Monday 150 tierces sold, in lots, at 12½@13c. ₱ lb.

LARD—Is in fair supply and dull. On Monday 112 tierces packers' sold at 8c. ₱ lb. There were other sales not reported. Tierce is quoted at 8c. for packers', and 8¼c. for refined; keg 9¼c. ₱ lb.

DRY SALT MEAT.—The supplies have been small, with very little or none in first hands. The demand was good. On Saturday 1,700 shoulders, loose, and 25 casks shoulders sold at 6½c., and 19 casks at 6¾c. for shoulders, and 8c. ₱ lb. for clear rib sides.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 114½@114⅝ (against 114⅝ at New York,) and closed at the opening rates (against 114¾ at New York.)

The sales of silver have been confined to limited retail transactions. American half dollars are quoted at 110@111, and Mexican dollars at 2 ₱ cent. premium in gold for new, and 3 ₱ cent. for old.

MORNING HYMN.

Now the shades of night are gone,
Brightly shines the morning sun;
Lord! may we be thine to-day;
Drive the shades of sin awny.

Keep our naughty passions bound;
Let us in thy ways be found;
Going out and coming in,
Keep us safe from every sin.

FOURIER.

The following is a sketch of his ersenal appearance and character-tics, taken from the Fortnightly eview:

He is described as a man rather ndor the usual height, with deli-te features and peonliarly ex-ressive countenance. His blue eyes ere brilliant when animated, and markable for mildness in repose. is light brown hair, changed by e into a silvery white, onciroled a rehead distingnished for the beau-of its form, its hoight and smooth-ess. In youth he is said to have en of a lovely and sarcastic hu-or, which he indulged in satirical rses and lampoons. But as he in-eased in years his conutenance ac-ired a cast of melancholy, and he s rarely seen to smilo. He became reticent as seldom to speak, ex-pt to answer a direct qnestion, hich he did as briefly as possible, d then relapsed into silence. When ne with a few intimate friends, wever, he wonld exponnd his ws with facility and eloqnence; s habitual pensiveness would van-, and the fire of enthusiasm re-dled in his eye. He generally nt about with his stick properly tched as a measnring rule, and ald take the dimensions of any ilding that struck him. He would p suddenly in the street, or in middle of a conversation pull t his note-book, and make an ry of whatever brilliant idoa had ssed through his hrain. Ho lived nest entirely alone, and in his itary walks he wonld talk aloud d declaim with energy to himself, abit that led him not unfrequently e mistaken for a lunatic. Very erent estimates have bcon formed the extent of his knowledge. In th he read much, and collected reat deal of crude information n many snbjects. To this he ded his own specnlations, which was apt at times to snbstitute for re positive knowledge. In later ars he read very little, exoept the rrent newspapers or magazine lit-atnre. His time was principally voted to writing and the elabora-n of his own theories. It was his bit to begin work early in the rning, and to go for a short walk r every two hours' application. works are very long; they are ed with strange words and end-s repetitions. They affect extreme entific precision, and tables of alysis abonnd. They are adorned occasional hieroglyphics, and by ters or numerals turnod upside wn. They are curious to look at, t most tiresome to read. Fonrier oke in pnblic with clearness and e, but without any pretension to torical effect. He was very fond animals, and especially of cats. e had an intenso horror of cater-llars, the emblem, he said, of civil-tion, and wonld not, on their ac-nnt, sit npon the grass. Ho onco held a spider upon the ceiling er his bed. He jumped up and, most naked, rnshed frantically out the house to implore assist-ce to remove the terriblo appari-n. He was a kind and gonerons end. He would take any amonnt trouble to perform a service; d ont of his own small income was able to do many works of nn-tentatious charity. He was never rried. It was said that ho was uliarly fickle in his attachments, d, notwithstanding the conjecture his biographer to the contrary, may doubt if ever his heart had n touched by the purifying in-ence of love.

In the Dublin Exchequer Court, a days ago, a question arose as to w soon the Irish take to whisky-inking. "At what age," asked the gs of a witness, "do people be-to drink in your part of the untry?" Whereto replied Serjeant rmstrong: "I can answer that, my d. As soon as they are able to k." The witness answered: "At sges, my lord." The judge: hat is just what I was afraid of. says they begin at all ages." rjeant Armstrong: "Oh, yes, my d, I know a part of the country ere, on the day a child is born, people bleed it in the feet and ert whisky."

Land in England.—At a sale of tes in England, lately, farms re sold at $230 por nore. These re rented at $5 per acre, or less n 2½ per cent. on the value. Few farms in New York or Penn-sylvania could be purchased or rent-for any less.

Shanghai is the stronghold of Ro-anism in China. Their adherents in anghai are estimated at eight ousand.

SCIENTIFIC.

Mr. Griffitus, of the Bombay School of Arts, in oompany with a few of his students, is about to visit the remarkable caves of Elephanta for the purpose of copying the beautifnlly painted decorations which still cling to the walls, in spite of damp, neglect and age. These caves are on a small island in the harbor of Bombay, and contain some very interesting Indian antiquities.

Nature publishes a letter from Edward Whymper respecting the results of his explorations the past season in Greenland, particularly about Waigat strait and Disco Island. The season has been nnusually favorable for exploration. By Jnly 6 the snow had entirely disappeared to the height of two thonsand feet above the sea. He discovered a river, with a volume equal to that of the Rhone as it leaves Lake Genoa, traversing north Greenland for a hundred miles. It is not a torrent, as generally snpposed, and the water is fresh about half a mile from its mouth. At Umoniak Fiord Mr. Whymper climbed a mountain six thousand feet high, with a theodolite, accompanied by five Greenlanders. The highest group of Greenland mountains are located in this neighborhood, and he found their altitndes to average two thonsand feet more than had been supposed heretofore. With a good baseline, many great improvements were made in the maps. He also brought away large collections of both living and fossil plants.

Curiosities of Motion.—Is any change prodnced on a man by a change in the velocity of his motion ronnd the axis of the earth? If a dwellor in latitnde sixty degrees were snddenly to change his residence to the eqnator he wonld donble his volocity. At latitude sixty degrees he travels round with the earth at the rate of five hundred miles an honr; at the eqnator, one thousand miles an honr. Again, at latitude seventy-two degrees the Greenlander is lazily carried round one hundred and thirty miles an honr; while the man at the North Pole calmly revolves once in twenty-four honrs. Of course the motion is nnfelt, because all things move togother; bnt the change from the tropical to an arctic climate is so great that it may possibly prodnce physical or mental effects of which we are as yet unconscious. Of course the steering of a ship from north to sonth must be sensibly affected by the constant acceleration from west to east. On the long railways of Russia, too, it is said that the rails are uniformly more worn on one side than on the other, in oonsequence of this force.—Nature.

The phosphorescence of the sea is due to two kindred causes, one being the light emitted by certain living creatnres which have the faculty of becoming luminous—a faculty incidental to the discharge of their vital functions; the other being the light given out by the bodies of the same creatures while undergoing the process of decomposition. Which of these exercises the larger share in illuminating the ocean is yet uncertain, and the point is not, perhaps, very material; but what is more to the purpose is that among the former are to be found three distinct genera, subdivided, in the case of infusoria, into almost infinite species. These three genera are the Acalephæ (Madnsæ and Cyaneæ families) among zoophites, certain mollusca and infusoria. Of the Acalephæ, or sea-nettles, the Mammaria scintillans is the most remarkable. It is, when fully grown, no larger than a pin's head, and yet has a luster which makes it almost as brilliant as the brighest star. It is more especially an inhabitant of the tropics, and is a great contributor to the glory which the sea in those latitudes has over the waters of colder zones.

The Latest Fossil Man.—Discoveries of human fossil remains are apt to be subjects of much difference of opinion among the learned; but the last instance of the kind is apparently an exception to the rule. This was the discovery, early in the year, by Dr. E. Riviere, of a human skeleton, in a cavern near the railroad from Mentone to Vintimille, in northern Italy. The cave is one of a series in compact limestone; and the limestone quarries near by have furnished immense quantities of bones and teeth of bears, gigantic stags, hyenas, rhinoceros, etc. The skeleton was found, in a remarkable state of preservation, beneath a layer of earth several yards in thickness. The legs were crossed and the arms folded over the head, as in the attitude of sleep. Many small sea shells and deers' teeth, pierced as if for a necklace, were close to the skull, and numerous stone implements (scrapers, chisels, axes) and bone needles surrounded the body. The bones of animals were also found with it, but not in the earth above it. It is generally held to be a case of sepulture of a person of some consequence of the stone age, according to an article on the subject by Prof. J. Morris, in the Popular Science Review.

SALT-WELLS IN KENTUCKY.

Where the coal measures are tilted so as to bring what are generally known as veins eleven and twelve near to the surface, by sinking a shaft ten to twelve hundred feet a strong brine is nsnally struck, which follows the withdrawal of the anger nearly to the snrface, and sometimes overflows. These salt-bearing gritstones yield in some parts of the country from one hundred thonsand to one million bushels of salt annually. From this source the wells on Goose creek, Clay county, draw their supply of brines. Seven of these wells yield annually one hundred and thirty thousand bushels. A company of men bought a farm near Brandenburg for oil purposes. A shaft was sunk and some oil obtained, bnt the supply soon gave ont. The well was bored deeper, but no more oil was found. To save a portion of the investment the farm was resold to its former owner at abont one-third or one-half what he had received for it. The well had long been neglected, bnt blowings had been heard from it, and some efflorescence was noticed on the ground in its vicinity. A tube was fitted into the top to supply the place of one length which had been taken away. A strong brine immediately began to pour forth, and with it a gas to such an extent that the brine can be evaporated by the combustion of the gas. The yield of the well seems to be increasing. It now furnishes fifteen barrels of salt a day, or abont twenty thousand bushels a year, at comparatively little expense. Besides the two reservoirs there are other sources of supply, producing brines of inferior quality, not usually profitable for working.—Home and School, Louisville, Kentucky.

God never lays more upon any one of his children than he will enable them to bear, and if thy strength be increased proportionally, it is all one for thee to lift a pound-weight or to lift a hundred pound-weight.—Elias Pledger.

THE VOX CELESTE,

possessing a peculiar and thrilling quality of tone; most pipe-like in its nature, and which can be used in many passages with charming effect.

The above Stops are in every case separate, and additional sets of reeds, are entirely distinct from the "Tremolo," which always accompanies them, and which is never perfect without them, and can all be brought at will into the full organ, adding greatly to its power and richness of tone.

They take pleasure in announcing to the musical public and the trade the valuable addition to their Organs of a most beautiful Solo Stop,

THE ÆOLINE.

It is an additional set of reeds, exquisitely voiced and ingeniously arranged in a separate wind-chest (patented September 13, 1870.) Its quality of tone is the most delicate and soft imaginable. It is capable of the greatest variety of effects in combination with their other stops, the improved VOX HUMANA in particular. It has elicited the warmest encominms from all organists and musicians who have examined it. It is perfectly simple in its construction, and they predict for it the highest degree of success. Its charming effects, especially when used in connection with their improved styles of cases, can but be appreciated by every musician.

IMPROVED CASES, ETC.

By the construction of these Cases the quality of tone in their Instruments has been greatly improved, every facility for the comfort and convenience of the performer has been provided for, and the effect of their beautiful and graceful design is such as to entirely obviate the disagreeable boxy appearance which has been for so long a time an unpleasant characteristic of the Reed Organ.

In addition to the above improvements, attention is called to

With every advantage that extensive capital can command, they are determined that the Organs of their manufacture

GOOD NIGHT.

Good night, dear child, good night,
Sleep in thy little bed,
So soft, so lily-white,
Beneath thy golden head.
Good night.

Like sunshine on a flower,
Thy tresses stray adown
The pillow in a shower,
And gild thy snowy gown.
Good night.

Feet, restless as the rain,
Your patter dies away
Till morning wakes again,
And calls you out to play.
Good night.

Good night, dear child, good night,
Breathed is thy evening prayer;
Thy watch of angels bright
Comes through the silent air.
Good night.

We yield thee to their care
Until the shadows flee,
Content that they should share
In our felicity.
Good night.

OUR LADY OF LOURDES.

BY PROF. WILLIAM WELLS.

The revival of pilgrimages to sacred shrines, in various parts of France, is an incongruity so antagonistic to the enlightened spirit of the age that, were the accounts not well attested, we could scarcely believe in their existence. But the fact is so patent that men, women and children, the ignorant and the intelligent, the high and the low, from the dull and stolid peasantry of the rural districts to the noble ladies of certain fractions of the Parisian world, have all joined in this veritable fetich-worship of the age, that we must accept it, and mourn over the bigotry and credulity of poor human nature.

The circumstance has caused more than usual excitement in the intelligent circles from the fact that the various political factions of the day have tried to find their account in these strange events. That the Jesuits work the secret springs, and are the chief actors in the drama, there is no doubt, and they do this in the double interests of the church and the legitimists; for the latter have endeavored, by various means, such as the introduction of the Bourbon lilies on the banners of the pilgrims, to incite an enthusiasm in favor of the Bourbon claimant to the throne, the Count of Chambord, calling himself Henry the Fifth. As a result of these machinations we hear of attacks of the political radicals on the processions of the pilgrims, and depositions of prefects for not sufficiently protecting the pious devotees in their fanaticism.

A remarkable feature in this case is the certainty with which we can trace the history and establishment of the new shrine, and, by documentary evidence, prove each step.

A French author, by the name of Lasserre, has published a little book, entitled Our Lady of Lourdes, giving a clear and succinct history of the affair. This has already passed through some fifty editions, and the author boasts of the following certificate from the Pope, directed personally to him: "Accept our congratulations, dear son, that you have succeeded in proving and ratifying the latest appearance of the gracious mother of God, in such a manner that the opposition of human malice to divine mercy has only resulted in bringing out the fact into greater certainty and clearness."

We will endeavor to give concisely the substance of the story, which, as a recital of facts, seems almost too absurd for belief. For a long time the Jesuits cherished the darling purpose of declaring the dogma of the immaculate conception; and when the ground was thought to be prepared, Pius the Ninth announced it to the world as a dogma of the church. It was coolly received, however, by the great body of Catholics, and especially in France, just where the holy father was most desirous of seeing the effort a success. It was necessary to do something to stir up the peasant world, and officious servants resolved on having a miracle to testify to the dogma.

In the highlands of the Pyrenees there is a miserable, dirty, crooked little town by the name of Lourdes. Its inhabitants are noted for stupidity and ignorance, and do not even speak French, but a dialect of the mountains so coarse and unfinished that it is difficult for any one else to understand them. The priests of this town, most probably supported by the neighboring Bishop of Tarbes, undertook the task in the person of a young and sickly girl, both in mind and body, who discarded the plays of girlhood for certain superstitious prayers, under the teachings of a priest who was preparing for her first communion. One day she went, with two sisters, to a certain rocky cleft, known as the grotto, to gather drift-wood, and while there declared that she had seen a beautiful angelic form, resembling her conception of the Virgin, who simply demanded that a shrine be there erected to her.

The sickly girl became, of course, an object of wonder; and the priests pretended at first to have no confidence in her until she could induce the apparition to perform some miracle. This came in due time, in the form of a fountain gushing from a rock, whose waters would cure the blind, the lame, etc. The next step was for the angelic form to declare its identity, and on its seventeenth appearance, at the earnest entreaties of the girl, according to the Annals of Lourdes, the fair form raised its eyes, extended its arms, and, with eyes shining like the glory of heaven, declared: "I am the immaculate conception!" This did the work. The shrine was built; and two years ago, according to Lasserre, no less than two millions of francs had been expended on it. Hundreds of thousands have visited it yearly; and the loyal "Fraternity of the Immaculate Conception" numbers multitudes of the high and low in France.

During the war it was, of course, comparatively neglected; but last summer and autumn an unseen force gave renewed impulse to pilgrimages, and very soon the white banner of reaction was seen waving in companionship with the papal standard. And this told the story. To increase the enthusiasm, another little book has appeared in Lourdes, entitled the Key of Paradise. It is so incredibly silly and blasphemous that no description can excel itself, from which we give an extract: "Our Savior and Redeemer, Jesus Christ, after he had heard the prayers of those pious souls, appeared to them and said: 'Observe, O my sisters, that I shed for you in the Garden of Gethsemane sixty-two thousand two hundred tears and drops of blood. I received on my sacred body one thousand six hundred and sixty-seven blows, and on my tender cheeks one hundred and ten slaps; on the neck one hundred and seven; on the back three hundred and eighty; on the breast thirty-three, etc. * * * They slapped my mouth thirty times, and spit into my precious face thirty-two times; thirty times they knocked me down, and thirty-eight times dragged me around by my beard. The crown of thorns made three hundred and three holes in my head, and I sighed for your salvation nine hundred groans. From Judgment Hall to Calvary I made three hundred and twenty steps, burdened with the cross.'"

Those who repeat this roll of blasphemy for forty days, with added prayers on the rosary, will receive five acts of mercy—complete absolution from and forgiveness of all their sins, relief from the torments of purgatory, and if they die before their time they will receive all pardon as if they had finished their work, and so on.

This is the Catholicism of France of the present day, which the Jesuit fathers would cherish and encourage by pilgrimages to Lourdes and other shrines, in the vain hope thus to restore the power of the Pope in both France and Italy by the fanaticism of the peasantry. And the noble ladies of the legitimist quarters of Paris carry with them such prayers and guide-books when they undertake their pilgrimages to the shrine of the immaculate conception. And these beastly absurdities are kindly alluded to by a man who still hopes to be King of France, when, in a public proclamation addressed to the nation, he says: "France is awakening and strengthening itself by a great act of faith." One may well ask if the men who sustain this enormity are not mad with fanatical delusions.—Western Christian Advocate.

THE WHEATEN LOAF.—Good wheat bread and butter is the staff of civilized life. Take away wheat bread and butter from our families for a few generations, and who is prepared to say that civilization would not glide easily to a state of barbarism? There is sound philosophy in this suggestion, because there is no other kind of human food that is so admirably adapted to the development of the human frame, including a noble brain, as good wheat bread. Civilization has seemed to keep pace with the production of wheat, and refined society the world over has seemed to exist coeval with the wheaten loaf.

We find the lowest order of intelligences standing on a potato. Only one step above this class another order is found on a hoe-cake. One degree above this we meet with the class that has risen in the scale of being as high as it is possible for mortals to rise on a pan-cake. Head and shoulders above all of these classes we find the highest order of intelligences, with large and well-developed brains and noble characters, standing securely on their wheaten loaf. No other food can excel the wheaten loaf, because it furnishes more and better material for the human brain than any other food.

NEVER mind where you work; care more about how you work. Never mind who sees, if God approves.—Spurgeon.

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

Is extended to the world to place before the public a better Cough or Lung remedy than

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.

IT HAS NO EQUAL. Read what well-known Druggists of Tennessee say about Allen's Lung Balsam:

SPRINGFIELD, TENN., Sept. 13, 1872.

GENTLEMEN: Please ship us six dozen Allen's Lung Balsam. We have not a bottle in the store. It has more reputation than any Cough Medicine we have ever sold. Have been in the drug business twenty-seven years. We mean just what we say.

Very truly yours, HART & TANNER.

What the Doctors Say.

Drs. Wilson & Ward, physicians and druggists, write from Cedarville, Tennessee: "We purchased Allen's Lung Balsam, and it sells rapidly. We are practicing physicians, as well as druggists, and take pleasure in recommending a great remedy, such as we know this to be."

Physicians do not recommend a medicine which has no merit. What they say about Allen's Lung Balsam can be taken as fact. Let all afflicted test it at once, and be convinced of its real merits.

It is harmless to the most delicate child. It contains no Opium in any form.

Directions accompany each bottle.

BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

WE DESIRE TO CALL THE ATTENTION of our friends and the public generally to our large and well-assorted Stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the defective condition of the ordinary bridge and

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—Senate.—The bill reported by Mr. Carpenter, from the special committee on Louisiana matters, declares the election held on the fourth of last November to be null and void, and reinstates in office the State officers and Legislature who held possession at that time. It further requires a new election to be held for State officers and members of the Legislature on the second Tuesday of next May, and directs William B. Woods, United States circuit judge for Louisiana, to proceed to Louisiana and appoint two citizens of different politics to be State registrars, who shall cause a new registration to be made of all the legally qualified voters of the State, commencing March 18 and ending ten days prior to the date of the election; the said registrars to appoint two supervisors of registration for each parish, except Jefferson and Orleans, for which a greater number are to be appointed, and in each parish registrars are to be divided in politics.

The President is empowered to employ military and naval forces on application of the Governor of the State or United States Circuit Court to carry out the provisions of this act and enforce judicial process. Two hundred thousand dollars is appropriated to defray the expenses of registration and election.

Mr. Vickers, of the Committee on Commerce, asked that that committee be discharged from further consideration as to whether Congress had the power to regulate railroad rates on roads running through two or more States.

House.—The bill to adjust the war claims of 1812, wherein Virginia, Tennessee, Maryland, North Carolina and other States have claims aggregating three and five-eighths millions of dollars, was rejected—yeas, 90; nays, 148.

The resolution that a select committee be appointed to impeach Mr. Colfax for his part in the Credit Mobilier complications was defeated—yeas, 105; nays, 109. Messrs. Farnsworth, Porter, Stevens and Smith, Republicans, voted for the resolution.

Resolutions referring the testimony to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions to inquire whether the testimony warrants the impeachment of any officer, were adopted.

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 20.—The rain still continues. The immense rise in the river causes considerable apprehension.

Speaker Parsons and Representative Williams, colored, were arrested to-day by the United States marshal, on the affidavit of Mr. Hunter, charging them with conspiring to prevent an election of a senator on the second Tuesday after the organization of the Legislature. The parties are all Republicans. Parsons and Williams were released on bonds to appear on March 8 for trial, to which time Judge Busteed adjourned the United States court.

SELMA, Feb. 20.—The Alabama river is two inches above the July flood and still rising slowly.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—Whatever report the House Judiciary Committee may make regarding the impeachment of Colfax, it is certain they will not say the evidence is insufficient.

Want of time for the trial can be the only excuse to save him.

The President has abandoned his Southern tour, for the present at least. He thinks important public business to be transacted immediately after the adjournment of Congress would not justify his leaving Washington at the time fixed.

The Louisiana reports and evidence were printed to-day, and make eleven hundred pages.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The President has called an extra session of the Senate, to convene on the fourth of March.

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.—Four thousand of the United American Mechanics and thirteen councils of the American Protestant Association paraded the streets to-day. There were also other demonstrations.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—The President was at the capitol and had an interview with the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It is said that he urged action to relieve him of the responsibility for Louisiana. He made, it is said, no suggestions, but simply urged legislation.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—Mr. Trumbull is making a terribly denunciatory speech. The question comes up in a peculiar manner, not involving the points at issue, but under the agricultural college bill, the question being that no money should be given to Louisiana, to be held by the usurping government. The discussion will be long, and at present involves Kellogg's government, which Mr. Carpenter asserts, and Mr. Morton admits, in colloquy, could not stand five hours without Federal support; but the discussion will lead to no positive legislation. It is simply a declaration, and the issue is whether Louisiana shall be stricken from the States to which college money is given.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, Feb. 24.—The excitement is increasing, particularly among working men. Barricades are apprehended.

The Red Republicans are urging extreme measures.

The Carlists are operating and intriguing actively.

The army is dissatisfied. The Reactionists denounce the American minister as officiously active in Spanish politics.

Troops are hurrying to reinforce those operating against the Carlists.

The Carlists are burning the railway stations and bridges.

The fighting in the north is quite severe.

PARIS, February 25.—Advices from Spain received by leading bankers here represent the prospect as gloomy, and say families are leaving the capital and principal cities.

Preliminary elections for a new assembly will probably be held on the third of March, but the assembly will not meet until the twentieth of April.

The Duchess De La Torre, wife of Marshal Serrano, has gone abroad.

Report on the Louisiana Case.

The New York Herald special of February 19 gives a synopsis of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the Louisiana case. We give the concluding part of the report, as follows:

Your committee have prepared a bill which they believe will insure an honest election, and result in the establishment of a republican form of government in that State, and your committee recommend its passage.

We are aware that ordering an election in a State upon the ground that an election which has been held is void, for fraud, is an exercise of power which ought never to be undertaken by Congress without stern necessity. It will be said that if such a power resides in Congress it may be exercised improperly. This is true. But the same may be said of every power conferred on a government.

The people in adopting the constitution of the United States have seen fit to confer upon the general government authority to guarantee to each of the States a government, republican in form.

This undoubtedly confers the power to determine whether a particular State has a government, and, if so, whether it be republican in form. There is no doubt Congress might to-morrow, as a question of mere power, declare that the government of Massachusetts is not republican in form, and set up in its place a government which it might determine to be republican in form. This would of course be a great abuse of this power. When a judge has jurisdiction to decide a cause, he has as much power to decide it wrong as right, and an erroneous judgment is as valid as any other, unless it be vacated or reversed by competent authority.

In exercising this power Congress ought to act with great caution and prudence. The clamor usually raised by those who are defeated in an election ought not and would not be likely to induce Congress to interfere ordinarily. Even a government elected by fraud, but going quietly into the exercise of power, and submitted to by the great body of the people, may better be left to fill its brief term than be interfered with by Congress. But when the frauds committed are so glaring and widespread as to create public discontent in the State, and the organization of two rival governments threatening civil war, and it being manifest that neither government has been fairly elected, the existence of this power in the national government must be regarded as wise and statutory. It cannot be maintained that a prudent exercise of this power violates the rights of the States, because the States for their own protection and security have conferred the power upon the national government, and this government cannot refuse or neglect to exercise this power, in a proper case, without disregarding the obligation which the constitution has devolved upon it. And we think the melancholy condition of the people of Louisiana, who are substantially in a state of anarchy, makes it the duty of Congress to act in the premises; therefore your committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That there is no State government at present existing in the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That neither John Ray nor W. L. McMillen is entitled to a seat in the United States Senate, neither having been elected by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana.

BOARD OF HEALTH.—Smallpox in New Orleans.—A regular meeting of the Board of Health was held, Dr. C. B. White, president, in the chair, and Mr. J. S. Walton and Drs. Smythe, Hire, Russell and Mass being present.

The reports of the several sanitary inspectors of the city for the month of January were received and read. All these reports show a greater or less prevalence of smallpox in the city, and its slow but steady increase, particularly among the black people.

Dr. Russell, secretary of the board, submitted a statement showing that 87 cases of smallpox had been reported to the board since the tenth day of February, as follows: February 10, 10 cases; 11, 5 cases; 12, 5 cases; 13, 10 cases; 14, 0 cases; 16, 4 cases; 17, 13 cases; 18, 4 cases; 19, 9 cases; 20, 12 cases; 21, 6 cases. These cases are all in hospital, and more than nine-tenths of them are colored.

He also reported verbally that since the first day of January, 1873, there had been 97 deaths from smallpox in the city, of whom 80 were colored persons and 17 were white persons.

Domestic Habits of George Washington.

BY J. S. C. ABBOTT.

At the close of George Washington's illustrious administration, in 1796, he retired to Mount Vernon. In a letter to a friend he described the manner in which he there passed his time. He rose with the sun and made preparations for the business of the day.

"By the time I have accomplished these matters," he adds, "breakfast is ready. This being over, I mount my horse and ride round my farms, which employs me till it is time to dress for dinner; at which I rarely miss to see strange faces, come, as they say, out of respect to me. And how different is this from having a few friends at the social board. The usual time of sitting at table, a walk, and tea, bring me within the dawn of candle-light; previous to which, if not prevented by company, I resolve that as soon as the glimmering taper supplies the place of the great luminary, I will retire to my writing-table and acknowledge the letters I have received. Having given you this history of a day, it will serve for a year."

Washington was remarkable for his punctuality. It is said that whenever he made an appointment to meet Congress at noon, he almost invariably passed the door of the hall as the clock was striking twelve. His dining hour was four o'clock. He allowed five minutes for variation in timepieces, and then took his seat at the table, whether his guests had assembled or not. He would often say to late-comers:

"Gentlemen, we are punctual here. My cook never asks whether the company has arrived, but whether the hour has."

In the year 1789 he was in Boston, and appointed eight o'clock in the morning as the hour when he would set out to visit Salem. As the Old South clock was striking eight he was mounting his horse. A cavalry company in Boston had volunteered to escort him to Salem. Not expecting such punctuality, the company did not arrive in season. They put spurs to their horses and overtook Washington just as he was passing Charles river bridge. As the troops came clattering up, Washington said to their commander with a smile:

"Major, I thought you had been too long in my family not to know when it was eight o'clock."

Captain Pease wished to sell General Washington a beautiful span of horses. Five o'clock in the morning was the appointed hour when the general was to examine them at the stable. The captain arrived with his span at a quarter past five. The groom informed him that General Washington was there at five o'clock, but that he had left to meet other engagements. This was in Philadelphia. Captain Pease had to wait a week before he could get another opportunity to exhibit his span.—Christian Weekly.

Chinamen in the West.

The American Messenger gives the following interesting account of the efforts of four Christianized Chinamen, who are laboring as colporteurs of the American Tract Society in this country, and whose special aim is to bring their own countrymen to a knowledge of the saving influence of the gospel:

"Chen Chung, recently returned from China, labors among the foothills of the Sierras north of the Central Pacific railroad. Passing to his field he tarried in Sacramento, preached several times, and gathered his people into the school established there by the American Missionary Association. The teacher greatly appreciated this. As she speaks only English, the visit of this interpreter was as a flood of light. Spending a few days at Marysville, he was heartily welcomed by some whom he had formerly instructed in the way of life.

"Directly south of Chen Chung's field Ah Yeung Chak labors. He visits his countrymen in camps, mines, stores and shops, telling them of Jesus, and giving them some of the two hundred publications in Chinese with which he is supplied. His audiences, usually numbering from five to thirty, are much larger than that on the Sabbath.

"Ah For's field is Nevada. He describes a Sunday at a small mining town. An old Chinaman invited him to make his store his headquarters, and bore all his expenses. He preached to thirty-five in the back yard. Some were anxious to hear, he says, 'more than I could endure to talk;' but others had no interest. At the afternoon service, held in an eating-house, one old man asked many questions. He lived at a distance, and wanted books to carry home to read and give to those who, like him, had never heard of Jesus. At the evening service, held in a tailor-shop, two women were present. At Truckee, he says, 'the Chinamen made a high stand for me in the street, that I might preach where many could hear. One man was anxious to hear much. I talked and prayed a long time with him.

"Kung Lum continues to labor in Idaho and eastern Oregon.

"All tell one story: In every place they find some disposed to hear gladly, some indifferent, some who are offended and angered, but within they have a large measure of success, and may well claim the warm sympathy, the earnest prayers and the generous support of American Christians. The heathen are at our doors and the gospel is preached to them."

Prayer Meeting Bouquets.

My mother says she always enjoys that prayer meeting the best which is like a bouquet of fresh and fragrant flowers—no two alike, but all tied up together handsomely, and well arranged. She means the prayers, remarks and singing, I suppose. Those who make them, bring each a flower.

One brings something sweet to tell about the love of Christ, perhaps. That is like a sprig of mignonnette or heliotrope. Mother says she prefers these flowers, because of their fragrance. Then, confession of sin, and words of repentance and humility, may be the blue spring violets. Others bring sprays of green, fresh Bible truths, which they have collected—like wreaths of smilax, or delicate-leaved vines. Others contribute roses, carnations, lilies, or wall-flowers, may be; or some young Christian, perhaps, timidly offers a bud or two "from his own experience," as father says. And such a bouquet, well arranged, is the very best of meetings, my mother thinks.

If she is right about it, it seems to me I have attended meetings, occasionally, ornamented with considerably many burdocks and mullein-stocks—where even the hymns sounded as if their stems had all dried up. And I'm thinking some of the "brethren," as father calls them, by the way they speak in meeting, seldom try to pick any flowers to carry in before they start away from home. So they have to take up whatever they chance to find along the road on the way to meeting. Instead of something rare and sweet from their gardens, they pluck and bring in anything that happens to catch the eye. But father says they are "better than nothing to offer," after all; though fresh flowers are so much better, I think, than any common-place, withered ones—found lying in the rut, perhaps, where the one who first gathered them threw them down as he went along. If a flower's a flower, there's some choice in flowers, isn't there?

I wish they could just hear my mother once speaking of Jesus, and "talking religion" in her own way, as she does about home here; it's all white clover-blossoms and mignonnette to me! And when she sometimes steals into my chamber to pray, when she thinks I'm asleep, it's the sweetest white lily I ever saw, floating in the very smoothest cove of the river! Now, if such flowers could only be carried to the weekly prayer meeting a little oftener, I believe I should like to go better than I do.

Leg Theology.

Rev. J. D. Knox, of Topeka, Kansas, relates the following: Once upon a time two brothers, both members of the Pittsburg Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, desired to be sent to the same station in the "Smoky City." Richard, the oldest of the two, a small man, tough, studious, thoughtful, preached good sermons almost invariably, which he himself knew as well as others. He studied more than he visited, and his sermons contained more thought than unction. But James, not quite so intellectual, was more earnest and impassioned in his preaching, and withal a great visitor among his people, which rendered him very popular in his charge. Physically he was well adapted for this work, for he was tall and strong, and could make several "Sabbath day's journeys" any day outside of Sunday. James was sent to the coveted station, whereupon Richard demands of his presiding elder, Rev. Dr. W. Cox, the cause of this preference of the younger to the older. "Can I not preach as well, if not better, than my brother James?" "Yes," replied the honest elder, "but your brother has more leg theology than you have." Thus the matter rested. Years have passed. James has been universally successful in important stations, and while his pastoral theology is still equal to a large station, his enthusiasm increases, and his knowledge makes him a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. Richard is making a good presiding elder; but James is good for most any position. Brethren, get "leg theology." Stir yourselves. Brains without legs will fail to accomplish much. Give life to your books, especially God's book. "Visit from house to house," and take Jesus all the time.

TRUTH is a queen who may be said to inhabit her own excellence; who reigns invested with her own native splendor, and who is enthroned in her own grandeur, and upon her own felicity. This queen condescending to reign in the world, for the good of man, our Savior came down from above to establish her empire upon earth. Human reason is not consulted in the establishment of her empire. Relying on herself, on her celestial origin, on her infallible authority, she speaks and demands belief; she publishes her edicts and exacts submission; she holds out to our assent the sublime and incomprehensible union of the most blessed Trinity; she proclaims the God-man, and shows him to us extended on a cross, expiring in ignominy and pain, and calls upon human reason to bow down before this tremendous mystery.—Bossuet.

THERE is said to be a man in Cincinnati in possession of such a powerful memory that he is employed by the Humane Society to remember the poor.

THERE is a fine mine of lithographic stone in Talladega county, Alabama, which would be very valuable if properly developed.

How to Give and How to Accept.

MR. EDITOR: Soon after commencing my year's work at Louisiana Avenue church, to which I had been appointed by our late Conference, a friend in this city, who refuses to allow me to publish his name, offered to supply the Sunday school with our periodicals and song-books in this way: He would pay the subscription needed to supply all the increase of the school from that date in periodicals for the rest of the year. As soon as the school should double its attendance he would give a full set of our new song-book, the Emerald—that is, one for each pupil then in attendance. I submitted his proposition to the school, and they voted to accept it unanimously. The school was already well supplied in papers for the year, and would only need others as its numbers should increase. In thirty days we had occasion to send for thirty-seven additional papers, and now we are ready to receive the Emeralds that were to be given as when we doubled our attendance. I shall buy them before our next meeting; and to prove that we have not "packed" the school in order to get them, we would like to have some staunch Methodist to take us as we are, and renew the above offer. I believe that we can double again, and think we have the teachers and pupils to do it.

In justice to these, it behooves me to say that they have done all the work. Quite a number of new and competent teachers have offered their services, and we have room to redouble again. Who will pay for the papers and the Emeralds the second time this year on the same terms? Are there not some political and commercial reformers that are noisy about the regeneration of the State that could and should aid us?

The Bible is the foundation of our morality, and teaching it to the young strips corruption of her principal strength, and the elements of reform are the agencies that thus teach it. Through them we strip vice of those triumphs that of late have been so calamitous to honest men and disastrous to the State. The consciousness of promoting these is reward enough for my friend who has been so liberal, as well as the teachers and pupils who have accepted it, and will, I hope, make it efficient.

They all have my thanks, however, and shall have my prayers.

J. SHELTON WHITE, P. C.,
Louisiana Avenue Church.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Feb. 24, 1873.

Conference Minutes.

MR. EDITOR: There are a few errors in our recently-published Minutes which I wish to correct through the ADVOCATE. In my report, as treasurer of the Board of Missions of the Louisiana Conference, there is an omission, in the list of "credits," of this item: "Cards to be collected, of anniversary, $168." (See ADVOCATE of January 23.) As it is, the column foots up just this amount less than the figures given. This is not my mistake.

In the table of "miscellaneous collections" Baton Rouge is not named; but $800 for church repairs and $200 for parsonage reported from this station is credited to "Plaquemine and Grosse Tete." As we have no place in our blanks for "total collected for all purposes," I am at a loss to know where the secretary gets this item. For example, Carondelet street foots up $10,030.51. Now, taking all the reports from this church, as found in the Minutes, the sum falls far below this figure. I suppose that total includes sexton-hire, gas, coal, insurance, and indeed every item for which money was raised during the year, and that the pastor furnished the secretary with this aggregate. I don't object to such an item as "total collected"—rather like it—but think a plan should be adopted by which all the charges could have a full credit of this kind. According to this plan the report for Baton Rouge would be:

|---|---|
| Amount paid pastor | $1,600 00 |
| Collected for missions | 125 00 |
| Collected for superannuates, etc. | 84 00 |
| Collected for Bishops | 20 00 |
| Collected for Sabbath school | 84 75 |
| Collected for church repairs | 800 00 |
| Collected for parsonage | 200 00 |
| Collected for contingent expenses | 202 20 |
| Total collected for all purposes | $3,095 95 |

I think this correction and explanation due to this church and to myself. Yours, etc.,

A. E. GOODWYN.

The Monstrosity of Monstrosities.

MR. EDITOR: The doctrine of transubstantiation, as taught by the Roman Catholic Church, not only stultifies and renders worthless the human senses as means of evidence and information; but, sir, if it be true, the Lord God of heaven has revealed himself to man in prophecy and precept, amid the thunders of Sinai, the sweat of the garden, the blood of the cross, the gloom of the grave and the glory of the resurrection only to make the race of man a race of cannibals. If the bread and wine of the sacrament be the real body and blood of Jesus, and we eat thereof, we are nothing more, nothing less than cannibals; for 'tis cannibalism to eat human flesh and to drink human blood.

A Desirable Work.

The following extract from the Western Methodist is good news to us. We want just such a book as Bro. Patterson is preparing. The Western says:

Methodists expend large sums of money annually in building and repairing churches, and for the most part the work done is satisfactory—our new houses of worship are comfortable and attractive. But in too many instances they are seriously defective, offensive to good taste, as well as objectionable in other respects of greater importance. In some cases they have cost money far beyond their value. There is great need of a manual of church architecture suited to the genius of Methodism, which ought to be shown in our sacred buildings as well as in other forms. We are glad to announce that the Rev. W. M. Patterson, of the Memphis Conference, is preparing for the press a book of this kind—a treatise on churches, schoolhouses and parsonages. It is designed to furnish such information, including plans, drawings, specifications, contracts, etc., for each class of buildings, as our brethren need in carrying forward successfully these important interests of the church. This book, when published, will meet a long-felt and often-expressed want of Southern Methodism, and will, we think, give a fresh impetus to building, remodeling and repairing throughout the connection. The preparation of this work has been sanctioned by some of our Bishops and leading ministers and laymen—all, in fact, to whom the subject has been submitted. For our own part, we are free to say that we do not know any one so well qualified as Bro. Patterson to prepare a manual such as is proposed, and the work, we hope, will be ready for the press at an early day.

A Good Opportunity.

Last year the Summit District Conference resolved to raise funds to purchase a home for Rev. Joseph Nicholson, and a committee was appointed to carry the resolution into effect. We learn that Bro. Nicholson has a home in view at Ocean Springs, which will cost $1,500. Of this amount a generous friend has pledged $500, leaving $1,000 yet to be raised. Will the brethren of the Summit district and others now come forward and meet this balance? As you "have begun to be forward a year ago, now, therefore, perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have." Any money raised or contributed by that committee or by others, if forwarded to R. J. Harp, will be immediately applied to the payment of the $1,000. The property has been secured, and is now occupied by Bro. Nicholson, but this balance must be raised at an early day. The following are the gentlemen appointed on the committee by the Summit District Conference: V. J. Wroten, Robert Babington, John Ballard, William H. Tillery, R. K. Felder, David Metlee, James H. Muse, J. W. Sandell, C. S. Stewart and G. T. Vickers.

Full Credit.

MR. EDITOR: I wish my district to have full credit for all that it did last year for me. As our form of report does not cover all, permit me, through the ADVOCATE, to report as follows:

A ROMISH CATECHISM CORRECTED.—Keenan's Controversial Catechism, which was widely circulated in Ireland, under high ecclesiastical sanction, two or three years ago, had in its original form the following question and answer: "Question. Must not the Catholics believe the Pope in himself to be infallible? Answer. This is a Protestant invention; it is no article of the Catholic faith; no decision of the popes can oblige under pain of heresy, unless it be received and enforced by the teaching body—that is, by the bishops of the church." Since the promulgation of the dogma this catechism has been carefully altered, the questions on the same page being spread out so as to conceal the fact that one question and answer have been expunged. Only a few copies are in existence with the above quotation in them, the rest having been bought up and destroyed.

DEATH OF A MINISTER.—We announce, with sincere regret, that Rev. J. R. Danforth died of consumption, in the city of Macon, on the fourth of February. Our acquaintance with the deceased was not intimate, but sufficiently familiar to satisfy us of his deep humility and profound piety. He was one of the earliest graduates of Emory College. He traveled for several years as a member of the Georgia Conference, but has devoted his life mainly to teaching and the labors of a local preacher. His end was perfect peace.—Southern Christian Advocate.

OBEDIENCE.

"The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?"

Do ye not know, do ye not feel,
How much of earthly taint
Lingers around the human heart,
And makes the spirit faint?

How many a foolish, wrong desire
Doth lead the mind astray,
In the wide search for happiness
Far from the narrow way?

And even when the light of joy
Is beaming o'er the heart,
How few are guided by its rays
To choose the better part?

No! we forget, when all around
Is smooth and bright and fair,
The Being who bestows the good,
And makes us all his care.

Ay! oftentimes forget, until
He who is wise and just Sends down his messengers of grief
To prove our love and trust.

Then not for us—oh! not for us
To say what should be given,
By him who knows how much we need,
To turn our hearts to heaven.

Repentance.

MR. EDITOR: How often have we heard sage and reverend expounders of holy writ assert that repentance is "godly sorrow." Let us see if this be so. When we dive into the depths of research we find quite true an old adage which goes somewhat thus: "Doctors will differ." Doctors of divinity do most assuredly differ, and that widely too, on the subject of repentance.

Mr. Wesley says that it is "conviction or self-knowledge," and evidently makes "godly sorrow" succeed this conviction.—Sermon on Mark 1, 15, 11, 1-7.

Mr. Watson says: "Taken in a religious sense, it signifies conviction of sin and sorrow for it." Thus we see that he makes it consist of conviction and godly sorrow together.—See Biblical Dictionary on the word repentance.

Dr. Ralston makes repentance consist of "godly sorrow" and reformation, "godly sorrow" being the first and reformation the second part of it.—Elements of Divinity, page 391.

Dr. George Smith says of evangelical repentance that it "results from a 'godly sorrow.'" However, the doctor's language is a little obscure on this point.—Elements of Divinity, page 291.

Dr. William Winans, formerly of our Conference, is very clear on this subject, and, we think, most conclusively shows that repentance is neither conviction nor "godly sorrow," but the result of both. It must therefore be reformation, according to him.—Discourses, page 498.

Here are the schemes of five theologians of our own church, and nearly all are different in their very nature. Two—Drs. Smith and Winans—agree, or at least seem to. Now comes the question: "Who is right and who is wrong?" Let us examine these schemes in the light of reason and the more glorious light of revelation.

1. Repentance is not conviction, Mr. Wesley's dictum to the contrary notwithstanding. Conviction is a realization of the wickedness, extreme wickedness, of a man's own nature. He, the silly slave of satan, with his moral vision dimmed by inherent corruption, and still further blinded by the glaring scintillations of joy-promising indulgence, has wandered recklessly on down the broad highway of sin, which winds along the crumbling brink, descending down to hell eternal. Although damnation's hissing billows of flame have long rolled angrily beneath his feet, he has seen them not. Although the dread Cimmerian future, with its ghostly horrors, oft portended, has been lying before him, the dark and lowering cloud has been hid by the glare of indulgence. Thus he has been blindly rushing on down toward hell, until now the Spirit of God, operating through the power of the word or the thunder of the gospel, awakens him to a realization of his true condition. Now he turns his eyes from the dazzling glare of vice and gazes at himself.

"O wad some power the giftie gie us
To see ourse'l's as ithers see us."

He sees himself as others see him, yea, as God sees him, just as he is—a vilely-polluted sinner, just fit for the "damnation of hell." Hell beneath him yells yawningly, and hisses hungrily for him—its rightful prey—while the lowering clouds of vengeance divine are spread above him. Sin is so black, his nature so polluted, and his mount of crimes so towering that he keenly realizes the awful extremity of his condition. This is conviction, but not repentance; for many have gone thus far, and yet were never saved. This is the work of God in us by his eternal Spirit. If this were repentance it were folly to exhort men to repent, as the word of the all-wise God often does, for it would be exhorting them to do what it were impossible for them to do. It would be indeing men to attempt to do what God alone can do. Conviction is not repentance; however, it is an indispensable antecedent thereto.

2. Repentance is not godly sorrow. This is always preceded by conviction. It is a deep and heartfelt sorrow for sin, arising from an earnest abomination thereof, together with a consideration of the goodness of God. He sees that sin has brought him into this awful condition. He considers sin as his enemy, and most earnestly abominates the monster. He considers the goodness of God, to whom sin has made him so ungrateful. He earnestly sorrows that he has so vilely offended so beneficent a God. Then it is that his eyes are bathed with floods of grief, and his heart, all anguish-torn, breaks forth, in the language of apostasy to the oft-rejected "Spirit of Life:"

"I hate the sins that made thee mourn,
And drove thee from my breast."

Then he is truly a mourner, but not necessarily a penitent. I like the old term mourner, for we know what we assert to be true when we say a man is a mourner. But when we say he is a penitent we are not so sure of it, by any means. This is what Mr. Wesley calls "suitable affection," and such it most certainly is. But this is not repentance. Dr. Winans very truly says: "Unless cause and effect are identical, unless the agent and his work be the same thing, or unless St. Paul either misunderstood or misrepresented the matter, 'godly sorrow' is neither in whole nor in part the repentance required in the gospel, for he expressly declares, 'Godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation, not to be repented of.'"—Discourses, page 498.

If, as Dr. Ralston contends, "godly sorrow" is a part of evangelical repentance, or "repentance to salvation," as St. Paul styles it in Second Corinthians vii, 10 (and what have we to do with any other kind?) then a part of repentance "worketh repentance," or the whole of it. If a part works the whole—as the whole is composed of all the parts, none left out—then, as a matter of course, that part works itself; and if this be so, cause and effect are identical, and the grand foundation of all philosophy is overturned. But the doctor tries, it seems, to get out of the dilemma by saying that "'godly sorrow' is repentance begun," while "reformation" is "repentance completed." Then, as a matter of course, it necessarily follows that "godly sorrow" is in itself never completed, and "reformation" or "repentance completed" is never begun. How can anything be completed that was never begun? But the doctor again says, and that most truly too: "No repentance is 'repentance to salvation' till it is completed." What have we here, or what had the doctor in his treatise, to do with any other kind of repentance; for this alone is the repentance of the New Testament. This alone is what is meant when "God * * * commandeth all men everywhere to repent." Whatever it may be named, whether it be "repentance to salvation," "repentance toward God," or even "repentance completed," it is the same thing; which repentance, most assuredly, is not "godly sorrow" nor conviction. So say Drs. Winans and Smith—also, though inconsistently, Dr. Ralston, but greater than all, St. Paul, who plainly says that "godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation." We know that in common parlance repentance means sorrow; but the language of revelation and theology is not common parlance; it is sublime parlance.

A primary meaning of repentance is a change. This we see by consulting those passages of holy writ which speak of God repenting. Such are Genesis vi, 6, Exodus xxxii, 14, and many others. God cannot sorrow, but is only represented in these passages as changing his action or course of dealing with man, to suit the varying circumstances of that changeful creature. Repentance, then, is reformation; not merely an outward reformation of life or conduct, which, however, is included, but a deep and earnest reformation of heart—a turning of the soul from sin, an action unseen save by the omnipresent Eye divine. By conviction we see the "sinfulness of sin" and our awful condition, by "godly sorrow" we loathe and mourn over it, and by repentance we turn from it. It is closely allied to saving faith, which is a turning to God. This repentance, or turning from sin, followed by faith, or turning to God, is what St. Paul meant when he said of the Gentiles "that they should repent and turn to God;" and what Jesus meant when he said: "Repent, ye, and believe the gospel." St. Paul speaks in his address to the elders of Ephesus, Acts xx, 21, of "repentance toward God," which, we think, hints strongly at turning; for if we turn from sin we must necessarily turn to God. Indeed the tenor of the New Testament seems to imply that this is the meaning of repentance. So if we cannot claim a demonstration of this truth we do most strenuously contend that the onus probandi is in favor of it. Repentance is neither conviction nor godly sorrow.

The Pastor's Welcome.

MR. EDITOR: There are some things connected with the pastoral work which are little in themselves, but of great value to the pastor. Our itinerant system of supplying the churches with pastors makes it necessary for the preachers to enter into new fields of labor, and to minister to congregations of strangers. This is often embarrassing to the preacher, and his embarrassment will be increased or diminished in proportion to the coldness or warmth of his reception on the part of the members of the church. Although he is duly appointed to minister to that particular congregation and feed that particular flock, he knows not the names, faces or spiritual wants of those to whom he would communicate in holy things. He is fortunate if he finds there an acquaintance who knows his duty and will do it, and assist him in making the acquaintance of the people. But to do this something more than a formal introduction is necessary; therefore a free, unreserved communication of names, residences and spiritual relations is desirable. To see the faces and be told the names of many persons at the same time is to know really very little about any of them, and that to be soon forgotten with regard to most of them. The experience of many will verify this assertion.

The preacher's hearers have the advantage of him in regard to recognition. Having heard him preach, they will readily recognize him when they meet again. The members of the church will know their pastor, but he may not know them. They may think he knows them, and wait for his recognition. This is probably the cause of many occupying a kind of reserve toward their minister; but it ought not to be so. The members ought to feel assured that he is anxious to know them and converse with them; that it is a part of his business, and a pleasure to him to perform it. It is his duty to visit the members of his charge, and it does his soul good to know that they want him. Therefore they should tell him where they live and invite him to their place of residence, and not take it for granted that he knows all this, and will visit them anyway. This plan would make the path straight for the pastor and his flock, and a mutual blessing would accompany them. The kind reception of the minister is an evidence of desire for the success of the cause in which he is engaged, and a willingness to aid in advancing that cause. These things may seem trifling to those who have not properly considered them, but they have their significance. The want of attention to things of this sort has brought sadness to many faithful preachers of the gospel. There are such words as politeness and courtesy to complete the record of Christian conduct, and they come in beautifully for the purposes alluded to in this connection. Let us all remember this and try to improve in these little things.

Impressions.

MR. EDITOR: I have just read that able, very learned and exhaustive discussion between Messrs. Ditzler and Wilkes on the subjects of infant baptism, baptism for the remission of sins, and baptism by pouring and sprinkling, and do not propose a review or a criticism, but simply wish to tell my Christian brethren what impression is left on my own mind—not originated, for that has been done long ago, but more fully confirmed—viz.:

1. That it is not known what action is indispensably necessary to constitute water baptism. (Of course baptism is consecration to God through Christ, and the application of water to the person is the outward and visible sign of the inward and spiritual grace given to us, etc.) But what action is necessary to baptism is the question that is not settled, and will not be until more divine light shines on the subject.

2. And if it were known it would be a great calamity to the cause of Christ, for there are tens of thousands, who are now respectable church-members, who are making some progress and somewhat strengthening the cause, who would be uncharched, and so chagrined that they would never more affiliate with the church of God, and might thereby make shipwreck and be lost. Not only that, but establish and foster that one thing more to be dreaded than heathenism itself—one church, when the last hope of religious or civil liberty would take its everlasting flight.

3. Who can think that he who foreknew all things, and is too wise to err and too kind to trifle with poor accountable creatures, would leave so important a matter for an occasion to carnal men to exercise their fancies, caprices, prejudices and passions, embodied in bitter controversies, excommunications, anathemas, and persecutions unto imprisonment, bonds and death for a thousand? Who? And at the same time raising up multitudes of branches of his church, or sects—denominations, if you please—who go forth in the spirit and power of Elijah, not counting their lives dear unto themselves, who have well-nigh filled the earth with the knowledge of God; and verily in another century, at the present rate, will have evangelized all the earth and converted the very last heathen unto God and his Christ, and whose blessing is undoubtedly on them all, inasmuch as they do prosper, multiply, spend and are spent for the one only purpose, namely: to glorify God and save poor sinners. Can any man think that all these sects are wrong but one? that God blesses them so much, honors their labors so highly—as no one can deny that he does—and all wrong?

4. I am happy that there is a branch of God's church in which I and my five-year-old child can live and be baptized and take the holy communion every month together; and although there is no express command therennto, yet God's blessing is on us in so doing. I am glad that my brother Christian who thinks he ought not to do as I do has the same liberty that I enjoy, and as many of our Heavenly Father's smiles and blessings as there are for me. I am glad that I cannot make him think as I think, for I am not to be trusted with such power, neither is any man or company of men on the earth. No, God forbid the day of one churchism again till all sin is destroyed. "Brethren, let us live and let live." "Let not Ephraim vex Judah, nor Judah envy Ephraim." I cannot spare one of God's blood-bought, blood-washed churches on earth; no, not even the Romish Church. But let all the brethren and churches be courteous and kind, yea, charitable to one another.

Letter from England.

MR. EDITOR: The Pope has been addressing children, and he has the knack of adapting himself to those whom he addresses. He tells the little ones that he thinks the bodies of the Apostles Philip and James have recently been discovered in the Church of the Holy Apostles. The Romish Bishop of Birmingham, at the annual reunion of the Romanists of that town, said that in England two points had to be secured before Catholics could enjoy liberty—entire control over the religious education of their poor children, and religious privileges for their poor in the workhouses and gaols of the country; and Archbishop Manning, at the opening meeting of the Sheffield Catholic Association, advised this organization of voters to concentrate the power of Romish electors, and suggested that in regard to the religious difficulty in education money should be given to the managers of each school, leaving them to determine the question of religious instruction. The Catholic Union of Ireland, which includes a great number of the Romish nobility, prelacy, gentry and clergy of the country, has prepared and forwarded to Mr. Gladstone an elaborate statement in favor of denominational education. So much for popery.

Anglicanism is not tranquil. Its ecclesiastical waters have been in a ferment for some time, and are not likely soon to be halcyon. Dean Stanley has been appointed select preacher at Oxford, and in consequence Dean Goulburn has resigned his select preachership at the same university, assigning as his reason for doing so that Dean Stanley's teaching is subversive of revealed religion. Dr. Pusey has been at death's door at Geneva, but he is now convalescing. Canon Liddon, the eloquent London preacher of the Established Church, in a lecture at St. Paul's cathedral, on Jesus Christ and Buddha, said it was impossible not to recognize in the founder of Buddhism one of the most interesting and beautiful figures in the annals of paganism.

A movement has been started among the Wesleyans to obtain a decisive vote of the Conference to hold its sittings in London every seven years. And it is reported that £120,000 have been offered for the Wesleyan Mission House, Centenary Hall building, and site in Bishopgate street, London.

Lord Lytton, the Dumas of English literature; Dr. Stephon Lushington, the distinguished lawyer and legal authority; John Fernley, Esq., a wealthy and liberal Methodist layman, who recently erected a building and endowed it for the benefit of Methodist preachers' daughters, and a lectureship in connection with the English Wesleyan Conference; the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel, the aristocratic and distinguished Baptist minister, and the Rev. Daniel Macafee, for many years one of the most prominent, able, popular and influential ministers of the Irish Wesleyan Church, have all died during the past few days. Mr. Noel was seventy-four, Mr. Macafee eighty-one, and Dr. Lushington ninety-one. Men of all professions and of all grades in social life die. So do eminent ministers of the gospel. Passing away is the fixed and universal law in reference to all earthly life.

Mexican Mission, M. E. Church.

We take the following account of a farewell meeting from the New York Christian Advocate of February 13. The occasion has for us an interest in view of our own undertaking in the same field. The New York Advocate says:

This mission may be regarded as fairly opened. Bishop Haven has been some time on the ground, and important intelligence is soon expected from him, if we correctly interpret some foreshadowings. In addition, Dr. Butler, with his family, is on the way to Vera Cruz, thence to the City of Mexico. At the request of the New York preachers' meeting, a public meeting was held in the Seventh Street church, on the evening of the fourth instant, to say "good-by." To the regret of many who desired to attend, the hour came with a severe rain; yet a large congregation gathered. Bishop Harris presided. The Scriptures and hymn were read by Dr. Woodruff, and prayer was offered by Rev. J. Parker, the pastor of the church. Bishop Harris stated that Dr. Butler went out in 1856 to organize the mission in India, and after years of service returned, and at the bidding of the church was going a second time, and that his errand now is to open and organize our mission in Mexico. It was to himself, and would be to all present, a great pleasure that he was now to introduce Bishop Simpson as the first speaker.

Bishop Simpson gave a full and most interesting delineation of the reasons which have led our church to enter Mexico, but as we expect to give the entire speech to our readers next week we will give no outline. If the Bishop had no previous reputation as a commanding platform speaker, that one address would have given it to him.

The address of Dr. Butler was brief but admirable. He spoke of his past relation to Mexican evangelism as one of the secretaries of the American and Foreign Christian Union, and his oft-repeated desire that the work might go forward on a union basis. Events clearly providential have indicated to our church its duty to move denominationally and at once. He fully adopted Bishop Simpson's declarations of catholicity. He was going to help all—to hinder none who work for the Master. His dearly-loved friend, Dr. Riley, the honored instrument of the precious work in Mexico, was present, and without doubt knew and appreciated the spirit in which the speaker would go. The doctor made an earnest plea to be remembered in the prayers of all present.

A stanza of the missionary hymn was sung, and Bishop Harris called Dr. Butler to lead in prayer, and Dr. Eddy to offer special prayer for the missionary and his family. There were marked manifestations of the divine presence during the season of supplication.

Bishop Harris called to the platform Dr. Riley, who gave a thrilling, electrical talk. He said that when the telegram announced the death of the noble Manuel Aguas, he turned to the Methodist Episcopal Church and in his heart desired the sending of Dr. Butler. He welcomed his accession to the ranks of Mexican evangelization, and felt that in him the congregations of "the Church of Jesus" would have a proved and tried friend. He then spoke for Mexico in tones and words thrilling all hearts. After the close of the exercises many lingered for nearly an hour, saying words of affectionate parting to Dr. Butler and wife.

Prayer for Healing.

A REMARKABLE CASE.

President Finney sends us from Oberlin the statement of a remarkable case of recovery from confirmed invalidism of the wife of Rev. D. R. Miller, of that place, the essential part of which we publish below. Concerning it Mr. Finney himself says:

"Mrs. Miller is the wife of a Congregational minister and a lady of unquestionable veracity. However the fact of her healing is to be accounted for, her story is, no doubt, worthy of entire confidence, as we have known her for years as a lame, suffering invalid, and now see her in our midst in sound health. This instantaneous restoration will be accounted for by different persons in different ways. Mrs. Miller and those who were present regard the healing as supernatural and a direct answer to prayer. The facts must speak for themselves. Why should not the sick be healed in answer to the prayer of faith? Unbelief can discredit them, but faith sees nothing incredible in such facts as are stated by Mrs. Miller. My object in this note is not, however, to express an opinion in regard to the power that healed her, but to certify her good character for intelligence and veracity, and also that of the signers of the accompanying certificates."

Mrs. Miller's statement is accompanied by the certificates of relatives and other well-known and reliable members of the First church at Oberlin, fully vouching for the correctness of the facts set forth, but our space will allow us to give only the simple abridged statement of Mrs. Miller, as made in a letter to her pastor:

"From my parents I inherited a constitution subject to a chronic form of rheumatism. In early life I was attacked with rheumatic weaknesses and pains, which affected my whole system. For nearly forty years I was subject to more or less suffering from this cause, sometimes unable to attend meeting for months at a time. For seven years, until the last three months, I have been unable to get about without the aid of crutch or staff, generally both. I have used many liniments and remedies, but with no permanently good result. I have been a Christian from early life, but last spring, in our revival, I received a spiritual refreshing from the Lord, which gave a new impulse to my faith. Since then my religion has been a new life to me. Last summer several of us Christian sisters were in the habit of spending short seasons of prayer together, that the Lord would send us a pastor. Some of our number had read the narrative of Dorothea Trudel, and had spoken to me on the subject of healing in answer to prayer. My faith had not then risen to this elevation. I had, in fact, accepted what I supposed to be the will of God, and made up my mind to be a lame and suffering invalid the rest of my life. I had long since ceased to use remedies for the restoration of my health, and had not even thought of praying in regard to it, for I regarded it as the will of God that I should suffer in silent submission. Notwithstanding what had been said to me, I remained in this opinion and in this attitude until the twenty-sixth day of September last, when several ladies met at our house, by appointment, for a prayer meeting. I had been growing worse for some time, and was at that time unable to get out to attend a meeting. I was suffering much pain that afternoon; indeed I was hardly able to be out of my bed. Up to this time none of the sisters who had conversed with me about the subject of healing by faith had been able to tell me anything from their own experience. That afternoon one lady was present who could speak to me from her own experience of being healed in answer to the prayer of faith. She related several striking instances in which her prayers had been answered in the removal of divers forms of disease to which she was subject. She also repeated a number of passages of Scripture, which clearly justified the expectation of being healed in answer to the prayer of faith. She also said that Jesus had shown her that he was just as ready to heal diseases now as he was when on earth, that such healing was expressly promised in Scripture, in answer to the prayer of faith, and that it was nowhere taken back. These facts, reasonings and passages of Scripture made a deep impression on my mind, and for the first time I found myself able to believe that Jesus would heal me in answer to prayer. She asked me if I could join my faith with hers and ask for present healing. I told her I felt that I could. We then knelt and called upon the Lord. She offered a mighty prayer to God, and I followed. While she was leading in prayer I felt a quickening in my whole being, whereupon my pain subsided, and when we rose from prayer I felt that a great change had come over me—that I was cured. I found that I could walk without my staff or crutch, or any assistance from any one. Since then my pains have never returned; I have more than my youthful vigor; I walk with more ease and rapidity than I ever did in my life, and I never felt so fresh and young as I now do, at the age of fifty-two.

"Now the hundred and third Psalm is my Psalm, and my youth is more than renewed, like the eagle's. I cannot express the constant joy of my heart for the wonderful healing of my soul and body. I feel as if I was every whit made whole."—Advance.

OBITUARIES.

DIED, in Greene county, Alabama, January 22, 1873, Sister OCTAVIA L. FOSTER, youngest child of William H. and E. Foster, in the twenty-seventh year of her age.

She embraced religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1856, and lived an exemplary Christian until her death. Some time last year it became apparent that she was going into consumption. She took a trip up into the mountains of Jefferson, came back in the fall, not improved much, if any. She declined rapidly the last month. When the last hour came she was fully prepared. Her end was peaceful.

Thus star by star declines,
Till all are passed away;
As morning high and higher shines
To pure and perfect day,
Nor sink those stars in empty night,
But hide themselves in heaven's own light.

J. W. MCCANN.

MEMOIR.

The subject of this notice, DANIEL NEWTON, was born in 1812, in the State of North Carolina. When about twenty-one years of age he emigrated to this State and located in the parish of St. Helena. In the same parish he was united to Miss N. Wright in the holy bonds of matrimony, in 1837. Soon after he made a public profession of religion and united with the people of God in church fellowship. I have heard him speak exultingly of its bright conversion. So palpable and powerful was the change of heart then realized that in all his after Christian experience there remained no margin for questioning its genuineness.

Having elected the law for his vocation, he was admitted to the bar in 1845, in which profession he acquired an honorable and distinguished position in the community in which he practiced. In 1848 he settled in Morehouse parish, where he lived until his demise, which took place December 18, 1872. His son, in a note giving me the date of his birth, marriage, etc., says:

"Having been with him almost constantly for several years, I cannot forbear asserting that he was the kindest husband and the most indulgent father I ever knew, and in all things exemplifying a Christian character the most estimable, displaying those Christian virtues which shone forth in every act of his life."

For several years previous to his death he was much confined to his room, and endured untold suffering, but always expressed himself resigned to the will of God.

From the time I became his pastor I visited him frequently, which afforded abundant opportunity for entering into his Christian experience. The evidence furnished satisfied me that his religion was not a cunningly-devised fable, but a deep-settled conviction of the truth as it is in Jesus, and a conscientious knowledge that he was born not of the flesh nor of the will of man, but of God. Inquiring into his spiritual state at one time, he said: "I do not feel as happy as I desire, yet on the promise of the Redeemer I hang by stubborn faith." The last visit I made him proved a spiritual feast to my own soul; and so confidently did I feel that the blessed Savior would give his servant a clear sunset, and at even-tide shed a luster of glory and radiance of light upon his soul, that I said to him: "Bro. Newton, God will pour a flood of glory into your soul before you reach the brink of the river." And so it came to pass. An eye-witness assured me that a more triumphant departure was never seen. He expired with hallelujahs upon his lips and glory floating through every aisle of his spiritual nature.

Thus passed away Daniel Newton, in the sixtieth year of his age, leaving two daughters and two sons to mourn their loss. But they sorrow not as those who have no hope, for, believing that Jesus died and rose again, their father, who sleeps in Jesus, will God bring with him. That Heaven's richest benisons may be liberally bestowed upon the dear children, especially upon his two unmarried daughters, who seemed to share more tenderly affection's nearest touch of a dying father's love, is the prayer of one who will ever fondly cherish the memory of the departed.

Husband and Wife.

Did you ever hear the word "husband" explained? It means literally "the head of the house," the support of it, the person who keeps it together, as a band keeps together a sheaf of corn. There are many married men who are not husbands, because they are not the band of the house. Truly, in many cases, the wife is the husband; for oftentimes it is she who, by her prudence and thrift and economy, keeps the house together. The married man who, by his dissolute habits, strips his house of all comfort is not a husband; in a legal sense he is, but in no other; for he is not a house-band; instead of keeping things together, he scatters them among the pawnbrokers.

And now let us see whether the word "wife" has not a lesson too. It literally means a weaver. The wife is the person who weaves. Before our great cotton and cloth factories arose, one of the principal employments in every house was the fabrication of clothing; every family made its own. The wool was spun into thread by the girls, who were therefore called spinsters; the thread was woven into cloth by their mother, who accordingly was called the weaver, or the wife; and another remnant of this old truth was discovered in the word "heirloom," applied to any old piece of furniture which had come down to use from our ancestors, and which, though it may be a chair or bed, shows that a loom was once a most important article in every house. Thus the word "wife" means weaver; and, as Trench well remarks, "in the word itself is wrapped up a hint of earnest, in-door, stay-at-home occupations, as being fitted for her who bears this name."

TIRED MOTHERS.

BY MRS. ALBERT SMITH.

A little fellow leans upon yoor knee—
Your tired knee that has so much to bear;
A child's dear eyes are looking lovingly
From underneath a thatch of tangled hair.
Perhaps you do not heed the velvet touch
Of warm, moist fingers, folding yoors so tight;
You do not prize this blessing overmuch—
Yoo almost are too tired to pray to-night.

But it is a blessedness. A year ago
I did not see it as I do to-day—
We are so dull and thankless, and too slow
To catch the sonshine till it slips away.
And now it seems surpassing strange to me
That, while I wore the badge of motherhood,
I did not kiss more oft and tenderly
The little child that brought me only good.

And if, some night when you sit down to rest,
You miss this elbow from yoor tired knee,
This restless, curling head from off yoor breast,
This lisping tongue that chatters constantly;
If from your own the dimpled hands had slipped,
And ne'er would nestle in your palm again;
If the white feet into the grave had tripped,
I could not blame you for yoor heartache then.

I wonder so that mothers ever fret
At little children clinging to their gown,
Or that the footprints, when the days are wet,
Are ever black enough to make them frown.
If I could find a little muddy boot
Or cap or jacket on my chamber door;
If I could kiss a rosy, restless foot,
And hear its patter in my home once more;

If I could mend a broken cart to-day,
To-morrow make a kite to reach the sky—
There is no woman in God's world could say
She was more blissfully content than I.
But, ah! the dainty pillow next my own
Is never rumpled by a shining head—
My singing birdling from its nest is flown.

Unbelief Seeks a Sign from Heaven.

The amount and kind of evidence of the truth of the Christian religion depends upon the will of its Author, and not upon the will of man. It is for God to say how many miracles shall be wrought to evince the credibility of the gospel, and it is not for the ruined creature for whose deliverance the gospel is provided to demand more miracles than have been marked. If the evidences of divine revelation were to be made to depend upon the wishes and caprices of men, miracles would of necessity become the natural order of things, for every generation would clamor for its own portion, and every man would insist upon an ocular demonstration for himself. The Deity would thus be made subject to all the unbelief and hardness of heart so natural to apostate human nature, and would be forced to wait upon the skeptical creatures as a servant upon the master. The sovereignty and awful majesty of God would be overthrown, and instead of that august Being "who giveth not account of any of his matters," there would be a deity—if such he might be called—who would be continually giving an account, and always standing in an apologetic attitude.

This is the attitude in which such skeptics as Renan and Tyndall would place the Supreme Ruler of the universe. The French unbeliever insists that, in order that the present generation may have sufficient reason for believing the gospel narrative of the resurrection of Lazarus, the miracle should be repeated. A committee of the French Institute should be appointed, who should examine the corpse, to be scientifically certain that it is really a corpse; then the resurrection should be performed in presence of the committee, and such other witnesses as they should appoint, in order that there might be no sleight of hand, and then the report of the savans should be communicated to the public. The English materialist, in a different form, makes a similar proposition. The efficacy of prayer is to be tested by the experiment of praying for the patients in one hospital, and not praying for those of another, both hospitals, meanwhile, employing the same physicians and the same mode of treatment. If those who are in the first-mentioned hospital are healed, and those in the second are not, prayer, says Mr. Tyndall, will be proved to be efficacious. But would this actually be the result—would all in the first-mentioned hospital be cured—this would be the performance of a miracle in answer to prayer. This proposition, therefore, of Tyndall is in reality a demand that God work another miracle in addition to those he has previously wrought. The fact that it is to be wrought in answer to the prayers of Christians, instead of in answer to the demand of an unbeliever like Renan, makes no difference in the principle that is involved. Both proposals alike imply that God shall have additional evidence of the truth of his revelation whenever it is demanded, and that the amount and kind of it is to be determined by the creature rather than the Creator.

The spirit that prompts such demands upon God for more miraculous proof of his truth than he has already given is not a new thing under the sun. A personage of some distinction exhibited it when he said to Jesus Christ upon the pinnacle of the temple: "If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down, for it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone." This was a demand, made by satan, in a roundabout manner, through the Messiah, that God work a miracle in proof of the divinity of the gospel. The same spirit animated those Pharisees who "began to question with Christ, seeking of him a sign from heaven, tempting him." Mark viii, 11. The unbelieving "brethren" of our Lord were actuated by this same unbelieving temper, which lusts after more miracles and stronger proofs than God is pleased to give to his creatures, when they said to him: "Depart hence, and go into Judea, that thy disciples also may see the works that thou doest. If thou do these things, show thyself to the world."—John vii, 3-5. And the same spirit flamed out at the crucifixion of the Son of God, when the "chief priests, mocking him, with the scribes and elders, said, He saved others; himself he cannot save. If he be the King of Israel let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe in him."—Matthew xxvii, 41, 42. These enemies of Christ, standing beneath the cross, made the same promise that the modern enemies of Christ are making: "Give us another miracle, and we will believe the gospel. Furnish us more evidence of the truth of Christianity, and we will accept it."

The manner in which Jesus Christ treated such demands for more miraculous proofs of the divinity of his mission shows the nature of the demand, and his estimate of it. In the instance of the satanic proposal, he repelled it with a quotation from the word of God. In the instance of the Pharisaic demand, "he sighed deeply in his spirit, and saith: Why doth this generation seek after a sign? Verily, I say unto you, there shall no sign be given unto this generation." And when the last demand of this kind was made, as he hung upon the cross, he gave no answer, and his silence was more significant than even his words could have been.

The root of this requisition upon God for more evidence than he has been pleased to give of the truth of Christianity is pronged. It has two forks. One is unbelief and the other is irreverence. Men are inclined to doubt the gospel from a variety of motives, the chief of which is a dislike of its purity. This inclination they take no pains to weaken, but, on the contrary, they strengthen it, some by their studies and some by their practices. In this state of mind they clamor for more proof, although they have not fairly weighed the amount of evidence already furnished. And coupled with this is an irreverent spirit. They are not impressed by the divine majesty. They forget their insignificance and nothingness when compared with God, and presume to dictate the mode and manner in which he shall authenticate his revelation to mankind.—Christian Intelligencer.

Faith for Definite Blessings.

BY REV. DANIEL STEELE, D. D.

It took four thousand years to unroll the scroll of the sacred Scriptures, "to import God into knowledge," in the phrase of Dr. Bushnell. The patriarchal and Jewish dispensations were occupied by the disclosure and ineradicable inculcation of the divine unity upon one nation amid surrounding polytheism. To have taught the triune personality of God before the firm establishment of his oneness of substance might have overtasked mankind in the period of their early theological pupilage. The first words taught to every child in the Jewish nursery for more than three thousand years are these: "Hear, O Israel, the Lord thy God is one God." Faith in this truth, such as inspired obedience, was saving under the dispensations before Christianity. It is saving now to all who have no higher revelation. What need, then, have we of any clearer and more definite manifestation of the nature of God? Why should he reveal the unthinkable fact of his three-fold personality, and require our faith to mount to heights so far above reason? This is a question which the angels might well approach with bashful tread. It is certain that he has not taken me into his councils. Here I walk by faith. Faith says that the higher revelation of God, and the new requirement of faith in the trinity, proceed from the gracious purpose to bestow richer blessings upon the believer in a dispensation "rather glorious." Such is the nature of the human soul, and probably of all finite spirits, that faith creates and measures its capacity for spiritual good. By this gateway alone does God enter. Hence it follows that he would make an advanced revelation of himself, requiring a higher upreaching of faith, when he should purpose to fill us with his fullness. It will not now be sufficient to believe in one God, as do the trembling demons. The Son of God, Jesus Christ, in his offices of Prophet or Teacher, Priest and King, and the Holy Ghost, as our Regenerator, Spirit of Adoption and Sanctifier, must be specifically grasped by our faith. Hence we should look for little spirituality where these distinctive truths of the gospel are little preached, and for much spiritual power and deep religious experience where they are distinctly taught and received with the least intermixture of error, and without disproportionate emphasis upon ritualism. Church history will sustain this assertion. There is always a spiritual decline whenever Christ and the Holy Spirit have a secondary place in preaching; and there is always a revival when the "whole counsel of God," the Father, Son and Spirit, is faithfully presented in the pulpit. Of many individual believers it may be truthfully said that their spiritual life is feeble and sickly because they fail to grasp Christ and the Comforter in all their distinct offices. Thousands are faintly moving, with languid steps, along the heavenward path, who might run with gladness, surmounting every obstacle and overthrowing every foe by their resistless momentum, if they would only persistently endeavor to "know the exceeding greatness of Christ's power to us ward who believe." Thousands of sincere souls are harassed and weakened by perpetual doubts, simply because they do not render due honor to the third person of the trinity by trusting him to do the work of his office, certifying their sonship by "the spirit of adoption." They do not stir themselves up to take hold of this blessed assurance, and to insist that the divine seal be impressed upon them by the Holy Ghost. They live in constant disregard of the second pungent inference from Wesley's sermon on the Witness of the Spirit: "Let none rest in any supposed fruit of the Spirit without the witness." The natural consequence of this absence of "the Spirit of adoption, crying in their hearts, Abba, Father," is a perpetual oscillation between hope and fear, sorrowfully singing:

"It is a point I long to know;
Oft it bringeth anxious thought,
Do I love the Lord, or no?
Am I his, or am I not?"

Instead of this they might be exultingly singing:

"O love, thou bottomless abyss!
My sins are swallowed up in thee;
Covered is my unrighteousness,
Nor spot of guilt remains on me;
While Jesus' blood, through earth and skies,
Mercy, free, boundless mercy cries."

I am convinced that this unsatisfactory and unmethodistic experience, too prevalent in our churches, is chargeable in part to the failure of our preachers to specialize this blessing, the common privilege of all believers. Hear Mr. Wesley: "Generally, wherever the gospel is preached in a clear and scriptural manner, more than ninety-nine in a hundred do know the exact time when they are justified. This is the testimony of a man more competent, from personal observation, to express a reliable opinion than any since the apostolic age, for he visited all his societies annually, and met them in class, and put to each member searching test questions which went into the very core of his being. That was the style of class-leading in his day. But no such proportion of conversions with the direct witness now obtains at our altars. The failure is not in the gospel, which is a changeless stream of power emanating from the living Christ, "the same yesterday and to-day and forever." Where, then, is the failure? Let every preacher examine his sermons, and see whether he has made "the Spirit of adoption" conspicuous in his ministry. Another office of the Spirit is that of purification. He is the Sanctifier. Beginning this work in the new birth by implanting love to God, the purifying principle, he continues it until perfect love casteth out fear. That this consummation may take place long before death has never been a disputed question with Methodists. That it was specialized by their great founder, with increasing emphasis till his dying day, no man on the earth can candidly deny, after reading Tyerman's Life and Times of John Wesley. That this magnifying of the office of the Sanctifier produced such Christian characters as Bramwell, Hester Ann Rogers, the seraphic Fletcher, and his saintly wife, and many others unknown to fame, but precious jewels in the crown of Jesus, is as certain as the sequence of any effect after its cause.

These results were not the work of chance. There was a distinctive faith which grasped this prize. This faith came from preaching which honored the Sanctifier by dwelling emphatically upon his office, and not by the use of "glittering generalities," gliding smoothly over it like a slurred note in music. It must be borne in mind that the Holy Spirit is the most sensitive person of the Godhead. If blasphemy against him is unpardonable, the slighting of any of his offices must not only grieve him, but also deprive the soul of the blessings which it is his prerogative to bestow. "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."—Zion's Herald.

Principles that Underlie Child-Government.

First for a few negative ones:

1. Never give in to disobedience; and never threaten what you are not prepared to carry out.

2. Never lose your temper. I do not say never be angry. Anger is sometimes indispensable, especially where there has been anything mean, dishonest or cruel. But anger is very different from loss of temper.

3. Of all things, never sneer at them; and be careful even how you rally them.

4. Do not try to work on their feelings. Feelings are far too delicate things to be used for tools. It is like taking the mainspring out of your watch, and notching it for a saw. It may be a wonderful saw, but how fares your watch? Especially avoid doing so in connection with religious things, for so you will assuredly deaden them to all that is finest. Let your feelings, not your efforts on theirs, affect them with a sympathy the more powerful that it is not forced upon them; and, in order to do this, avoid being too English in the hiding of your feelings. A man's own family has a right to share in his good feelings.

5. Never show that you doubt, except you are able to convict. To doubt an honest child is to do what you can to make a liar of him; and to believe a liar, if he is not altogether shameless, is to shame him.

The common-minded masters in schools, who, unlike the ideal Arnold, are in the habit of disbelieving boys, have a large share in making the liars they so often are. Certainly the vileness of a lie is not the same in one who knows that whatever he says will be regarded with suspicion; and the master who does not know an honest boy after he has been some time in his class, gives good reason for doubting whether he be himself an honest man, and incapable of the lying he is ready to attribute to all alike.

6. Instill no religious doctrine apart from its duty. If it have no duty as its necessary embodiment, the doctrine may well be regarded as doubtful.

7. Do not be hard on mere quarreling, which, like a storm in nature, is often helpful in clearing the moral atmosphere. Stop it by a judgment between the parties. But be severe as to the kind of quarreling, and the temper shown in it. Especially give no quarter to any unfairness arising from greed or spite. Use your strongest language with regard to that.

Now for a few positive rules:

1. Always let them come to you, and always hear what they have to say. If they bring a complaint, always examine into it, and dispense pure justice, and nothing but justice.

2. Cultivate a love of giving fair play. Every one, of course, likes to receive fair play; but no one ought to be left to imagine, therefore, that he loves fair play.

3. Teach from the very first, from the infancy capable of sucking a sugar-plum, to share with neighbors. Never refuse the offering a child brings you, except you have a good reason—and give it. And never pretend to partake; that involves hideous possibilities in its effects on the child.

The necessity of giving a reason for refusing a kindness has no relation to what is supposed by some to be the necessity of giving a reason with every command. There is no such necessity. Of course there ought to be a reason in every command. That it may be desirable, sometimes, to explain it, is all that can be allowed.

4. Favor the development of each in the direction of his own bent. Help him to develop himself, but do not push development. To do so is most dangerous.

5. Mind the moral nature, and it will take care of the intellectual. In other words, the best thing for the intellect is the cultivation of the conscience, not in casuistry, but in conduct. It may take longer to arrive, but the end will be the highest possible health, vigor and ratio of progress.

6. Discourage emulation, and insist on duty, not often, but strongly. George Macdonald, in the Vicar's Daughter.

THE modesty and humility of the Roman Catholic Church are quite alarming. We grow very irate over the story of Hildebrand, who kept Henry in his court-yard for four mortal days before allowing him to go down on his knees and confess that he was very impudent to the Pope, and always end by saying: "But that was in the old time. Such a thing would be impossible now. The Roman Catholic Church has made the same progress that marks the rest of the world." Not so fast. The Roman Catholic Church is a very stable and a very slow institution. The Pope is as much a despot as Gregory was; but, thank Heaven, Henry's are not so easily found. The following extract from a sermon by a Catholic priest, Kinzelman by name, intimates what the priesthood would do if they could:

"We clergymen stand as high above government, above emperors, kings and princes of this world, as heaven stands above the earth. Kings and princes of this earth are as much inferior to us priests as lead is inferior to the purest refined gold. Angels and archangels are far beneath the priesthood, for we are able to forgive sins in God's stead—a thing that angels and archangels could never do. Priests stand in a measure above God, for he must at all times, and in all places, be ready to serve us, and must at our command come down from heaven when the mass is consecrated. The people, and even emperors and kings, prostrated themselves before priests, and kissed the ground on which their feet had rested; but to-day governors dare to persecute the priesthood, and to make laws whereby the zealous clergy who are true to the faith are threatened with dungeons."

How sad to think that "governors dare to persecute" a church that makes such slight pretensions, and have the audacity to suggest a dungeon for a priesthood who only want everything their own way, and will be perfectly satisfied if you will only permit them to make serfs of all the kings, emperors and peoples of the earth! Shame on such peoples, emperors and kings who are not willing to be manacled.—The Working Church.

The Kohinoor Recut.

The Kohinoor, as it originally came into the hands of the Queen of England, was far from being "the mountain of light" its name signifies. It was cut, as Indian diamonds usually are, upon the sides, the top being flat; and many inferior diamonds far exceeded it in brilliancy.

It was sent to Holland, and there recut in the style of a brilliant, a principal face surrounded by many facets, reflecting the prismatic colors from every side, and is now a marvel of beauty.

An experienced workman often spends two years of continuous labor upon one stone; such delicate and patient work is necessary to preserve the stone and exhibit its beauty. Even the diamond-dust is preserved with care, to be used in its final polishing.

How like the Indian diamond are God's children untouched by adversity! Precious jewels, but reflecting little of heaven's light. Then the Great Workman takes them in hand, and patiently and carefully cuts upon the hard surface. Worldliness yields at his touch, hidden lights flash out, each cut reveals a new beauty. But the sorrowful heart cries out: Why this long-continued pressure, why blow upon blow for me, while others sit serene, untroubled?

Ah, sorrowful heart, take comfort; thou art one of thy Lord's chosen, precious stones! The more thou art cut and fashioned and polished, the more wilt thou shine in his crown when he maketh up his jewels. Thine is the rare and precious portion of his favored ones; chosen in the furnace of affliction, wrought upon by the Spirit, freed from the impurities of the flesh, polished by the diamond-dust of care and sorrow and disappointment, until the soul is lifted heavenward, and heaven's own light is reflected in its face. "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels."

THE LATE DR. DIXON.—A tablet in memory of the late Rev. Dr. James Dixon has been placed in the Wesleyan chapel, Manningham, Bradford, England, near to the pew which the doctor occupied during several of the later years of his life. The following inscription is written on the tablet:

"Sacred to the memory of the Rev. James Dixon, D. D., who spent a long life in the faithful exercise of the Christian ministry. While the preaching of the gospel was his main business, he was also a zealous promoter of every philanthropic enterprise, an untiring vindicator of the truths of Protestant Christianity, and a most eloquent advocate of the cause of the needy, especially of the slave and of the heathen. He was born near Castle Donington, October 29, 1788, entered the ministry of the Wesleyan Methodists in 1812, was president of the Conference in 1841, and, after spending several years of comparative retirement in total blindness, died in the faith at Manningham, December 18, 1871. This tablet is erected by some of his brethren in the ministry, who glorify God in him."

Religious Intelligence.

BISHOP TUTTLE reports that while the parishioners of the heathen Josh priest at Idaho City have increased, the Episcopal congregation has diminished. He thinks the Chinese population is now larger than the white.

THE apostolic prefect of the palace at Rome has called upon the clerical newspapers to submit their editions to his censorship before publication, in conformity with the pontifical laws. Most of these journals have rejected his request.

WHILE the Methodists in England and Ireland have pronounced in favor of non-sectarian education, as opposed to the denomination system, the great majority of the presbyteries of the Free Church of Scotland have done a similar thing.

THE late John A. Brown, of Philadelphia, left by his will $54,000 to charitable and other institutions, including $10,000 to the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, of New York. His public benevolent gifts during his lifetime amounted to $506,000.

THE Jewish Messenger records a steady turning of the tide of public opinion in favor of the Jews in Europe. An editor in Darmstadt has been punished for publishing a scurrilous article against them, and a pamphlet attacking them has been suppressed in Cracow.

THIRTEEN MINISTERS of the German Evangelical Synod of the West, including the president, vice president and secretary, have petitioned the Protestant Episcopal House of Bishops to appoint a Bishop over them. A German-speaking Bishop has been sent to confer with them.

PROF. TYNDALL is not supposed to bear peculiar love to religious organizations; it is, therefore, with the more pleasure that we give him the credit of presenting $1,700 to the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington, this amount being the net avails of his lectures in that city.

A WRITER from Rome to the Parisian Temps states that there are now twelve Protestant places of worship in Rome of a temporary character, where sermons and addresses are given by evangelical and Methodist ministers almost every night. The Protestant Propaganda is said to be causing much anxiety and some irritation at the Vatican.

THE Old Catholics in Austria are said to be considerably in advance of their fellow-religionists in Bavaria. A meeting recently held in Vienna accepted the Munich resolutions as a temporary basis for their creed and action; only the primacy of the Pope was emphatically rejected and the cautious conduct of the moderate party censured. It is affirmed that Bishop Strossmayer and two other Bishops adhere to the movement.

THE twelfth annual meeting of the Woman's Union Missionary Society was held in Brooklyn, January 15. It appears from the secretary's and treasurer's reports that the society have twenty missionaries at work in India, China, Japan, Burmah, Turkey, Greece and other countries. During the past year the sum of $41,106.87 has been raised, and a small reserve fund is still on hand. A considerable portion of the money thus raised has been expended on churches and school-houses. The result of the labors of the missionaries employed has been of a satisfactory nature.

THE New York Independent says: "The meeting of the Evangelical Alliance will cost the churches of this country about $40,000. This will be expended in paying the fare of delegates both ways and in entertaining them while here. Already $10,000 have been raised, and $20,000 more is looked for from New York and Brooklyn. A meeting was held at Dr. Adams' church, on Madison avenue, on Sunday, January 12, at which Dr. Schaff reported the acceptance of his invitations by 'great and good men in Scotland, Ireland and England, France, Holland, Germany, Switzerland and Italy. Spain will be represented, and Scandinavia, and the mission fields of Asia and Africa.'"

BISHOP COXE, in his visitation to the brethren of the Episcopal Church in Hayti, who had not enjoyed the presence of a Bishop for six years, writes that he has been fully employed since his arrival at Port au Prince. He has consecrated the church of the Holy Trinity in that city; opened and dedicated the school-house, at which service an address was made by Mr. Byrd, an aged Wesleyan pastor, from whom the Bishop received cordial sympathy in his work, and held confirmation services, both English and French. At the time of writing Bishop Coxe had confirmed thirty-five persons, and had learned that there were many among the mountaineers and in various places he could not reach who were desirous of enjoying the same privilege.

THE country reform bill of Germany, of which so much has recently been said, deals largely with church affairs. A newspaper, whose editor has analyzed the bill, says it defines ecclesiastical penalties, and prohibits clergymen and church dignitaries from decreeing any others. No bull of excommunication will be recognized, nor can a clergyman be deposed, as this would be regarded an unlawful interference with his mode of earning a living. It is also provided that every ecclesiastical punishment must be absolutely secret in order that the secular reputation of the offender shall in nowise be injured. The church is not permitted to inflict any ecclesiastical penalty or rebuke for anything that is done in accordance with the Prussian civil law, or any omission in matters which are forbidden by the civil law. The State assumes a practical control of the church by prescribing severe punishment for any infringement that its officers may make in these established relations between Church and State. A fine of one thousand thalers, imprisonment for two years, and disqualification for office for five years, may be enforced in the case of any violation of the provisions which the Prussian government prescribes.

EVANGELIZATION IN SPAIN.—La Semaine Religieuse, of Geneva, says: "At Barcelona the work has been more extensively developed than in any other city in Spain. Our fellow-countryman, M. Empaytaz, has two chapels, and the schools under his direction number 200 children. Mr. Brown, an English Wesleyan, has three chapels and about 300 children. Mr. Fenn and Mr. Payne have seven schools, numbering about 700 children. About seven months ago Mr. Lawrence and Mr. Fenn started a boarding school for young girls, under the auspices of the American consul, the immediate results of which have been so satisfactory that it has been found necessary to enlarge the building. The night schools for adults are frequented by about 100 persons, each paying a small sum. One of the special difficulties of the work at Barcelona is that the language of the people is Catalan, and that the mass hardly know any real Spanish. At Alicante Mr. Knapp, a missionary of the American Baptist Society, has gathered an interesting congregation, with a very commodious chapel, in connection with which there is also a well-conducted Sunday school. A second congregation of Pedobaptists, of about fifty members, have hired a hall, have furnished it, and keep it up exclusively at their own expense."

THE great Missionary Conference now in session in India, which opened in Allahabad, on Thursday, the twenty-sixth of December, is a meeting of missionaries from all parts of India and of all Protestant denominations there represented, to consider fully missionary operations, past and present, and to consult for the promotion of Christian unity. This conference is to continue at least through part of the week of prayer, and the union of all evangelical Christians in India will be made a special subject of prayer. The Presbyterian Synod in North India appeals to all Christians to set apart the first day of the approaching week of prayer to pray for the reunion of all Christ's church. It was in 1859 that members of this same Lodiana mission in North India first sent out the invitation to Christians the world around to unite in a week of prayer; and the hearty response made to that appeal from year to year, now for thirteen years, has encouraged them in this fresh call upon "all Christians throughout the world to unite on the first day of the week of prayer, from year to year, in beseeching the Lord for the speedy manifestation of the union of God's people for which Christ prayed." This call comes with especial force from a foreign land where, during the past year, there have been 551 men laboring as foreign missionaries, the representatives of twenty-seven different Protestant societies—British, American and German; in all, men and women, 868 missionaries, laboring in nearly 3,000 stations and out-stations, and teaching in twenty-three languages. Under such circumstances the temptation to separations and divisions must often be overwhelming, though it is a noteworthy fact that foreign missionaries seldom disagree so lightly as do the ministers of Christ's church at home. That India may be blessed through its grand Missionary Conference, and that the character of native converts may be strengthened and elevated, so that the mass of secular people in India may recognize what now they are slow to acknowledge—a change for the better in Christian converts; that foreign teachers may practically, as well as theoretically, see in the native Christian a brother in Christ, and in the heathen a brother for whom Christ died, but none the less a brother because unconverted; and that all may be one in him, whether at home or abroad, let the church universal pray.—Independent.

NEW YORK CITY MISSION AND TRACT SOCIETY.—The forty-sixth annual meeting of this society was held at the Bible House, December 11, Rev. Thomas DeWitt, D. D., presiding. The annual report states that there were in the city of New York, in 1852, 150 benevolent societies, now there are 315; then there were four hospitals, now 20; then 5 dispensaries, now 24; then 250 churches of all denominations, now 470; then 30 missions, now 140; then 150 Protestant churches, with 45,000 communicants, now 241, with 72,000 communicants. The national societies for the spread of Christianity report an annual income of $6,000,000; the local charitable societies and institutions disburse annually $2,500,000. There are in the United States 5,500,000 communicants in the evangelical churches. In 1852 there were 26,252 evangelical ministers in the United States, or one to 988 of the population; now there are 49,295, or one to 791. Individual gifts in aid of education in the United States amounted, the past year, to $8,435,990, and a private member of one of the city churches has given four squares or blocks of ground near the Central Park, in the most beautiful and valuable part of the city, for the erection of a church, a hospital, a library and a home for the aged; and his contributions in land and cash to these objects will amount to $3,000,000 more. During six years past over $300,000 has been raised for the support of missionaries and the general work, and more than $100,000 has been contributed for the erection of mission chapels. The mission now have three commodious chapels and one good parsonage, and own in all real estate worth $80,000. The following are some of the results of the missionary labors for the year: Persons persuaded to attend churches, 16,467; temperance pledges, 1,680; five mission Sabbath schools and 1,500 children; 2,879 prayer meetings aggregate attendance, 83,156; 1,649 preaching services—aggregate attendance, 92,680. The treasurer's report shows the receipts of the year to have been $45,186.44, and the expenditures $51,030.77; due to the treasurer, $5,844.33. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Rev. Thomas DeWitt, D. D.; vice president, A. R. Wetmore; treasurer, Morris K. Jesup; corresponding secretary, Lewis E. Jackson; recording secretary, David D. Terry; superintendent of missions, Rev. George J. Mingins.

Reveling.

New Orleans is becoming as notorious as Rome itself for the splendor of its carnival displays. The whole thing, as we view it, is an unmitigated evil. It has its germ in the saturnalia of the ancient Romans—the festival of Saturn—in which all business was suspended, all social distinctions and proprieties were thrown aside, the streets were filled with crowds of wild and intoxicated perambulators shouting Lo Saturnalia, and the entire populace was given up to inordinate feasting and revelry. The Romish Church substantially adopted the saturnalia, changing the name to carnival—carne vale, farewell to meat—and placed its celebration so as to wind up with Mardi Gras—fat Tuesday, the day preceding the beginning of the forty days' Lenten fast. Rome pagan and Rome papal was and is the home and fountain of this monstrous development of riot and dissipation. The thing itself is worthy of its parentage as the offspring of idolatry, ignorance and superstition. Its peculiar growth and exhibition in New Orleans is owing to the fact that it was transplanted here by the Catholics of the Latin race, who for a long time composed the majority of our population. The social soil is still largely composed of the same elements of religion and blood, and this plant of Italian birth still finds a congenial ground in which to flourish.

It is doubtful, however, whether these causes alone are sufficient to account for the vigorous hold which this relic of paganism and Christian perversion still retains on our people. In its earliest inception, both pagan and papal, it met the demands of a vicious taste, and pandered to the ungodly appetites and depraved lusts of men. The same corrupt nature which rejoiced in organized revelry in the golden age of Augustus, and afterward, under the Popes, accepted unbridled license as a part of religion, is the nature which throws off all restraint to-day. The world at large cares nothing for the festivals of the church, but it will rush into a carnival as a most respectable dissipation, while the fast which follows is left to be honored by priests and nuns. It appropriates the loosening of moral restraint, while the severities and abstinence of the Lenten fast are altogether repudiated. It is to those who are "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God" that we owe the fostering influences which maintain and have given a revived impulse to a custom which is doing infinite damage to the morals of society. Last year we were told that there were painted and brazen prostitutes in the imposing and grotesque procession which the virtuous people from far and near had gathered to see.

We know there are sometimes spots in the feasts of charity, but the general tendency of these masquerades and unrestrained spectacles is to weaken the sense of virtue and to enthrone vice. The drinking carousals which attend the occasion, the promiscuous dancing, the vast sums squandered upon the senseless pageant, and wasted in extravagant costumes and entertainments, stamp the carnival as a thing most anchristian, as earthly, sensual and devilish throughout. The pernicious effects of this annual jubilee of worldliness are all the greater from the fact that it is semi-religious in its character and origin, related by way of compensation to the severe regimen of Lent, and that it has the hearty sanction of public sentiment. Our Protestant population are tinctured with the rampant freedom from the ordinary restraints of education, and slack-twisted members of the churches witness, if they do not join in, the midnight dances and voluptuous revelry of Mardi Gras. This rage of frivolity and excess of riot are thus authorized and countenanced, to the undoing of souls and to the scandal of religion. The ordinary restraints of pious culture and godly discipline are given to the winds for the time, and God and eternity are utterly forgotten. It is an orgasm of passion, sensuous and foolish, more becoming the Bacchanalia of pagan Greece than a people boasting of its Christian civilization.

Besides the inordinate love of novelty and pleasure, and the cravings of vice for temporary freedom from restraint, is the pecuniary profit which the carnival festivities bring to our city. These grand spectacular exhibitions and gorgeous pageantries are expected to pay. The throngs brought hither are immense, and they leave behind them their hundreds of thousands of dollars. The shopmen, the hotel-keepers, the merchants, the cabmen, the railroads, all reap a harvest. But, after all, it is paying dearly for the whistle. This worship of Diana brings no small gain to the craftsmen, but still we doubt whether it pays. What gain there may be is at the cost of morals and religion, and the net result pecuniarily is a paroxysm of prosperity more apparent than real. It is a mere straw at which our drowning trade is catching, and is no more than a straw in its abiding fruits. It would be far wiser to expend the same amount of labor, enthusiasm and money in building railroads, improving the great highways of commerce, in increasing the cheapness and general facilities of local business, and in working to reform and improve the political condition. There can be neither moral earnestness nor practical wisdom in this childish attempt to galvanize a dead corpse into life and health. After a temporary quiver, and a convulsive semblance of restored vitality, the return to death is final and hopeless.

But the question of pecuniary profit is altogether subordinate. If the carnival were to pave our streets with gold we should still utter our protest against this reveling, which has assumed such gigantic proportions, and has taken on such impressive and attractive forms. Christians should set their faces against it, and not permit themselves to be ensnared and beguiled by this strong delusion. "Let no man deceive you with vain words; for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience."

Rightly Dividing the Word.

We give an extract from "An Address to Young Preachers," published in the Southern Christian Advocate:

No man ought to be rated as a preacher until he is able "rightly to divide the word of truth." Preaching is divine teaching; and no one teaches unless the lessons he imparts are in accordance with the fundamental principles of the science involved. This idea of the right division of the word of truth is still architectural. The door must be in its proper place, and the window must be in its proper place. It will not do to misplace them because they both belong to the same general edifice. So neither will it do to preach a doctrine from a fancy text because the doctrine preached may be found in the Scriptures. The doctrine preached must be the veritable doctrine of the text taken, or else the workman has need to be ashamed, not having rightly divided the word of truth. It does not follow that because we have a general revelation it must be a general conglomeration also. No, verily. But it is divided into special divisions, and in these special divisions the student of divinity must learn to discriminate with great care, else he will disclose himself as a pitiable novice, even to very moderate critics, on occasions when he himself is indulging the idea that he is opening to his hearers most unthought-of mines of truth.

These special divisions in divine revelation constitute the unmistakable lines of thought which occupied the eternal mind as necessary to the full enlightenment of his rational creature man on all events and subjects material to his eternal destinies. Among these was the irrevocable decree of death—a decree which none of the circumstances or conditions of life can ever evade. This subject is especially set forth to the open gaze of man in the forty-ninth Psalm.

Here we will pause long enough to illustrate my position on the subject of preaching. A careless student of theology, burdened in soul with a sense of the remediless ruin of sinners, and casting about in his mind for a text that would present in its verbiage the hopeless condition of a soul after death, might fall upon the eighth verse of the forty-ninth Psalm; and, thinking of nothing but his chosen theme, read out as his text, "For the redemption of their soul is precious, and it ceaseth forever!" never noting the patent fact that, as a thing of necessity, "soul" in his text is the synonym of "life;" and that the chance to live on and never see corruption is the impossibility. This fact will appear clearly to every student of theology who is clearly set upon his pathway of studying Scripture according to my plan. Never dream of rightly dividing the word of truth until you are sure that all your predicates are in conformity with the scriptural law of exegesis. Scripture must be explained according to its own tenor. The revelation contained in this psalm is but a reiteration of the original decree entered up against man as a fallen spirit: "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Hence the Spirit declares that there is nothing in life—in its wealth, in its health, in its accidental glory—nothing that can save its worshipers from the humiliation of returning to dust again. To save the vain-glorious from their idolatry, God says to them: "They that trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches, none of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him." Here, leaving out the parenthetic declaration that in this warfare there is no discharge, and following the simple theme of inspired truth, that nothing that earth can furnish can give to God a ransom sufficient to buy off a friend from death, the preacher sees at once, by the force of connectional law in language, that soul in this text means life in the ordinary sense, and cannot be used as predicable of a lost soul.

My attention was called to this particular subject by hearing a preacher of large experience and great fame preach from this text as a special warning to sinners of their hopeless, irredeemable state after death. This, as a discourse on a Scripture topic, was well enough. But as a solution of his text it was an utter mistake. And surely the correct solution of the text is just what every preacher is understood to be pledged to furnish. No wonder, then, that this grand idea—the right division of the word of truth—is the graduation point in a preacher's course of study. Until this point is reached, let all be considered as but students still, undergraduates, only authorized to speak in the name of the Lord, not indorsed by the church as able expounders of the Scriptures. I brought this text, with my objections to the use thus made of it, before several preachers and brethren during an evening's conversation about such blunders by our preachers, when, to my amazement, I found the current opinion to be that such use was perfectly legitimate and proper. I did not hesitate to affirm that that issue of things was not in the mind of the Spirit when those words were inspired, and that whosoever offers from his text anything beside what the Spirit of inspiration put into it is unwittingly guilty either of adding to or diminishing from the words of the prophecy of this book.

How to Do It.

The Protestant Episcopal Church has its trouble in the matter of ministerial distribution—churches without preachers and preachers without churches. The Northern Presbyterians are talking of a bureau—a sort of ministerial intelligence office—to meet the difficulty. Why do not our brethren try the Methodist plan? We have Bishops of power—the best bureau in the world. Just what they seem to be seeking is what we have. "A Churchman" writes to the New York Observer:

Now at the present time, notwithstanding the popular notion that the Protestant Episcopal Church is a thoroughly administered thing, we are Episcopalians chiefly in name. I here express the very general conviction, and yet it is something which our newspapers do not dare to say. The spirit of independency is really sapping the foundation of true episcopacy among all parties in the church, "High" and "Low." We are in no danger of the "tyranny of Bishops." In America that fear, among sensible men, has passed away. To-day one want of the church is Bishops with power—that is, Bishops that are Bishops. The power must of course be constitutionally exercised, yet there must be power.

I have spoken as if the Bishops were to blame, because the unemployed so often turn away disheartened, yet I do not mean that. Our Bishops practically are powerless. Except in the employment of deacons, they have no appointing power, and moreover, while in theory they are recognized as the chief pastors of the church, they often, in reality, have less power than many who are supposed to have none at all. They occupy the position of generals who have no control over either rank or file.

But I need not pursue the idea farther in detail, as to churchmen. It is obvious, while the result is plain; one result being found in the multitude of clergy standing idle, like those persons in the market-place whom no man had hired. May we not, therefore, ask for Bishops with power, instead of mitered men of straw? Give us such, with power constitutionally diffused, and the places in New York bookstores now filled by throngs of idle clergymen, waiting of necessity, and others, like Micawber, waiting for something to turn up—will soon know them no more forever. The Observer has suggested a "bureau" to remedy the difficulty among Presbyterians, but churchmen have a bureau already. This is found in the Bishops who should have the authority to conduct that business, which Episcopal independency has turned over into other hands.

But perhaps, even with this practical acceptance of our own system, we should not fully reach the difficulty, at least so long as we are afflicted with societies for the "Increase of the Ministry." Agents are going about the land drumming recruits. Through their manipulation the Episcopal Church is being filled with drones, who believe that "preaching or anything is better than hoeing corn." Said the rector of one of the leading churches of New York, a man known for his piety and good works, and especially for his earnest labors in seeking to carry the gospel to "every creature:" "What we want is a society for the decrease of the ministry." In reality, the country is flooded with clergy. Said one of our Western missionary Bishops at a recent meeting: "We have men a plenty; we need to ask for men, now what we want is money." And if we cast a glance over the country we shall everywhere discover a reckless use of both men and money. Men are offered by the hundred upon the altar of sectarian gods. In villages of one thousand inhabitants we often find five different clergymen. One would do better than five. Against these societies for the increase of the ministry we should set our faces as flint. The law of demand should be left to regulate the supply, and the churches should thus be relieved of pseudo arithmetic and fraudulent philanthropy. The way to increase the ministry of the Episcopal Church is to utilize the men we have, many of whom are tearfully seeking their bread to-day, not knowing where to find it. And to accomplish this we must have not only less nonsense from education societies, but bishops with power.

The Pastoral Term.

Rev. Dr. John E. Edwards advocates, in the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, the removal of all limitations to the pastoral term, leaving the whole matter to the discretion of the Bishops. For ourselves we like the law very well as it now stands, and should regret to see any change; but there is something to be said on the other side. We quote briefly from Dr. Edwards' letter in the Episcopal Methodist of February 1:

It is not that "a Bishop ought not to remove" a pastor "who likes his people and his people like him," but that when, in the judgment of the Bishop, the highest interests of the church, in a given place, can be better subserved by the return of a pastor for a longer period than four years, his hands ought not to be bound by a purely arbitrary law of limitation. He ought to be allowed to use the preachers, as his godly wisdom may suggest and approve, at those points where the largest amount of good is most likely to be accomplished by them. If that should require the removal and interchange of pastors, let him so use them; but if, as is sometimes, not to say frequently, the case, the probabilities are that a pastor is in a position where he can render a more valuable service to his charge than he could render elsewhere, and the change would most likely, in his judgment, work damage to that charge, the Bishop should be permitted to exercise his own discretion in making the appointment, and not be compelled, by an inexorable law, to remove the pastor, irrespective of the wishes of the people, and in violation of his own convictions, with the lights before him, as to his duty in the premises, were he not fettered and restrained by an arbitrary law. There are cases where common sense, providence and the Holy Spirit all concur in indicating that a pastor's work is not done, and that the highest degree of efficiency in building up the church has not been reached in four years. He may have just reached the point where, by the plan he has been working, and the influence he has acquired, he might and most probably would achieve more permanent good for his charge in one additional year than he has been able to accomplish in the four years of service rendered. He has merely gained his vantage ground, and accumulated forces and acquired resources which put him in the position for doing more there for God, for the church and for souls than he could by possibility do elsewhere, or than any one else could do in his stead. Such instances do occur.

Traits.

A correspondent of the New York Observer, writing from New Orleans, notices some of the traits of the colored race in the following terms:

We note several traits of the colored race, as unfolded by emancipation. First, the Africans show almost universally a desire to learn to read. With many this resolve is so intense as to surmount all obstacles. The missionary, Dr. Medhurst, describes the Chinese desire for learning as really sublime. So the eager, persistent, almost universal efforts and sacrifices made by the poor down-trodden negro naturally astound the Saxon dwellers in the land of the orange and the palm.

We have witnessed those who seemed but a few removes from the oxen and mules they drove, with the book, primer, or even a piece of newspaper, spelling out letter by letter, and word by word, the treasure of wisdom or the political news. We found all the waiters in Nashville and New Orleans hotels white, and the reason given was: the negroes had so many political clubs and meetings they neglected their duties.

Another characteristic, seemingly contradictory to the last, is their idea of liberty being equivalent to idleness. Scores have expressed their surprise that since their slavery ended they have to work harder than before. This confounding freedom from toil as the idea of liberty is the curse of all half-civilized tribes. An improvident recklessness as to the future is another failing. A policeman told me that thousands of the Africans sustain life by a dime a day. A single dollar earned would feed them ten days. Hence the levee showed to as several thousand of them, and, the policeman added, three-fourths of them have nothing to do but lounge around. They all talk politics, and listen in groups to some one of their color reading a newspaper. We saw one sawing wood behind a wall on a cold day at Nashville, and a fire kindled near him on the earth to keep him warm. Five grown negroes were standing around the fire, and a friend hinted that they burned the wood as fast as it was sawed.

Another trait is their want of affection for their children. A New Orleans lady told us that mothers could with difficulty be induced to preserve the lives of their infants. It is a singular fact that a colored mother fondling and kissing her babe is a sight very rarely seen among the colored mothers.

One more class of views we notice. Such is the condition of political preferences, resulting from countless causes, that the blacks and whites in the South seem arrayed against one another. Some statesmen, with intimate knowledge of all parties, believe that the African race, fostered by the Federal government, misled by men from the North with ambitious, selfish ends to carry, will survive this emancipation transition period. They hold that the four millions may multiply to ten millions, and at length push out the whites and Africanize all the Southern States but Texas. In fact, in one portion of this State some two hundred families are ready to remove to Texas if the Federal power finally sustains the negro Legislature now in session; twenty thousand of the whites have emigrated from Georgia, mainly to Texas, during the last two years. Real estate here has sunk in value terribly, the business of the city of New Orleans has sadly dwindled, and men's hearts and hopes are crushed. Not a ray of light can be seen illumining the future of many of the best citizens of the South. We pretend to no solution of these and kindred problems.

"The Southern University, Etc."

MR. EDITOR: At Eufaula the Alabama Conference appropriated the interest on $10,000 to pay for the tuition of young preachers, and of the sons of preachers in the college. The Conference now has but this one college, and desires to put it on a permanent foundation. I believe every member would rejoice to see its usefulness enlarged and its reputation increased, and I believe, further, there is not a member but who will work to achieve these ends.

In addition to this appropriation it was resolved "that the sum of $1,000 be raised by the Conference, during the next year, for the help of the Southern University, and that the presiding elders be requested to divide it among the charges, and see to its collection." This is a very important matter for two reasons:

1. The college treasurer needs it to pay the professors for the current year's work. The faculty, to my certain knowledge, are embarrassed by the number of non-paying students. Up to January not one of the professors had received a support.

2. To take the collection would be to advertise the institution in almost every neighborhood within our bounds. This of itself is highly important. Our people ought to know all that can be known about our institutions, male and female. In taking this collection it would be an easy and natural way to recommend Summerfield and Tuskegee to the public, as well as Greensboro. For one, I would like to have the opportunity such a collection would afford of talking to our people and to the public about Methodist schools. The people do not know what we are doing. They do not know that we can educate their sons and daughters as well as they can be educated anywhere in the State. We talk a little to a few men at district meetings, but this does not answer the purpose.

It seems to me that the presidents of the colleges are too silent. Why not report through the ADVOCATE any items of interest, as pastors of stations and circuits do? Give us all the information you can to base our appeals upon for money and pupils; tell us of your college class meetings, prayer meetings, love-feasts, etc. I write this, Mr. Editor, because I have neither seen nor heard anything about this resolution since Conference. Possibly the presiding elders, in the press of business and multitude of cares, have forgotten it. I suppose they have, though the distribution may have been made and the time of collecting agreed upon. If it has not, however, it might be that an assessment agreed upon by Dr. Mitchell, Bros. Briggs and Richardson (all presiding elders, and living in Summerfield) could be submitted by letter to the other presiding elders and accepted, and in this way go on down to the preachers.

Respectfully, etc.,

J. W. RUSH.

MOBILE, February 18, 1873.

New Orleans District Conference.

The New Orleans District Conference will meet at Baton Rouge, Friday morning, April 4, at nine o'clock A. M. All the local and traveling preachers and all the members of the Quarterly Conferences of the district are members of the District Conference.

Those who go from New Orleans will have to leave on a Thursday evening (April 3) boat. By request of the pastor we suggest that all who purpose attending should immediately notify him of the fact. Address Rev. A. E. Goodwyn, Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

LET there be in necessary things unity, in everything charity; and then there need not be in everything uniformity.—Philip Henry.

Central Church, Memphis, Tenn.

Bro. Suratt's friends in Louisiana will be glad to hear of him and his church. We copy the following from the Western Methodist of February 15:

The brethren at the Central church had the pleasure, on Sunday morning last, of using for the first time their new and elegant pipe organ. The instrument was built expressly for this church, and is well adapted to the place which it fills in rear of the pulpit, which is according to the original design of the church. The music on the occasion was excellent. Miss Kate Williams is the regular organist, and is unsurpassed by any lady performer in the city. The location of the organ and choir is such as is calculated to make them what they ought invariably to be—the leaders of the congregation in singing, and not the monopolizers or destroyers of this important and interesting part of divine worship. The audience-room of this church, although in use for some time, has not been complete until now. It is convenient, pleasant, beautiful, inviting, and presents strong inducements for visitors to return. This charge is well organized, its principal officers being acknowledged in the community as men of piety, zeal, intellectual culture and high business qualifications. The ladies, too, and I may say especially, are active and efficient co-laborers with the pastor in all the interests of the church, and succeed well in adding to the numbers in Sunday school and gathering in new members of the church. The pastor, Rev. S. B. Suratt, is filling his station well, bringing up all the departments of the work, giving to his people effective gospel preaching and faithful pastoral attention. The Central church is in a prosperous condition. May its people be blessed soon with a glorious revival.

A MEMORIAL CARD, received a few days ago, brings us the sad but not unexpected announcement of the death of Mrs. Mary C. Lowber, wife of D. C. Lowber. Sister Lowber was for many years a resident of New Orleans, and was a devoted Christian and member of our church. She died in Liverpool, England, February 5, 1873. We received a letter from her, written but little more than a month previous to her death, in which she stated that she had been ill for over a year with a disease of the heart, and that lately it had made rapid progress. The letter closes with asking a particular interest in our prayers—"not that I may recover my health, but that I may in all things be resigned to the will of God." Neither time nor space permit us now to say what we could wish of this sainted woman. We have known her well for more than twenty years, and have rarely witnessed a heartier or more unselfish type of Christian devotion. Energy and delicacy were equally combined in her character, and her capacity for sympathy and helpfulness was almost unbounded. Her benevolence found expression in generous giving, in acts of charity, and in the most thoughtful and considerate ministrations to the afflicted.

THE Rev. William Morley Punshon, the distinguished Wesleyan preacher, spent part of the present week in New Orleans. On Monday night, the twenty-fourth instant, he preached at the Carondelet Street church. It was a privilege to hear this master of sacred eloquence, and we are sorry that the privilege was limited to a single sermon. Dr. Punshon reached the city on Monday, and, we were informed, was compelled to leave on Wednesday, in order to meet engagements elsewhere.

THE demonstrations on Tuesday were extensive, if not imposing. The carnival procession at midday was long, elaborate, varied and farcical. The Mistick Krewe of Comus gave their usual night pageant, exhibiting this time the descent of man, as illustrating the studies and theories of Darwin. This concluded about ten P. M., and then in many different halls began the dance. A day of folly, ending with thousands in the worst forms of dissipation.

LAST HOURS OF MAURY.—The following, concerning the closing hours of Commodore Maury, is from the Baltimore Sun:

Our correspondent states that in 1840 Commodore Maury connected himself with the Protestant Episcopal Church, and lived up to the full standard of his faith. He continues: "Long before his loved ones felt that he was indeed going to die, Commodore Maury felt it—knew it. He summoned them all (for they were all present) to his bedside and told them he was dying, but not to grieve, for he was at peace with God, and was ready and anxious to go. During the forty-eight hours just prior to his death he ate nothing, and talked of nothing but the glories that so soon awaited him. A little before the spirit departed, and when thought speechless, he was asked to give a sign if all was well. He calmly replied, 'All is well, all is well,' and then fell asleep."

JESUS CHRIST changes the heart of the man whom he designs to bring to God; he annihilates the moral distance between a holy God and a corrupt heart, first, by the precepts of his word, and the motives he presents to induce us to love God and despise the world; secondly, by his example, which he proposes to our imitation; thirdly, by his spirit, which mortifies the old man and forms a new man within us.

Books and Periodicals.

THE FOOTPRINTS OF SATAN, OR THE DEVIL IN HISTORY. By Rev. Hollis Read, A. M. New York: E. B. Trent.

A stout octavo of 541 pages, large print, abundance of margin, and illustrated copiously. The author states and vindicates the doctrine of a personal devil, and then exhibits sin and vice in their historical development, and in their social, religious, political and national aspects. The collection of statistics is the most valuable feature of the book, and the display of the footprints of satan is copious and suggestive. The author's answer to the question, Why is sin permitted?, is in the line of the old necessitarian theology. Says our author: "The design of God seems to be to allow sin to have its perfect work." "He allows satan to show what he can do first; and then the rightful Owner comes in and shows to the universe how much higher, nobler, holier purposes he can achieve by the same means." A most false and pernicious theology is this, that God permits or allows sin for a high and noble purpose. But the most serious blemish on the pages of the volume is in the references to the late war. Satan's footprints here are all on the Confederate side. Dr. Read speaks of it as "the slaveholders' rebellion," and most oracularly declares: "For that rebellion the white man of the South has been most terribly punished." In a moment of eloquent wrath our author exclaims: "Who has not read the sickening tales of Andersonville and Libby prisons, and the general treatment of Northern prisoners of war by the Confederate government, South?" And we might quote much more to the same effect. It is lamentably true of this work that "dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savor." In these slanders and misrepresentations the footprints of satan are quite as apparent as in any of the historical facts which are recited in the entire twenty-five chapters of the volume. To offer such a work to the Southern public is an insult to the intelligence and self-respect of our people. We are informed that it is sold only by subscription, and that agents are wanted. We are indebted to the Gulf States Publishing Company, New Orleans, for a copy.

THE GARDEN OF EDEN. By George Yenger, A. M. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1873.

The account of Eden, as given in Genesis, is spiritually interpreted, and expounded as symbolical. We do not know that the author intends to deny the literal account as historical, but it is quoted and most fancifully explained as if it were purely figurative, if not allegorical. It is an attractive little work for children, but we should hesitate to put it in their hands.

AN ORGAN OF THE OLD DOMINION. By Lunkin Silvervale. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1873.

This is a handsome duodecimo of 280 pages. The author is a lady who writes for the purpose of doing good, and proposes to furnish much information about the Chinese, and how to reach and influence them by missionary means. It appears to be in the form of a story. We have not read it and know nothing of its merits.

THE TRUE HISTORY OF JOSHUA DAVIDSON, COMMUNIST. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1873.

Evidently a work written in the interest of the great International and communist movement of the day. In this view it may interest some, as exhibiting the great under-thoughts and passions which are at work in modern society.

MARCY'S SCIOPTICON MANUAL. Revised edition. Philadelphia, 1873.

This little volume gives account of the camera obscura, magic lanterns, of the apparatus needed, the management, etc. The Sciopticon is an instrument in this line, invented by the author. People interested in these things should get the Manual.

THE PITTSBURG PROMPTER, published at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, one of the best of our religious exchanges, announces that after the first week in March the name will be changed to the Christian Advocate.

WE HAVE RECEIVED Good Words and the Sunday Magazine for February; Arthur's Home Magazine and the Children's Hour, the Galaxy, Lippincott's Magazine and the American Protestant for March.

OUR Sunday school publications for March are to hand, and not a bit less interesting than heretofore. The Sunday School Magazine is peculiarly good.

DR. CHALMERS was no exception to the saying that a prophet is not without honor save among his own countrymen. When he preached in London his own brother, James, never went to hear him. One day, at the coffee-house which he frequented, the brother was asked by one who was ignorant of the relationship, if he had heard this wonderful countryman and namesake of his. "Yes," said James, somewhat dryly, "I have heard him." "And what did you think of him?" "Very little, indeed!" was the reply. "Dear me!" exclaimed the inquirer, "when did you hear him?" "About half an hour after he was born," was the cool answer of the brother. When he preached at his native place, so strong was the feeling of his father against attending any but his own parish church, or so feeble was the desire to hear his son, that although the churches of the two parishes of East and West Anstruther stood but a few hundred yards apart, the old man would not cross the separating brook to hear him.

WHERE there is great strength, full of sweet and gentle dealing, there is gentleness in its most perfect form. And the true Christian disposition is seen when a man is clothed with all manner of vigor and power and knowledge and intuition, and carries them in the midst of an offending, sinful world, not only with the utmost long-suffering, but with extreme gentleness.—Plymouth Pulpit.

Educational.

A THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY was opened at Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, October 1, 1872, with four professors.

THE CHICAGO UNIVERSITY is said to have assets to the amount of $600,000, and liabilities to the amount of $100,000.

THE SYMONTON FEMALE COLLEGE, of North Carolina, under the presidency of Rev. S. Taylor Martin, commenced with forty-eight pupils, with the prospect of large additions. We wish it all success.

VASSAR COLLEGE, established for the education of women, has never received a cent from women. A man built and endowed it, and, save $200 worth of books, every gift has been made by men.

THE oldest living graduate of Williams College is Mr. Frederick Perry, of Stockbridge, Massachusetts. He was born in November, 1778, and graduated in the class of 1802. He is still vigorous and active, and takes a lively interest in all the intellectual and moral movements of the time. The next oldest graduate, we believe, is Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs, of Braintree, Massachusetts, father of Rev. Dr. Storrs, of the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, and now nearly eighty-six years of age.

THE Boston Journal states that, since the fire, melted granite and leather is found in abundance. A strange sight, however, is a melted brick wall, which can be seen at the rear of the premises occupied at the time of the fire by Butler, Johnson & Co. The liquid brick has run down over a considerable space.

THE attention of those desiring something substantial as well as stylish in the line of light wagons, carriages, etc., is directed to the card of one of our oldest and most reliable firms. Messrs. J. A. Lum & Co., No. 162 Gravier street. The old standing of Messrs. J. A. Lum & Co. is a sufficient guarantee that their work is as represented, and, being fully determined to meet the times, they offer their stock at factory prices. Quite a novelty is their child's "reversible" carriage. By a simple movement the body revolves, so that in either the push or pull the child looks ahead. A side position may also be had. These carriages are both single and double-seated, and in prices most moderate.

MR. PHILIP WERLEIN, the piano and organ dealer, Nos. 80, 82 and 90 Baronne street, has in warerooms a fine and large collection of Weber's, Dunham's, Hale's, Mathushek's, Cullin's, Grovesteen's, Ziegler's, etc., square and upright pianos, which he will sell at low prices, for cash and on monthly payments. Mr. Werlein offers great advantages to buyers, all of whom should not fail to visit his establishment. Old pianos renewed, repaired and tuned at reasonable prices.

THE SINGER IMPROVED FAMILY SEWING MACHINE.—The claims of this sewing machine are set forth in another column by the agent, Mr. William E. Cooper, 81 Canal street, who will always be pleased to exhibit its merits to visitors. Mr. Cooper is also agent for the celebrated Butterick & Co.'s paper patterns.

VISITORS to the city should not fail to examine the stock of lamps, chandeliers, etc., offered for sale by the Septoline Oil Company, No. 62 Camp and 15 Dauphine street. Orders from the country receive prompt attention.

THE NEW LOUISIANA REMEDY.—We call attention to the advertisement of this new remedy for coughs, complaints of the throat, etc. Depot, 101 Camp street.

SOAP MANUFACTORY.—We call attention to the advertisement of J. H. Keller, soap manufacturer, whose office and salesroom is at No. 110 Gravier street.

GEORGE COATS, No. 168 Magazine street, is prepared to remove and repair iron safes. Second-hand sewing machines and copying presses for sale.

ANDERSON'S PHOTOGRAPHS are recognized as among the best produced by any artist in the city. His gallery is at No. 183 Canal street.

FINE CLOTHING AND GENTLEMEN'S FURNISHING GOODS, at the reliable house of Pierson & Hews, Nos. 13 and 15 Camp street.

MESSRS. NAVRA & OFFNER, No. 171 Canal street, are selling China and crockery-ware at very low prices.

MARRIED.

WILSON—McDANIEL.—February 12, 1873, at the residence of the bride's father, Summerville, Alabama, by the Rev. Alexander Hood, Mr. J. T. Wilson, of Birmingham, Alabama, to Miss Mary E. McDaniel.

POICE—WELLS.—On the evening of the thirteenth of February, in Montgomery, Alabama, by the Rev. T. K. Armstrong, Rev. Edward G. Price to Miss Lydia Wells.

LOVING—HERBERT.—At the residence of J. H. Benman, Esq., of Forest, Mississippi, on the eighteenth of February, by Rev. G. W. Chatfield, Mr. H. W. Loving, of Carroll, Tennessee, to Miss Hattie J., daughter of Rev. R. H. Herbert, deceased, late of the Mississippi Annual Conference.

CAMPBELL—ADAMS.—At the residence of the bride's father, Mr. R. H. Adams, on Bayou Macon, by the Rev. A. W. Moore, on Tuesday, the eighteenth of February, 1873, Mr. Hayden H. Campbell and Miss Myra B. Adams, all of Franklin parish, Louisiana.

WE CALL THE ATTENTION of persons in search of a commercial education to Dolhear College, 201 and 203 Canal street. de12 3m

BUSINESS NOTICES.

ONE SIP of this will bathe the drooping spirit in delight beyond the bliss of dreams.

Be wise, and taste.—Milton's Comus.

Verily do the words of the inspired poet gleam with the light of prophecy; for if there is anything that is swift to operate beneficially on the human system, impaired by physical ailments, it is Price's celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Those whose lives "drag their slow length along," harassed by the petty but fretful annoyances of indigestion, dyspepsia, debility, febrile excitement, nervous irritability, exhaustion, or the general suffering that results from hepatic causes, deserve the fate to which they are consigned when, like the physician to whom the voice of sacred wisdom cried, "Heal thyself," they turn away from the means placed within their grasp. Price's Bitters will do the work. A vigorous stimulant, an agreeable elixir, a strengthening tonic and a grateful adjuvant, the very universality of whose use is confirmative of its efficacy, it stands to-day stamped with the signet-seal of medical approval, and radiant with the award of a high popular appreciation.

A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE.—If you have a cough do not neglect it. Thousands go to an untimely grave by neglecting what they call "a slight cold." These slight colds are very insidious. They soon become deep-seated and defy all remedies. Dr. Tutt's Expectorant will cure it. It can be had of any druggist.

TUSKEGEE, ALA., April 28, 1871.

DR. TUTT: In gratitude for the benefit received by the use of your Expectorant, I do cheerfully add my testimony to its most wonderful effects in relieving Asthma or Bronchitis. For several years I had suffered dreadfully with severe attacks of Asthma or difficulty of breathing. I was induced by the high recommendations given to your Expectorant to try it, and found that it gave almost immediate relief. It is about five months since I began its use. I have used six bottles, and have not had an attack since. It has been a great blessing to me. I cannot afford to be without it, and I heartily recommend it to all persons who are at all troubled with Lung or Throat diseases.

Very respectfully, MRS. A. M. WELLBORN.

REMOVE from the blood those wastes arising from the action of the system which, if allowed to remain in the circulation, give rise to diseases which speedily destroy life. Nature has appointed the kidneys and liver as her agents, by whose action impurities shall be eliminated from the system; and when these agents are torpid or debilitated, or disabled from any cause for their business, Hamilton's Buchu and Dandelion imparts fresh life and vigor to them, and assists of them the best blood purifiers one can have. J. C. TILTON, PITTSBURG, PA.

WOMAN'S FRIEND AND STEAM WASHER

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND SOLD.

WILL CLEANSE YOUR CLOTHES WITHOUT RUBBING.

EVERY ONE SOLD IS FULLY WARRANTED.

NO FLUIDS OR EXTRA SOAP USED.

IT CONSUMES LESS SOAP, LESS TIME AND LESS FUEL THAN THE USUAL method. It saves Labor, Wear and Tear, and the Annoyance of Wash-day. It requires no attention while the process of cleansing goes on. It will do the Washing of the Family while you are eating breakfast and doing up dishes.

Steam has long been known as the most powerful agent in removing dirt, grease and stains from clothing, and bleaching them white. Papermakers have for many years used steam in cleaning and bleaching their rags, and they succeed in making, by its agency, the filthiest picking from the gutter perfectly pure and white. Until the invention of the STEAM WASHER or WOMAN'S FRIEND, although often attempted, no method had been discovered of applying steam directly to the clothing, which could be used in a portable manner for domestic purposes. The WOMAN'S FRIEND washes without labor. It will do the washing of an ordinary family in from thirty minutes to an hour. The STEAM WASHER is superior to all other devices for the following reasons:

1. It does its own work, thereby saving a large portion of the time usually taken in a family.
2. It requires no attention whatever while the process of cleaning is going on. A lady can do her washing while she is eating her breakfast and doing up the breakfast dishes.
4. Clothing wears double the time, washed in this Washer, that it will washed by a machine, or by hand-labor or a washboard.
5. Lace Curtains and all fine fabrics are washed in a superior manner. For Flannels this Washer is most desirable, as it will not full them, as a machine or hand-rubbing does. All fabrics, from the finest lace to a bed-blanket, can be washed perfectly and with ease without the rubbing-board.

IT IS TRULY A LABOR AND CLOTHES-SAVING INVENTION.

READ THE FOLLOWING TESTIMONIALS:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 16, 1873.

This is to certify that I have used the Steam Washer sold by E. B. Hayes, General Agent, and fully indorse all he claims for it, having used it four or five weeks.
(Signed) ANN S. BASSETT, 186 Chippewa street.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 17, 1873.

This is to certify that I am using the Steam Washer called the "Woman's Friend," and consider it the best invented Washing Machine in use. It saves labor, soap, fuel and clothes, and I fully indorse all Mr. Hayes claims for it. (Signed) MRS. C. B. W. LEHRE, No. 31 St. Charles street.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 17, 1873.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 17, 1873.

I am using the Steam Washer called the "Woman's Friend," and consider it the best Inveuted Washing Machine in use. It saves labor, soap, fuel and clothes.
(Signed) N. MILLER, No. 86 Gravier street.

NEW ORLEANS, January 21, 1873.

This is to certify that I have tried the Washing Machine known as the "Woman's Friend," and find it all that it is claimed to be. I gave it a fair and honest trial, and I take great pleasure in recommending it to every housekeeper. It is very simple. A small child can use it. There is no rubbing necessary, and consequently no damage to clothes. Very respectfully, (Signed) MRS. N. JENKINS, No. 100 Baronne street.

NEW ORLEANS, January 30, 1873.

I have used the Steam Washer called the "Woman's Friend," and am perfectly satisfied that it will do all that Mr. Hayes claims for it. It is truly a labor-saving invention.
(Signed) FRANK SCHAEFFER, corner First and St. Denis streets.

NEW ORLEANS, January 30, 1873.

This is to certify that I have purchased from Mr. Hayes the Steam Washer called the "Woman's Friend," and I find it to be a great invention. It saves labor, soap, fuel and clothes, and I can fully recommend the same. No family should be without one.
(Signed) MRS. J. F. ROHRBACHER, No. 27 Camp street.

NEW ORLEANS, January 31, 1873.

E. B. HAYES, Esq., NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Dear Sir: The Steam Washer I bought of you, called the "Woman's Friend," I find does all that you promised for it, and ought to be in every family.

PHŒNIX OIL. PREPARED BY J. J. LINK, New Orleans.—This valuable Liniment has no equal, and can be depended on as one of the best offered to the public. The proprietor, therefore, leaves it to them to judge of its merits, feeling satisfied that its virtues will speak for itself. This Liniment will cure the following diseases if the directions are strictly followed, viz: Piles of twenty-two years' standing have been cured with this Liniment. Who will suffer with this painful disease any longer, when surcharge and easy a remedy is offered? For burns or scalds the proprietor challenges the world to produce its equal; it will instantly give relief. For old indolent sores it has effected cures where the most scientific failed. For fresh cuts, sprains, bruises, tetterworm, ringworm, scald head, erysipelas, sting of a wasp, spitter or snake bite, chapped lips, chapped hands, sore mouth, sore throat, sore or caked breast, rheumatism, and pain in the side, breast or back. In cases of pneumonia it will give great relief, where there is much pain in the side or breast, by rub

The Child'z Corner.

TWO WORDS.

There are two words, dear children,
That, properly used,
Will make you true heroes;
But, crossed and abused,
Will warp your whole natnrre;
Then watch well your tongue,
And say "Yes" to the right,

When tempters plead with you,
And ask you to take
A cigar or some liquor,
And say it will make
A man of you, answer them
Firmly, and say
Your "No" so 'twill frighten
The rascals away.

When brothers plead with you
To relieve their distress,
Be ready and willing To answer them "Yes."
Now don't get them "crossed,"
And say "No" to that call,
And "Yes" to the patrons
Of old alcohol.

There are many grown people
Who make this mistake;
And I pray you take care
For your own honor's sake;
For half the world's sorrow
And folly and woe
Comes from using a "Yes"
In place of a "No."

Five Steps to the Gallows.

"A man had committed murder, was tried, found guilty and condemned to be hanged. A few days before his execution he drew upon the walls of his prison a gallows with five steps leading up to it.

"On the first step he wrote: Disobedience to parents.

"On the second step: Sabbath-breaking.

"On the third step: Gambling and Drunkenness.

"On the fourth step: Murder.

"The fifth step was the platform on which the gallows stood.

"This poor fellow doubtless wrote the history of many a wasted and lost life."

"No doubt of it," says Captain Hunter. "Thousands and tens of thousands are ruined every year in a similar way. I believe that drunkenness ruins more than anything else. That was one of the steps to the gallows which this prisoner had painted; and it made me think of a question and answer of which I once heard:

WHAT'S WHISKY BRINGING?

"'What's whisky bringing?' inquired a large dealer in that article.

"'Bringing men to the gallows and women and children to want,' was the reply of a bystander."

Pretty good answer, that, though not exactly the one that was wanted. If there is a more wasteful practice in the world than liquor-drinking, we don't know what it is. It wastes the grain of which it is made; it wastes the mind and body of the drinker; it wastes the property of himself, his family and his neighborhood; and, finally, wastes and ruins his soul. There is no economy in it in any way or shape.

But here is something which Mr. Singer has quietly laid on the table:

THE CRUST.

"WASTE NOT—WANT NOT."

I must not throw upon the floor
The crust I cannot eat;
There's many a hungry little one
Would think it quite a treat.

My parents take the kindest care
To get me wholesome food;
And so I must not waste a bit
That would do others good.

The grain from which my bread is made,
God causes it to grow;
How sad to waste what he has given!
He would both see and know.

'Tis willful waste brings woeful want,
And I may live to say:
Oh! how I wish I had that bread
Which once I threw away!

Lively Mr. Spry has been dancing around for some time, as though he had something to say.

"You've had such a long, serious preachment about temperance, and getting up stairs, and economy, that I couldn't sit still. I'm too lively a chap to keep quiet long. However, I believe all that's been said to-day, though I shouldn't have said it quite so solemnly. But we're not all alike, you know. Wake up now, all of you youngsters, and help yourselves to my

ODDS AND ENDS.

A little boy, five years old, while writhing under the tortures of the ague, was told by his mother to get up and take a powder.

"Powder!" said he, raising himself upon one elbow. "Powder! Why, mother, I a'n't a gun!"

"That was fine beef and potatoes I had for my dinner to-day," remarked an Irishman.

"Troth, and isn't that a curious coincident!" exclaimed another eagerly; "the very same dinner that I had meself, barrin' the bafe!"

"John, I saw your cousin Isaac a few weeks ago, and he had just received a terrible fall, which cut a most horrible gash in his arm."

"Ah! poor fellow! What did he fall on?"

"Well, really, I forget now; but it rather strikes me he fell on Tuesday morning."

A little fellow going to church for the first time, where the pews were very high, said, on coming out: "I went into a cupboard and took a seat on the shelf."

"What is truth?" The question was proposed at a deaf and dumb institution, when one of the boys drew a straight line. "And what is falsehood?" The answer was a crooked line.

A little fellow was eating some bread and milk, when he turned around to his mother and said: "O mother! I am full of glory. There was a sunbeam on my spoon, and I swallowed it."—Methodist.

The Two Bears.

I remember reading, not long ago, about a man and his wife who were known to live very unhappily together. They were said to be the most quarrelsome people in the whole village in which they lived. They wouldn't bear the least thing from each other. Like a dog and cat, there was a constant snarling and growling and quarreling between them. But all at once it was observed by some of the neighbors that a great change had passed over them. They didn't quarrel any more. No harsh, cross words passed between them. Instead of this, they were observed to be gentle and kind to each other, and their home, from being a scene of constant strife, became the home of peace and happiness. Of course this excited a good deal of surprise in the neighborhood. Everybody was wondering what had happened to old Mr. and Mrs. Snarling.

At last an old lady in the neighborhood, whom we may call Miss Inquisitive, felt that she couldn't stand it any longer. So she paid a visit to [illegible]. Everybody in the village is talking about the wonderful change which has come over you and your husband. But nobody seems to know what it's owing to; so I thought I would just come in and ask you what it is which has produced this change."

"I am glad to see you, Miss Inquisitive," said Mrs. Snarling; "the change, I assure you, has been a very happy one to us. It has been brought about by two bears."

"Two bears!" exclaimed Miss Inquisitive, lifting her hands in astonishment.

"Yes, two bears; and I'm very glad they came into our house."

"But what in nature do you mean?"

"I mean two Scripture bears."

"Two Scripture bears! Why you puzzle me more and more."

"It's true, though."

"I don't remember reading in Scripture of any two bears, except those that ate up the wicked children who mocked the Prophet Elisha, and they must have been dead long ago."

"Yes; but there are two other bears mentioned in Scripture."

"Pray tell me where they are spoken of, for I am sure I don't recollect 'em."

"We read about one of them in Galatians vi, 2, where it says: 'Bear ye one another's burdens.' And we read about the other in Ephesians iv, 2, where it says: 'Forbearing one another in love.' Their names are: Bear and Forbear."

"Well, I'm sure!" said Miss Inquisitive, and away she went home.

The simple meaning of it was, Mr. and Mrs. Snarling had become Christians, and had taken these two Scripture bears home to live with them. How I wish you would all take the two bears home with you! Yes, and keep them there. Let them stay in the nursery—in the dining-room—in the chamber where you sleep—and in the play-room. Take them with you when you go to school—make them your companions wherever you go. They make no noise. They cost nothing to keep. They can do no harm—but they may do a great deal of good. Oh, if these two bears were only allowed to come into every house, and dwell there, how much trouble and sorrow it would prevent, and how much good it would do.—R. N., in the Children's Friend.

A Mother's Boy.

"Is there a vacant place in this bank which I could fill?" was the inquiry of a boy, as with a glowing cheek he stood before the manager.

"There is none," was the reply. "Were you told that you could obtain a situation here? Who recommended you?"

"No one recommended me, sir," calmly answered the boy. "I only thought I would see."

There was a straightforwardness in the manner, an honest determination in the countenance of the lad which pleased the man of business, and induced him to continue the conversation. He said:

"You must have friends who could aid you in obtaining a situation; have you told them?"

The quick flash of the deep blue eyes was quenched in the overtaking wave of sadness as he said, though half musingly:

"My mother said it would be useless to try without friends;" then recollecting himself, he apologized for the interruption, and was about to withdraw, when the gentleman detained him by asking why he did not remain at school for a year or two, and then enter the business world.

"I have no time," was the reply. "I study at home, and keep up with the other boys."

"Then you have a place already," said his interrogator. "Why did you leave it?"

"I have not left it," answered the boy quietly.

"But you wish to leave. What is the matter?"

For an instant the child hesitated; then he replied, with half reluctant frankness:

"I must do more for my mother!"

Brave words!—talisman of success anywhere, everywhere. They sank into the heart of the listener, recalling the radiant past. Grasping the hand of the astonished child, he said with a quivering voice:

"My boy, what is your name? You shall fill the first vacancy for an apprentice that occurs in the bank. If, meantime, you need a friend, come to me. But now give me your confidence. Why do you wish to do more for your mother. Have you no father?"

Tears filled his eyes as he replied: "My father is dead, my brothers and sisters are dead, and my mother and I are left alone to help each other. But she is not strong, and I wish to take care of her. It will please her sir, that you have been so kind, and I am much obliged to you." So saying, the boy left, little dreaming that his own nobleness of character had been as a bright glance of sunshine into that busy world he had so tremblingly entered. A boy animated by a desire to help his mother will always find friends.

"You won't have any left if you give away so many," we said to a little girl the other day, who had been lavish with her kisses. "Yes, I shall," she responded quickly; "I have to pickle ever so many now, so that they won't get stale. Will you have a pickled one?" We declined, but have pondered somewhat since on stale and pickled kisses.

A LITTLE BOY'S THOUGHT.—"What a beautiful place heaven is!" said a little boy not four years old.

"Why do you think so?" said his mother.

"Because," said he, pointing to the stars, "the roofs of the floor are so beautiful."

Farm, Garden and Household.

SMALL FARM MAXIMS.—1. Small farms are cheaper and easier to manage than large ones, and pay better for the capital invested. Therefore small farms are the best.

2. If you want to make your farm pay you must give it your daily personal attention. If your farm is too large you cannot do this; hence, as I said above, small farms are the best.

3. If you don't want your farm to run away you must stop the little leaks. We may expect fewer leaks on a small place than on a big one; hence, again, small farms are best.

4. Feed your land well, and it will feed you. It takes less time to feed a few acres than a great many. So, you see, small farms are best.

5. If you would live long and enjoy life, work a little, then rest a little. But if you have a large farm you must labor all the time. Here, again, small farms are best.

6. To raise big corn you must keep small grass. To make small grass you must cut often. So in this we find small farms are best.

7. If you have a good fence you need fear no loss by stock. But fences are costly. Thus, once more, we find small farms are best.

8. If you want good roads, and plenty of schools, churches and mills, you must have a dense population. If farms are large this is impossible. Therefore I declare small farms to be best.

9. Farms should increase in value year by year. It costs less to improve a few acres than a great many.

LIVE AND DEAD WEIGHT OF ANIMALS.—The amount of meat obtained from a domestic animal sold by its live weight is very variable, and experiments have recently been made in Liverpool to ascertain the proper allowances to be made. From the statistics to be derived from the public slaughterhouses or abattoirs of Paris or Brussels, it appears that the race and the condition of the animal, besides many other circumstances, affect the result, and that certain animals yield as much as 70 per cent. of meat, while others only give 50 per cent. The mean weight of meat produced, however, is calculated at 58 per cent. of the live weight in beef cattle. In the case of sheep the proportion is from 40 to 50 per cent. From experiments made it appears that the different products obtained from oxen and sheep are as follows: An ox of the live weight of 1,322 pounds yields, meat, 771.4 pounds; skin, 110.2; grease, 88; blood, 55.1; feet and hoofs, 22; head, 11; tongue, 6.60; lungs and heart, 15.33; liver and spleen, 20.05; intestines, 66.15; loss and evaporation, 154.322—making the total of 1,322 pounds. The products from a sheep weighing 110.2 pounds are as follows: Meat, 55.1 pounds; skin, 7.714; grease, 5.51; blood, 4.408; feet and hoofs, 2.204; head, 4.408; tongue, lungs, heart, liver and spleen, 4.408; intestines, 6.612; loss and evaporation, 19.836—making the total of 110.2 pounds.

DEATH FROM A GLANDERED HORSE.—A glandered horse belonging to Roswell C. Miner, of Steuben, New York, in blowing from his nostrils discharged a portion of the poisonous mucous, a drop of which entered one of Mr. Miner's eyes. He immediately wiped it out, as he supposed, but within twenty-four hours his eye was much swollen, attended with great pain. Medical aid was procured and his case pronounced a hopeless one. The virus matter had so permeated his system that his recovery was pronounced impossible. His flesh turned purple and was thoroughly impregnated with the poison. He lingered in agony about twenty days, and died a most wretched death. His friends were compelled to bury him immediately, and with him the entire bed and bedding on which he had lain.

Instances of human death from contact with glandered horses are by no means uncommon, and the owners of glandered horses should be compelled by law, under heavy penalties, to destroy them immediately upon the discovery of the disease. The late James C. Wilkins, one of the heaviest planters in Mississippi in 1836, lost seventy-six horses and mules with this fell disease, and was compelled to burn his plantation stables, which had cost $8,000.

EARACHE.—I take a piece of salt pork, say an inch or more long and half an inch square, cut down one end to fit the ear, and insert it, taking care to have the piece too large to slip in. I use it with my family and always find it gives almost instant relief. Tie a handkerchief to keep it in place, if the child will allow it. I also use pork for sore throat, croup and lung colds. Cut slices half an inch thick, dip in warm water, sprinkle on a little pepper, and sew on flannel.—N. B. W., in Household.

NEW HORSE COLLAR.—An important improvement in the manufacture of horse collars has just been devised by a Philadelphia mechanic. The collar, being stuffed with elastic cork, is light in weight, and adapts itself to the shape of the animal as if it were molded. It is highly elastic, does not chafe or gall the neck, and, the cork being a non-conductor, injury from heat is prevented.

IN MAKING cafe noir, the after-dinner coffee, it is taken noir—with no milk—and the reason is obvious. Cafe-au-lait forms a fine delicate curd, which is a sustaining meal of itself, even if you have no bread with it, and takes time to digest, while cafe noir is a famous aid to the digestion of luncheon and dinner, and itself needs little or no digestion, as it is a stimulant.

POTATOES.—Peachblows and other late varieties should be planted early. If you are late, plant the Early Rose or some other variety that ripens early. We have had a good crop of Flukes planted the first week in June. The Early Rose has a tendency to grow out of the ground, and should be planted deep, or else be well hilled up.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

WANTED—MEN WHO WANT TO MAKE Money.—Here is an opportunity for making money rarely presented in a lifetime. We have got the best and surest-selling article ever invented, that every housekeeper buys on sight. It is a small Furnace, weighing only six pounds, that can be used with or without a stove. It will fit in the holes of any sized stove or range, and will do as much work with one quart of fuel—charcoal, chips, coke, corncobs, wood or soft coal—as can be done on any stove with one bushel. It will boil, broil, roast, toast, bake and stew. It is the best tin-iron heater in the world. Its economy in saving fuel is marvelous. You have no smoke, gas or heat in the room. It sells the year round. Retail price only $2. Thousands are sold every week. Any man with a small capital can clear from $20 to $40 per day by owning the right of any good county, and a whole State is of incalculable worth to a man of enterprise. We will send a sample Furnace to any part of the United States on receipt of $2. Address, for circular,

THE NEW LOUISIANA REMEDY,
FOR
COUGHS, CATARRH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, CONSUMPTION, ETC.,
is creating extraordinary interest wherever known. The following is a sample of the evidence that is pouring in from all directions:

(COPY.)
NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 21, 1873.
Two years ago my wife was pronounced by physicians to be fast going into consumption, and I was constrained by a friend to use Smith's Pulmonic Syrup, and since the use of it her recovery has been remarkable; in fact almost entirely cured. The medicine we consider INVALUABLE.
F. R. HAYES,
Sexton Carondelet M. E. Church South.

which acts on the KIDNEYS, LIVER and BOWELS, and removes impurities of the system by opening its outlets.
W. C. HAMILTON & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Mress Fever Tonic.
Ask your druggist for this Remedy. A box of Pills with each bottle, and is sold: NO CURE NO PAY. ☞ Take no other Ague Cure. Ask for KRESS FEVER TONIC. It is the safest. Don't forget the Warrant. If it fails to cure you, get your money back.
W. C. HAMILTON & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

PILES CURED.
HAMILTON'S BUCHU AND DANDELION promotes digestion of the food by its influence on the stomach. It promotes the healthy action of the Kidneys. It secures activity of the Liver and regularity of the Bowels, and Prevents Constipation, which causes Piles. Try it.
W. C. HAMILTON & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

NINETY-NINE PER CENT.
L. W. Faulkner, of Champaign, Illinois, says "I have been selling KRESS FEVER TONIC two years under a warrant, and have had but one bottle returned as failing to cure. From what I see of its action I believe that it will cure Ninety-nine cases of Ague in every One Hundred."
W. C. Hamilton & Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, warrant this remedy to cure Ague in all its forms. A box of Pills FREE with each bottle.

Rational Treatment of all Kidney, Urinary and Liver Diseases
IS EFFECTED BY
HAMILTON'S BUCHU AND DANDELION
It acts directly on these organs, enabling them to remove those wastes in the blood which cause Gravel, Diabetes, Bright's Disease, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Scrofula, etc.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The weather has been mild and pleasant, with light showers on Wednesday night and Thursday morning. Nothing of any importance has transpired with regard to the crops. [illegible] all the ports, there seems to be more disposition to reduce estimates under 3,500,000 bales, but many count on 3,800,000 to 3,900,000 bales.

The river is 6 feet 8 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-first instant:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales | 27,656 |
| Lake | | 40 |
| Arkansas | | 8,357 |
| Mobile | | 833 |
| Texas | | 392 |
| Total | | 37,278 |

On Saturday, although it was a holiday, and the banks and Cotton Exchange were closed, while no telegrams were received from New York, yet the demand was fair and the sales summed up 5,900 bales at rather easier prices, but without any marked decline. On Monday the movement was still more animated, and 6,950 bales changed hands, but at still easier prices, the closing rates showing a partial decline of ⅛c., ordinary being quoted at 15¾@16¼c., good ordinary at 17¼@18¼c., low middling at 18¼@19c., middling at 19½@19¾c., and strict middling at 20@20¼c., with no variation in good middling. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, and 1,000 bales changed hands during the morning at about previous rates, but as business was suspended at an early hour, the entire transactions for the day embraced only 1,500 bales. Strict ordinary, dusty, sold at 16¼c., strict ordinary to good ordinary, approximating the latter, at 17¼c., strict good ordinary at 18¼c., and strict low middling, high style, at 19¼c. The Cotton Exchange was open until half-past four P. M., and the usual telegrams were received from New York and Liverpool, but their tenor was not of a character to have any marked influence.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 14,350 bales, against 13,800 for the corresponding time last week and 17,950 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 853,862 bales, against 758,646 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 451,181 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 158,479 to Great Britain, of 37,475 to France, and of 123,894 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Low ordinary | 14½ | @ 15¾ |
| Ordinary | 15¾ | @ 16¾ |
| Good ordinary | 17¾ | @ 18¼ |
| Low middling | 18¾ | @ 19 |
| Middling | 19¼ | @ 19¾ |
| Strict middling | 20 | @ 20¼ |
| Good middling | 20¾ | @ 20¾ |

SUGAR.—The market has again continued dull, with the tendency in prices in favor of buyers. The receipts on Saturday and Monday were confined to 704 hhds., which were partially sold at 5¾@6½c. for inferior, 7@7¼c. for common, 7¼c. for good common, 7¾@8c. for fair, 8¼@8¾c. for good fair, 8¾@8¾c. for fully fair, 9@9¼c. for prime, 9¾@9¾c. for strictly prime, 10@10¼c. for choice, 10@11c. for yellow clarified, and 11@11¾c. for white clarified.

MOLASSES.—The receipts are now small. They are poor in quality, and are mostly fermenting. The demand is good, and the supplies on Saturday and Monday, 527 bbls., were mostly sold at 46c. for inferior fermenting, 51c. for centrifugal, 55c. for cistern bottom, 55c. for common fermenting, 58c. for common not fermenting, and 60@63c. for prime to strictly prime fermenting.

CORN.—The receipts have been liberal and prices have declined. On Saturday 10,500 sacks sold at 68c. for mixed, and 70@72c. for white. On Monday 16,500 sacks sold at 60c. for soft, 65c. for white, and 68c. for yellow.

OATS.—Owing to liberal receipts prices have declined. On Saturday the sales comprised 1,800 sacks at 50@52c. ₱ bushel for choice. On Monday 600 sacks choice sold at 50@52c. ₱ bushel. On Tuesday 500 sacks choice sold at 52c. ₱ bushel.

BRAN.—The supply has been good and in excess of the demand, and prices have declined. On Saturday 250 bags sold at $1.20, and on Monday 250 bags at $1.25@1.30 ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—The receipts since our last review have placed a supply in first hands. The market is quiet but firm. On Saturday 248 bbls. new mess sold, on the landing, at $14.75, and 50 bbls. old at $14.50 ₱ bbl. On Monday 130 bbls. country mess sold at $14.62½, and 25 bbls. city mess at $15 ₱ bbl. On Tuesday 180 bbls. new mess sold at $14.75 ₱ bbl. New mess is retailing at $15@15.25, and old at $14.50 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—On Tuesday the market was quiet with a fair supply; 9 casks clear sides and 15 casks clear rib sides sold on private terms. Shoulders were quoted at 7c., clear rib sides 8¾c., clear sides 8¾c. ₱ lb.

HAMS.—The market is in good supply, but there is a much better feeling and prices are firm. On Saturday 10 tierces choice sugar-cured sold at 12¼c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday 15 tierces sold at 12¼@12¾c. ₱ lb., which were the ruling rates.

LARD.—On Monday 60 and 75 tierces kettle-rendered sold at 8c., and 10 tierces refined at 8¼c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday 422 tierces kettle-rendered and refined sold, in several lots, at 8c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 114¾@114¾ (against 114¾ at New York,) and, after an extremely limited business, closed at the opening rates (against 114¾ at New York).

The sales of silver have been confined to limited retail transactions. American half dollars are quoted at 110@111, and Mexican dollars at 2 ₱ cent. premium in gold for new, and 3 ₱ cent. for old.

THE FIVE KNAVES.—AN ORIENTAL TALE.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

nce on a time, in Indostan, thief conceived a cunning plan
o potent is the voice of Hope) save his throttle from the rope, ough now the day was drawing nigh hen he by law was doomed to die.
bade the jailor tell the King fain would show a wondrous thing—precious secret, fairly worth
e ear of any prince on earth.
d now the culprit, being led to the royal presence, said:
his golden coin which here you see, planted, will become a tree
ose fruit—increased an hundred-fold—ll be, like this, the purest gold.
ray your majesty to try this be true before I die."
th this the King and courtiers went o the garden with intent plant the curious coin of gold.
aow, when all was ready: "Hold," claimed the thief, "this hand of mine uld surely spoil our whole design; hand that plants the gold must be so all is naught) entirely free
m stain of fraud; and so I pray
r gracious majesty will lay seed in earth." "Yes—no—in sooth," King replied, "for in my youth ffered from my sire; some stain,
all my sorrow, may remain;
good prime minister is hero;
hand, no doubt, is wholly clear
ny taint." "Nay," he replied, hat's more than I can well decide;
ax-receiver—now—I may e kept n trifle. So I pray be excused for prudence' sake, let our commissary take coin in hand. Sure that were best, he, no doubt, can stand the test."
ith!" said the commissary, "I id rather not. I can't deny good intent; but since I pay e sums of money every day oldiers, sailors and a herd pies—I wouldn't give my word ve not kept a small amount entered in my book-account.
e an error—e'en the least—ld spoil the charm, pray let the priest ceed to plant the coin of gold."
y, that I fear would be o'er bold; bite my prayers and pious zeal," ded his reverence, "I deal thes and sacrificial dues;
so I beg you will excuse sharing in a work like this, re nothing must be done amiss."
ith?" said the thief, "since no man here we have learned) is wholly clear navish tricks, I ask you whether should not all be hung together?"
monarch, laughing, made reply:
by, yes, if every rogue must die;
, since we five are knaves confessed, don you—and spare the rest!"

NOT LONG AGO an "accident" occurred in Georgia upon the Macon & Western Georgia railroad, by which seven negroes and one white man were killed. According to the Macon Enterprise it "was due, in part, to the intoxication of the engineer on one of the trains." About the same time, as we learn from one of our exchanges, an engineer on a Pennsylvania railroad met at one of the larger stations at which his train stopped a party of friends, with whom he drank freely, and on leaving, in a half-crazed, intoxicated condition, ran his train for fifty miles to the end of his section in a most frantic and perilous manner. Sometimes he would go at a most furious rate of speed, dashing by stations and around dangerous curves, then would slow up, and then dash off wildly again, as though taking all to fast and certain destruction. The passengers, perceiving something to be wrong, became greatly alarmed, and were powerless in the hands of the drunken madman, who was for the time master of their destiny. Fortunately they reached the end of the extremely perilous ride unharmed, except by the great fright, and the engineer was immediately removed and discharged. What a record of life and property, all from the few glasses of poisonous, intoxicating liquor! Who can estimate the number of casualties, and the amount of suffering therefrom, occasioned by strong drink?

MR. DARWIN'S forthcoming work on "Expression in Man and Animals" bids fair to be of a more popular character than any of his former publications. It will comprise with a statement of the general principles of expressions—that is, certain actions become habitual in association with certain states of the mind, and are performed, either or not of service, in each particular case. This will be illustrated in the case of expression of the various emotions in man and the lower animals. The means of expression in animals will then be discussed, and the special expressions of animals and man, such as the depressions of the corners of the mouth in grief, frowning, the enclosure of the mouth to express determination, gestures of contempt, the dilation of the pupils from terror, the causes of blushing, etc. In conclusion, the bearing of the subject will be spoken of on the specific unity of the races of man, the part which be discussed which the will and attention have played in the acquirement of various expressions, and the question of their acquisition by the progenitors of man will be referred to. Seven beliotype plates, reproduced from photographs, will illustrate the work.

MARKED CONCESSION.—The young Emperor of China has yielded to the demands of the foreign embassadors, and will henceforth permit them to enter his presence without performing the kow-tow, the obeisance and divine honors which have always been required of those approaching him.

SCIENTIFIC.

LIGHT AND PLANTS.—The investigations of Dr. Burt show that green light is almost as fatal to vegetation as darkness; red light is detrimental in a smaller degree; yellow light is still less injurious, though more so than blue light; but each color, taken singly, is unfavorable to vegetable growth, and their union in white light is necessary to healthy plants. Other inquirers, however, profess that some monochromatic lights—notably blue—are highly stimulating. The doctors disagree.

A GERMAN INVENTOR claims to have discovered the secret by which glass is made malleable; and it is said that threads of this glass can be woven and braided. The announcement, however welcome, may yet be received with some reservation, as brittleness has always been recognized as not only a quality but a physical property of glass; though it may be that, when reduced to exceedingly fine fibers and properly annealed, this substance can be sufficiently bent to allow of its being woven into coarse fabrics suitable for hangings and curtains.

WATERPROOF GLUE.—Ordinary glue can be rendered insoluble in water by adding to the water with which it is mixed, when required for use, a small quantity of bichromate of potash, and exposing the articles to which it is applied to the light. Chromic acid has the property of rendering glue and gelatine insoluble; and, as the operation of heating the glue-pot is usually conducted in the light, no special exposure of the articles to which it is attached need be made. It is probable that paper could be rendered impervious to water by pasting the sheets with this prepared glue. The bichromate is said to render rubber particularly hard and unattackable by hot water. The proportion of bichromate to be taken must be ascertained by experiment. For most purposes one-fifth of the amount of glue employed will be found sufficient.

DEEP-SEA CURRENTS.—The principle involved in the circulation of the waters of the sea were beautifully shown before the Royal Geographical Society by a simple experiment. A trough with plate-glass sides, about six feet long and a foot deep, but not more than an inch wide, was filled with water. At one end a piece of ice was wedged in between the sides to represent the polar cold; while the tropic heat was represented at the other end by a bar of metal laid across the surface of the water, the projecting end of which was heated with a spirit-lamp. Red coloring matter was then put in at the warm end, and blue at the cold end, so that the currents could be traced. The blue water, chilled by contact with the ice, immediately fell down to the bottom, crept slowly along, and gradually rose toward the surface at the equatorial end, after which it gradually returned along the surface to its starting point. The red water crept first along the surface to the polar end, then fell to the bottom just as the blue had done, and formed another stratum, creeping back again along the bottom, and coming to the surface. Each color made a distinct circulation during the half hour in which the audience viewed the experiment.

FELLING FORESTS BY ELECTRICITY.—Among the recent discoveries of science is a process for cutting wood by passing a galvanic current over a platina wire in sufficient quantity to raise its temperature to a red heat. The inventor or discoverer, George Robinson, found that by gently pushing a piece of wood against a red-hot platina wire, especially when aided by a slight sawing movement, the wood was divided in any required direction as by a handsaw, and, of course, without any effort of skill or appreciable expenditure of muscular power. The Scientific American says: "By arranging the wire with handles or other means, so as to guide it readily, the lumber, whether in trees, logs or planks, may be cut easily as desired." The Kern County Courier says: "If the mammoth trees that grow on the upper waters of the Kern river could be utilized, the inconvenience of an inadequate supply of lumber would never be felt in this valley. These trees, hundreds of which may often be found crowded together in sheltered valleys along the stream, will average not far from thirty feet in diameter, and, of course, without present appliances for the present purposes, are difficult and expensive to fell. If the Scientific American's statement is true, electricity may be employed to fell trees, divide them into logs, and, in short, to perform all the operations of the saw and ax. The surface of the wood, where thus divided, is, of course, slightly charred, but the black layer is thin, and for many purposes not disadvantageous, as it is known to preserve timber. The battery employed need only be of the simplest character, as quantity and not intensity of current is required."

SCHOOL BOOKS—SCHOOL BOOKS.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute: A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. SCHELE DEVERE, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. CARTER, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LECONTE, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. JOHNSTON, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A CHALLENGE

Is extended to the world to place before the public a better Cough or Lung remedy than

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.

IT HAS NO EQUAL. Read what well-known Druggists of Tennessee say about Allen's Lung Balsam:

SPRINGFIELD, TENN., Sept. 13, 1872.

GENTLEMEN: Please ship us six dozen Allen's Lung Balsam. We have not a bottle in the store. It has more reputation than any Cough Medicine we have ever sold. Have been in the drug business twenty-seven years. We mean just what we say.

Very truly yours, HURT & TANNER.

What the Doctors Say.

Drs. Wilson & Ward, physicians and druggists, write from Centerville, Tennessee: "We purchased Allen's Lung Balsam, and it sells rapidly. We are practicing physicians, as well as druggists, and take pleasure in recommending a great remedy, such as we know this to be."

Physicians do not recommend a medicine which has no merit. What they say about Allen's Lung Balsam can be taken as a fact. Let all afflicted test it at once, and be convinced of its real merits.

It is harmless to the most delicate child. It contains no Opium in any form.

Directions accompany each bottle.

BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

WE DESIRE TO CALL THE ATTENTION of our friends and the public generally to our large and well-assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT RATCHET, to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and

COLOGNE AND ITS CHURCHES.

It is not a pleasant change which the traveler makes from the quaint, canal-widened streets of Holland to the narrow, dirty, ill-smelling streets of Cologne. Yet believing that for all the ills in life there is somewhere a compeneating good, we thought of the majestic cathedral and the ancient relics of St. Ursula, and hoped for enjoyment which would counteract atmosphere. Many signs in German, French and English assure one that here only can be purchased the veritable Eau de Cologne, and one's first impressions, with many often the strongest, are materially improved by the immediate use of the perfumed water.

It is something, however, with our modern associations to stand in a city on the site of which, in the far-away days before Christ, men once founded another. Here also, in A. D. 51, the Roman Empress Agrippina advised the planting of a colony by her husband, Claudius, who was none too wise to follow a woman's counsel, as the name Colonia Agrippina testifies. In 814, under Charlemagne, a cathedral originated, but became specially known to all Roman Catholics in 1162, for then the Emperor Frederic Barbarossa captured the city of Milan, and after the manner of conquerors appropriated its valued possessions, sending to Cologne cathedral the ashes of the magi, or the three wise men who came from the East to Bethlehem with gifts to the infant Jesus. Milan's most sacred relics have since been called the "Three Kings of Cologne." Some years after fire destroyed the cathedral, but it was considered enough to pass by the holy ashes, at least so we must believe, for they are still shown to the faithful and the faithless of the nineteenth century.

In 1248, however, the foundation of this world-renowned structure was laid, the towers of which are still unfinished. Hundreds of workmen are busily employed in cutting and raising new stones, which contrast oddly with their weather-stained predecessors; yet travelers and artisans welcome the progress, and will rejoice if 1900 finds its majesty increased by two stately towers.

It is considered one of the most magnificent specimens of Gothic architecture in the world, and as you enter and look along the nave, with its double row of pillars on each side on through the choir, with its beautiful stained glass windows, up to the high altar itself, so very far away, there comes to your mind a clear, forcible idea of length, and forevermore five hundred feet will be to you as long as Cologne cathedral. Then glance upward—higher and higher yet—farther and farther. Take a man six feet high, and fancy how many could stand one above another and so reach the roof—in despair you stop counting. Think of other churches—imagine one in the center of this broad expanse, with "heavenward-pointing spire"—still there is room; and time, strength, eyesight, yea, even appreciation, fail utterly, and you say "wonderful," almost stupidly. Some minds seem to be impressed and invigorated by the study, but there is a variety in mental ability, and so others find more enjoyment in their comfortable nearness to the graceful arches of glorious old Yorkminster, friendly and familiar in their height of ninety-nine feet. York can be enjoyed, studied and loved, carried away by bits in one's memory, while Cologne, in its frigid solemnity, appalls, then petrifies.

But a change meets us as we turn from man's work to man, and we follow a reverend Romanist, who will show us the sacred relics for a consideration. It is really astonishing what privileges may be granted to heretic visitors for a consideration! You enter a small room filled with relics. Elaborately embroidered banners, silver staffs, jeweled cups are mingled with remembrances of many saints, and a bit of the true cross. In the center stands the golden shrine holding the ashes of the "Three Kings of Cologne." It is of solid silver, overlaid with pure gold, about three feet long and eighteen inches or two feet high, and studded with bits of amethyst, emerald, lapis lazuli and jewels of various kinds. The room is carefully guarded, and as the value of its contents is estimated at $6,000,000, the sainted royal ashes are not its best treasure.

The architect of the cathedral is unknown, and a curious old legend attributes the design to satan, though why he should have been willing to assist in building a cathedral seems strange enough. The story runs thus: A despairing architect saw in a dream the wonderful plan for which he had longed for years, but awoke without an accurate remembrance of it. Soon after satan visits him with the plan, asking only in return the architect's signature; he assents, but starts back in horror when he discovers that the paper claims two souls for satan—the architect's and the first one who enters the building. He is willing to give himself for the plan, but at first refuses to cause another to suffer. Satan refuses the plan and turns away. [illegible] itect, and he finally consents. The church grew in beauty until ready for consecration, but its builder seemed more and more indifferent to praises, and gloomy amid all festivities; at last a guilty conscience forced him to confess his crime, but such alarm did it create that building and builder were alike avoided. At last a woman who was condemned to death offered to enter the cathedral, provided she might receive her freedom. The offer was accepted, and on the day of consecration everybody flocked to the building. Soon the gate of the archbishop's prison opened, and six men appeared carrying a large box. Monks walked behind, with choristers, priests, the archbishop, nobility and the people. Arriving at the cathedral the archbishop read a prayer, the last words of which were repeated by the choir. Then the church-door was opened, and immediately after the box, when a female crawled forth on hands and knees, and as soon as she entered the church satan seized upon her, broke her neck and fled, uttering fearful yells!

No sooner had satan disappeared than a woman stepped out of the box and entered the church, giving thanks for her deliverance. Then followed the archbishop and people, with hallelujahs and shouts of joy.

The servants soon carried from the cathedral the carcass of a pig enveloped in a woman's gown, which had been sacrificed to satan, but the architect was found dead, paying with his life his debt to satan.

A glimpse at the Church of St. Ursula, with its room full of skulls and bones—some more relics of eleven hundred thousand virgins who went on foot to Rome, and returning were barbarously murdered by the Huns—ends sight-seeing for that day, and while we rested our hearts were filled with earnest thanksgiving that our teaching of > "The old, old story

> Of unseen things above,
> Of Jesus and his glory,
> Of Jesus and his love,"

had ever been pure and simple, unincumbered by fanciful legends, and unpolluted by corruptible bony relics.—Bittersweet, in New York Observer.

ANOTHER MAMMOTH CAVE IN KENTUCKY.—A wonderful cave was discovered recently within one-fourth of a mile of Gratz, on the Kentucky river, in Owen county. F. K. Riley, W. M. Russell, S. Lyons and Thomas Wainscott, reliable men of this county, report that they discovered the opening of a cave in the river bottom. They procured ropes and a light, and after descending forty feet perpendicular the cave opens into a room fifteen by thirty feet. Passing through this room some distance on a horizontal plane, in a narrow passage, they come to another room sixty by thirty feet; then the opening narrowed for a distance, when they came into another room twenty by forty feet. They examined this cave for nearly a quarter of a mile, discovered another opening, but did not pursue it, and have no doubt but there is a grand run of caves under all that country about Gratz. The cave starts in the river bottom, and runs under the Kentucky hills. The ceiling of the cave was so high they could not see much of it with their dim light; they saw stalactites and stalagmites, the first formed like icicles on the rocks above, and the latter by the dripping of the lime water on the rocks below. Parties about Gratz expect to make a thorough exploration of this wonderful cave, and it may be as great a natural curiosity as the Mammoth Cave. We have been in the Mammoth Cave, and the description given of this Gratz cave, as far as explored, is very similar.—Owen County News.

A BLESSING.—What a blessing it is to mortals, what a kindness of Providence, that life is so uncertain; that death is thrown in among the possibilities of our being; that these awful mysteries are thrown around us, into which we may vanish! For, without it, would it be possible to be heroic? How should we plod along in common places forever, never dreaming high things, never risking anything? For my part I think man is more favored than the angels, and made capable of higher heroism, greater virtue, and of a more excellent spirit than they, because we have such a mystery of grief and terror around us; whereas they, being in a certainty of God's light, seeing his goodness and his purposes more perfectly than we, cannot be so brave as often poor weak man and weaker woman has the opportunity to be, and sometimes makes use of it. God gave the whole world to man, and if he is left alone with it, makes a clod of him at last; but, to remedy that, God gave man a grave, and it redeems all, while it seems to destroy all, and makes an immortal spirit of him in the end.—Septimus Felton.

THE industrial wonders that we shall witness during the next quarter of a century may be imagined from the following plan for a railroad on which to transport loaded ships from the Atlantic to the Pacific across the Isthmus of Panama: "Taking a hint from roads which have long successfully carried canal boats and other smaller vessels, with the cargo unbroken, over high eminences, this scheme proposes to solve the difficulty of finding a feasible canal route. It is proposed by it to take loaded ships of even two thousand tons upon wheels and carry them from one side to the other of the isthmus. The projected plan is for a road with six parallel rails, with a gauge of twenty-five feet, the cars to be provided each with two hundred and forty wheels, and to weigh no less than seven hundred tons. Hydraulic lifts are proposed to get the ships upon the cars, and from five to ten locomotives to draw them over ordinary grades. Upon the steepest grades it is proposed to resort to the plan of toothed wheels, gearing into toothed supplemental rails, and to have stationary engines at some points, if necessary. The route designed for this road is the one through Honduras, and the estimated cost $75,000,000." At the first blush this seems absurd—a mere crazy notion; but capitalists are now endeavoring to raise the money for it in the English market.

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR AND CHURCH ORGANS

—ARE—

NOT EQUALED FOR PURITY AND BRILLIANCY OF TONE

Their peculiar construction and arrangement gives them extraordinary power.

Their Solo Stops are most remarkable for beauty and variety of effect.

They are constructed in the most thorough and perfect manner.

They invite special attention to their

SOLO STOPS.

THE VOX HUMANA,

PATENTED SEPTEMBER 13, 1870, AND JANUARY 23, 1872,

producing a beautiful and sympathetic quality of tone, capable of the most exquisite modulation, and when used with the "Tremolo," which accompanies it, resembles more than any other organ stop the peculiar trill of the human voice.

THE VOX CELESTE,

possessing a peculiar and thrilling quality of tone, most pipe-like in its nature, and which can be used in many passages with charming effect.

The above Stops are in every case separate, and additional sets of reeds are entirely distinct from the "Tremolo," which always accompanies them, and which is never perfect without them, and can all be brought at will into the full organ, adding greatly to its power and richness of tone.

They take pleasure in announcing to the musical public and the trade the valuable addition to their Organs of a most beautiful Solo Stop,

THE ÆOLINE.

It is an additional set of reeds, exquisitely voiced and ingeniously arranged in a separate wind-chest (patented September 13, 1870.) The quality of tone is the most delicate and soft imaginable. It is capable, in the greatest variety of effects in combination with their other stops, the improved VOX HUMANA in particular. It has elicited the warmest encomiums from all organists and musicians who have examined it. It is perfectly simple in its construction, and they predict for it the highest degree of success. Its charming effects, especially when used in connection with their improved styles of cases, can but be appreciated by every musician.

IMPROVED CASES, ETC.

By the construction of these Cases the quality of tone in their Instruments has been greatly improved, every facility for the comfort and convenience of the performer has been provided for, and the effect of the beautiful and graceful design is such as to entirely obviate the disagreeable boxy appearance which has been for so long a time an unpleasant characteristic of the Reed Organ.

In addition to the above improvements, attention is called to

The Power of our Manual Sub-Bass,

AND THE MERITS OF OUR

PERFECT VALVES and WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER

The Factories of GEORGE WOODS & Co. are among the largest, and probably without exception the best-arranged in the country. The machinery is of the latest and most improved pattern, and all the labor is performed under the eyes of the employers, who are mechanics with reputations second to none for knowledge of the business, ingenuity, faithfulness and ability. With every advantage that extensive capital can command, they are determined that the Organs of their manufacture

SHALL BE IN EVERY RESPECT THE FINEST AND BEST

They endeavor to obtain and secure the confidence of their agents, and to assist and encourage them in every possible way.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—Senate.—The House bill paying the Southern claimants was reported without recommendation and went to the calendar.

House bill enforcing the fishing clause of the Washington treaty passed.

Utah discussed.

House.—The resolution expelling Brooks and Ames occupied the day. There was considerable sensation, but nothing important.

Night Session.—Mr. Butler, of Massachusetts, made a stirring speech in favor of Oakes Ames, defying the press as a public defamer, and holding up Oakes Ames as a model of all Christian virtue. His speech was interrupted by frequent applause and laughter.

He spoke for nearly two hours. He was followed by Messrs. Shellabarger and Wilson in support of the committee's report.

At the end of the debate to-night Mr. Poland will move the previous question and ask for adjournment, the vote to be taken to-morrow.

AUGUSTA, Feb. 27.—Mr. Stephens has been elected to Congress from the eighth Georgia district. No opposition.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—Senate.—At half-past seven o'clock this morning the bill reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections for a new election in Louisiana was tabled.

WASHINGTON, March 1.—Immediately on the opening of the evening session Davis moved to reconsider the vote rejecting the Louisiana bill. This gave rise to an animated discussion.

Morton fiercely opposed the motion, and said the dangers of the Louisiana situation were greatly exaggerated, and that the only troubles there now emanated from Warmoth, who, having run Louisiana for four years, now wanted to run the Senate of the United States.

Carpenter, Logan and Stevenson advocated the reconsideration.

The Kellogg senators said they were anxious to give the people a chance to elect their own government, but there was no time this session, unless the appropriation bills were dropped.

Stevenson said that if all were anxious to give the people a fair chance there was nothing to prevent them from doing it, and that the question of free government was more important than any appropriation bill.

Stewart moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, which was lost—nays, 28; ayes, 26. But after further debate Morton renewed the motion to lay on the table, and it was agreed to—ayes, 29; nays, 28. Governor Warmoth and Senator McMillen came into the chamber just before the vote was taken.

AUGUSTA, GA., March 1.—The Port Royal railroad, from Augusta to Port Royal, is completed. The first train over the road reached this city at ten o'clock last night, amid the booming of cannon.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 2.—The steamer George S. Wright has been lost off Cape Caution; eighteen to twenty lives lost.

CHICAGO, March 3.—Thermometer one degree below zero. Weather extremely cold throughout the Northwest.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—Christian people who have visited the inauguration ball-room have been shocked by the sacred legend, "Ecce Homo," over President Grant's seat at the ball.

Mr. Illingold has been confirmed as postmaster at New Orleans.

The bill making an appropriation for the Southern claims commission awards passed the Senate with a few amendments, and goes to the House for its concurrence.

The conference reports on all the great appropriation bills were made and agreed to.

In the sundry civil appropriation bill the items for the sale of the Marine Hospital grounds and buildings at New Orleans, and the purchase of a more healthy site, and the erection thereon of a pavilion hospital, were retained; also the item for $100,000 for government buildings at Raleigh, North Carolina; also the item for the purchase of sites for military depots in Texas.

The agricultural college bill and the bill for steamship lines between New Orleans and the Mexican ports were laid on the table.

In the legislative appropriation bill salaries were fixed as follows: President, $25,000; chief justice of the Supreme Court, $10,500; justices of the Supreme Court, cabinet officers, Vice President and speaker of the House, $10,000; senators and members of Congress, including the present Congress, in lieu of mileage and allowances, except actual individual traveling expenses, $7,500.

The Morrill amendment, suspending the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of disloyal claimants, was struck out of the bill.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Senate in extra session. Adjourned to Thursday noon. The closing scene in Congress was merely routine.

No accident has occurred to add interest to the really magnificent inaugural display. There were some good troops in the line of procession. Pyrotechnics make the sky glare to-night from nadir to zenith.

The Louisiana situation is believed to be unchanged. Pinchback appeared in the Senate to-day, but did not offer to be sworn, and his name was not called.

General McMillon has notified the Senate of his election. The question of his right will come before the extra session. A speedy decision is not anticipated.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 26.—The railroad projects pressed upon Congress by General Rosecrans and Mr. Plumb will come before that body for final disposition in April.

It is supposed that the recent election for chief justice resulted in no choice, no candidate having received the necessary number of votes. Congress will, very probably, have to elect a chief justice.

Mr. Nelson, United States minister to Mexico, made an official visit to President Lerdo on the tenth of February, conveying to him the congratulation of President Grant on his (Lerdo's) election to the presidency. President Lerdo said he hoped that the friendly relations existing between the two countries would remain forever.

Goods are now expressed in one day between the City of Mexico and Vera Cruz.

HAVANA, Feb. 26.—News has been received from Hayti up to Friday last, the twenty-first instant. A revolution was momentarily expected to break out, and Port Au Prince had already been placed in a state of siege.

VIENNA, Feb. 26.—A socialist insurrection has broken out in the provinces of Valdena and Podolin. Frightful excesses are reported. The troops sent to suppress the uprising have been defeated.

The Austrian government is disposed to act with Prussia and Russia in regard to the new government of Spain. It considers the latter is not yet sufficiently secure in possession of power to be entitled to full acknowledgments as one of the European governments.

PARIS, Feb. 26.—La Liberte reports that a family council has been held by the Spanish Bourbons in Paris, and that Queen Isabella has summoned her son Alphonso from Rome.

The leading governments in Europe have agreed to protect Portugal against aggression from Spain.

LONDON, March 3.—The special correspondent of the London Echo writes from Madrid that a decree abolishing slavery in Porto Rico is impending, and one of the first acts of the constituent Cortes will probably be to proclaim emancipation in Cuba.

LISBON, March 4.—A South American steamer brings news that the ravages of yellow fever in Brazil were unabated. At Rio de Janeiro the death rate was from thirty-five to forty per day, and the epidemic had spread to Bahia and Pernambuco. A number of English residents returned in steamer and others were preparing to leave the country.

PARIS, March 4.—The Messager de Paris publishes in an extra this evening dispatches reporting that Marshal Serrano has been appointed dictator of Spain, and that the Republicans have suffered a severe defeat.

FIRE IN THE THIRD DISTRICT, NEW ORLEANS.—At about eleven o'clock on Friday morning a fire broke out accidentally in the kitchen of the residence of Dr. Salari, on St. Claude, between Mandeville and Spain streets, adjoining the DeSoto Girls' School. This was quickly destroyed, and, driven by the fury of the wind, the flames spread rapidly. At fifteen minutes after eleven o'clock the first alarm was struck, and the department hastened with all possible dispatch to the spot, some citizens in the meanwhile having rushed in and, with the aid of the teachers, succeeded in getting the children from the school.

The amount of property destroyed could not, of course, by any means be estimated, but by actual count about two hundred and twenty-three houses were destroyed, and at least four hundred persons rendered homeless, and it is thought the loss will not be far from $500,000.

This loss will also fall principally on the lower classes, who in some instances lost their all, the fury of the flames, swept by a whirlwind, being almost incredible, and many of the old women and children barely escaping with their lives.

The homeless ones last evening crowded the streets in the vicinity, but they were nearly all cared for by sympathizing friends, who, though many of them were as poor, cheerfully shared their all with the unfortunate.—Picayune.

COL. JOSEPH C. HAYS and Major Edgar Seelye, special agents of the United States Postoffice Department, have been engaged for several days past in the investigation of the frauds alleged to have been committed by Mr. Charles W. Lowell, postmaster of New Orleans, and speaker of the House of Representatives of the bayonet Legislature.

Sufficient evidence was found yesterday to cause the arrest of both Mr. Lowell and his cashier, Mr. John V. Douglass, on the charge of embezzling money-order funds to a very large amount.

Mr. Lowell appeared yesterday before United States Commissioner William Shannon, and waived a preliminary examination, in order to have his case sent to the United States District Court, and be tried by "God's vicegerent."

The United States commissioner released Mr. Lowell upon Mr. P. J. Kennedy, levee contractor, becoming his security for the sum of $10,000.

Mr. Douglass, the postoffice cashier, had not up to a late hour last evening been able to find bail. He is still under arrest.—Picayune, March 1.

The Mutineers of the Bounty.

More than two years ago, says the Bible Society Record, we chanced to see in print a letter from Moses Young, president of Pitcairn's Island. Doubting whether a community so remote from the ordinary routes of sailing were supplied with the Holy Scriptures, we wrote to Mr. Young, kindly inquiring whether they were in need of Bibles, and whether the community desired anything of the American Bible Society. We heard nothing in reply. About a year afterward we saw the name of the writer of the following letter mentioned as pastor of the church on Norfolk Island, to which a portion of the colony from Pitcairn's Island had removed, and then wrote to him a letter of the same purport as that to Mr. Young. The following is Mr. Nobbs' answer:

"NORFOLK ISLAND, March 1, 1872.

"REVEREND AND DEAR SIR: Your very kind letter of September last reached me a few days since, and I will anticipate an opportunity for thanking you very sincerely for your unqualified philanthropy in proffering us copies of the Holy Scriptures. I am right glad to say, as I am sure you will be equally glad to know, that we have a good supply of the word of God; and that if we are not become wise unto salvation it is not because we have been left without the 'bread of life.' Thanks to frequent grants from societies in England, we have a good supply of Bibles, prayer-books and hymnals; but though we are in no necessity, none the less do we appreciate your brotherly intention of assisting us in so efficient a manner. But though, as I said, we have a good supply of Bibles, they are mostly of small print; and I shall be most grateful if you will present myself, George Adams, his sister, Rachel Evans, and Arthur Quintal, Sr., with a copy each of the Holy Bible in large print, for we do not possess copies of this description, and our eyes have become dim from advanced age. I am now in my seventy-third year, and two of those mentioned above are several years older; all these are of the first generation of the descendants of the 'Bounty.' Should you kindly comply with this request, will you yet further oblige me by putting the name of each person for whom they are intended on the fly-leaf, with the name of the donor or society. There are no certain or scarcely probable facilities for corresponding with Pitcairn's Island; which is a source of continued regret to this portion of our hopelessly severed community.

"The origin of the community, our mode of life at Pitcairn's, with our subsequent removal hither, you probably are acquainted with; if not, a book recently published simultaneously in England and America, entitled 'The Mutineers of the Bounty,' by Lady Belcher, will supply you with as much information as you may care to obtain. We are still pursuing the even tenor of our way in peaceful quietude, and gradually increasing in numbers. The census is, at this time, three hundred and forty, nearly equal as to sex. With the exception of two I am the oldest person—at the age of seventy-three. Last year we had but one death; this year two have already occurred, the last a little girl of five years, who died from burns received the day previous. Our profession of faith is that of the Church of England, and there are no dissentients among us. And I humbly pray that grace may still be given us to hold fast our profession, 'looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life.'

"In the year 1828 I traveled by sea three thousand miles in a vessel of eighteen tons, accompanied by only one other person, to cast my lot among the descendants of the 'Bounty,' and for thirty years was their schoolmaster, forty-two their doctor and forty-three their pastor, which office I still fulfill. We have now a certificated schoolmaster from England, to whom we pay £121 a year, with a house and a few acres of land rent free. We have also a qualified medical man, part of whose stipend is paid by us, and the residue from a friend in the hands of the Governor of New South Wales. Our whaling establishment is in operation for five months in the year, but is attended with some danger and frequent disappointment; still it enables the community to pay the above-mentioned functionaries, and for which we have no other resource. I have a stipend of £100 per annum, but that is from friends in England. A few head of cattle are occasionally shipped to New Caledonia; and American whale ships, with crews of well-conducted officers and men, frequently touch here for a supply of sweet potatoes. These are the only means we have for procuring domestic requirements; and, blessed be God, we have hitherto, by close calling, been enabled to hold our own. Observe you correspond with the Rev. Mr. Damon, and I presume with the Rev. Mr. Trumbull, of Valparaiso, also. Now to both these excellent friends I and my people are under weighty obligations, and I trust we are commensurately grateful; but it is a long time since I have either wrote to or heard from Mr. Trumbull, by reason of the difficulties of transmission, and the same, until recently, was the case as to Mr. Damon. But greater facilities are now afforded, and I shall assuredly embrace them. Should you kindly furnish me with the books I have mentioned, they must be addressed to me at this place, 'care of Oliver Macey Quinted, Esq., barrister at law, Auckland, New Zealand.' Whale ships from New Bedford, intending to cruise in these parts, frequently touch at the Bay of Islands, New Zealand, and would, I think, willingly take charge of such a package, as we are well known and respected by these shipmasters, many of whom also touch here.

"And now, reverend and dear sir, thanking you for your Christian solicitude, and earnestly praying that the word of God may have free course and be glorified, I remain, yours in verity,

GEORGE H. NOBBS.

"P. S.—Should an opportunity offer, which is very doubtful, I will inform our brethren at Pitcairn's of your benevolent intentions toward them."

The Word Popery.

Rev. Dr. Manning, the Roman Catholic Archbishop in England, and the ablest living champion of the Pope, recently made an address at Sheffield to show that popery and Christianity are identical. He says:

"Ultramontanism means popery, and popery means Catholicism, and, pardon me if I add, popery means Christianity."

On which the London Record remarks: "We are glad that the speaker adopts the plain old word 'popery.' We accept his testimony to the fact that popery means Ultramontanism; for the identity lies in the secret councils of the Vatican, with which he may be supposed to be acquainted. That popery means Catholicism is not quite so clear, for the Old Catholic movement is of much wider extent and deeper prevalence than he appears to imagine. That popery means Christianity contains the entire length and breadth of the controversy. Dr. Manning, however, identifies them, and consequently throughout his speech uses the two words as equivalents. If in every case the word popery were used, the irreconcilable antagonism between the interests of Ultramontanism and the interests of a Protestant nation would be apparent to the dullest reader. For instance, when the speaker says, 'I maintain that a society which is no longer under the supreme government of Christianity is not a society that has made progress, but retrogression,' if the speaker's equivalent words be used his meaning is plain and natural. 'I maintain that a society which is no longer under the supreme government of popery is not a society that has made progress, but retrogression.' We have no doubt that Dr. Manning thinks so sincerely, but we rejoice to say the people of England think the exact opposite. Our lips have not yet forgotten the words, nor have our hearts grown insensible to the blessings of the 'glorious Reformation.'"

Dr. Manning further says:

"Roman Catholics will admit no rule but the most pure and unalloyed fidelity to the faith of the church, though all the laws of the statute-book are to the contrary."

"This is quite clear. The Pope is to be obeyed first, because, in the speaker's estimate, the Pope is the Church of Rome, and the Church of Rome is Christianity. So far as the laws of the land do not conflict with the interests and will of the Pope, Dr. Manning and his co-religionists will obey them, but not one moment longer or one step further."

The same doctrine is avowed by the Catholic World, the best expositor of the Roman Catholic faith and practice in this country. If any man can reconcile it with allegiance to the government of the United States, he is wiser than any man we know.—New York Observer.

The Right Kind of Prayer-Test.

The Christian's faith in prayer does not rest on the evidence of the past, but on evidence that is daily brought before his judgment. Such is the following incident in the life of John Coleridge Patteson, the martyr Bishop of Melanesia, which we find related in the London Spectator, by Astley Cooper:

"It was my happiness to know near the scene of his labors, John Coleridge Patteson, whose apparently untimely death we are all lamenting. His was not a feeble intellect, or a superficial nature, or a conventional phrase-making tongue. He was a man of excellent parts in every way, and a believer in and a practicer of prayer. Above all things, he asked those who were interested in his mission to pray for its success, and his own life was fortified by it. The following incident in his life will illustrate what I mean: Some years ago he landed on an island, for the second time, which he was seeking to Christianize and civilize. He desired, after landing, to reach the chief's hut, and to this end he asked some natives, whom he saw on the beach, to guide him thereto. They consented; but as he followed their leading the idea came upon him that they meant treachery, as indicated by their vehement speech, gesticulations and angry backward glances. Uneasiness took possession of the Bishop, and he feared for his life. Presently he came to an abandoned hut, and for a few minutes he left his guides, and those moments he employed on his knees in prayer. The effect, he used to relate, of thus commending himself to his divine Father—soul and body—was wonderful; all fear left him, and he came out of that hut regardless of consequences; and upon the treacherous guides the effect was no less wonderful—they gradually ceased to plot, and at last one of them turned, confessed the treachery, and offered to lead him back to his boat in safety."—Christian Weekly.

The Escurial.

From the village itself no idea can be formed of the shape, one of the most eccentric that can well be imagined, in which Juan Bautista de Toledo, at the command of Philip, commenced it in 1563. For twenty-one years the workmen were occupied with the immense pile, which has since been added to by succeeding sovereigns. It is supposed to be built in the form of a gridiron, though I do not think the resemblance would be particularly striking to one unacquainted with the fact; and the selection of such an extraordinary design appears to have taken place through the circumstance of the battle of St. Quentin, in which Philip was victorious over the French, having been fought on St. Lawrence's day, so that the worthy King perpetuated the date by there building an enormous representation of the instrument of torture on which the unfortunate saint is reported to have suffered. The body and grate of this gridiron are represented by seventeen granite buildings, crossing one another, and bearing a tower, about two hundred feet high at each of the four corners, as the upturned feet. The royal palace extends from the center, forming the handle of this ethereal-ized "gril;" and the whole structure is placed in about as dreary, chilly and exposed a position as can well be found in Spain or any other country.

The monastery is a large piece of building with lofty cloisters and many cells, but very bare of carving; and the interior gardens belonging to this part contain a most varied collection of designs in box. Passing hence into the great library, which is reported to contain over thirty thousand volumes printed, with more than four thousand manuscripts, we noted the singular appearance of the books, which presented the edges, and not the backs, as usual, from the shelves. This, I believe, is the manner in which they were first arranged; and, with the characteristic adherence to old customs so common in Spain, they have never been altered. A fine old copy of the Koran in Arabic, in which the old colors have retained their original beauties through many a passing century, was shown us as one of the curiosities; as was also an illuminated volume of the Revelations in Latin, which is said to have belonged to the Emperor Constantine in the eleventh century, and the manuscript and coloring of which are remarkably fine. In one of the lobbies we counted thirty-four volumes for the choir, containing music and words, and standing about four feet high. These volumes are very ancient, and contain leaves of immensely thick parchment. The sacristy has many fine paintings, especially one of St. Thomas touching Christ's wounds. The church, which is the center of the Escurial, is a splendid structure, built on the model of St. Peter's at Rome, and having a lofty dome in the center, and the towers at the ends. It contains seven aisles, all of which are paved with black marble; and the whole of the building is covered with the most splendid variety of marbles and jasper, while statues of the Spanish kings are arranged on the walls. Two pulpits of all sorts of fine marble and malachite, and a chandelier of rock-crystal, are also in this building, while the ceiling is fresco'ed with many fine pictures by Giordano. In one of the corridors there is a mirror finely-decorated with rock-crystal; and in a small room is a magnificently-executed large figure of Christ on the cross, of white Italian marble, by Benvenuto Cellini. The mausoleum lies exactly below the great altar, and is reached by many polished steps of black marble between walls of jasper. All within this abode of the dead royalty of Spain is of black marble, and twenty-four niches awaited each successive monarch whom death had called to his fathers. Each of these shelves contains a sarcophagus, sixteen of which hold the mortal remains of some sovereign whose name is letter'd in gold on the front. The seventeenth would have contained Isabella the See had she died before her. The court, the "Patio de los Reyes," where, according to the telegram, the conflagration first broke out, contains six large statues of the Jewish kings, which were cut from one block. The palace itself contains a quantity of small, but for the most part tastefully-decorated rooms, in many of which are some tapestries, principally representing sporting subjects and copies of paintings of the Dutch, French and Spanish schools; and one room is covered with frescoes of the time of Philip the Second. The exterior of this part is far from imposing, being of gray stone, with an immense quantity of small windows; but the whole building—containing, as it does, a church, palace, monastery, mausoleum and library—is, from its vast size, majestic and impressive.—Chambers' Journal.

Keep Up Steam.

We were riding over a road where the stations seemed to be within hailing distance of each other. Scarce would the train get under lively motion before a peculiar lifeless motion would tell us brakes were down again, and we must pay our respects to another red flag, whose sentinel-like appearance on the corner of the depot seemed to say: "Stop!"

"It costs $2," remarked a person sitting near me, "to stop this train once."

On inquiry I learned that he was substantially correct. The additional expense of coming to a dead halt over a steady rate of advancement was equivalent to $2 for each interruption. Such is the value of momentum.

This item of information led me once to some fruitful and practical moralizing.

It costs $2 to stop a train. But who can determine the cost of stopping, on the slightest pretext of weariness, discouragement or difficulty, the moral and spiritual machinery of the church?

It costs to let the people become ignorant by suspending the means of instruction.

It costs to discontinue the efforts which are necessary to lead the young, as they come forward in life, into the path of total abstinence from intoxicating drinks.

It costs to let the interest of the community run down to a point of inactivity in the temperance cause; more force must be expended to bring back to a high standard of intelligence and rectitude than would have been required for an even and average progress up to the same point.

It costs to "ease away" on the church, as to the duty of being present in the sanctuary on rainy or cold or windy or sultry Sabbaths.

It costs to break up the Sabbath school during the winter months because of the ruggedness of the blasts, or during a series of weeks because of that growing epidemic of the summer season known as vacation.—Christian at Work.

The Devil's Creed.

"The devils believe and tremble."

We are told in these remarkable words that the devils have a creed—"they believe and tremble." Let us notice this creed. We see from it that the devil is no atheist. His creed is far more sacred than that of many who boast in the denial of a God. But, however sinful men on earth ignore this fact, it is more than the devils dare do. They know the fact that God exists, and they tremble as they believe it. How sad that men will go even beyond the devil in their besotted minds, and deny facts that the fallen spirits would not! With all their hatred of God, blot out his existence from their minds they cannot. Let all would-be atheists think of this. Believe me, when these fallen spirits thus feel the awful truth that God exists, and tremble under its power, it is time the most foolhardy on earth should feel the power of the same great truth.

Nor is he—the devil—a deist; for not only does he believe in the existence of God, but owns the fact that he has made a revelation of his mind to man. He has often tried, it is true, to misrepresent Scripture, and to blunt its edge, lest it might wound the conscience; yet the fact that God's word is on record he does not deny. Thus, again, his creed is sounder than that of many who deny the possibility of God making a revelation of his mind to man.

Nor is he a Unitarian; for he firmly believes in the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ. And often when Christ was on earth did the devils confess this important fact. No, nor is he a Socinian; for he, with his fallen companions, confessed not only the pre-existence of Christ, but his equality with the Father. Hence they exclaim, when about to be cast out of the legion: "What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God most high?"

Thus the creed of fallen spirits embraces the leading doctrines of the Holy Scriptures. Yet with all their knowledge, they remain devils still. Hence it requires something more than a sound creed, to make a true believer. It is well to have a sound creed; but it is much better to have a sound faith. This faith of devils exerts no sanctifying power over them. With all they believe of the important doctrines of holy writ, it has no other power over them than to make them tremble, as still guilty and unpardoned. Their faith can never lift them above the fear of that torment to which they are destined eternally. This shows that their faith is not sound. It lacks the true element of saving faith, which lifts the soul above the fear of torment. True faith casts out this slavish fear which hath torment.

Another element in true faith which the devils lack is that sanctifying or purifying influence which it must exert wherever possessed. True faith works by love, and purifies the heart. But the faith of devils only works by hatred, and still sinks them deeper and deeper in despair.

Another element in true faith which devils have not is that appropriating principle which lays hold upon the God of redemption and claims an interest in the great salvation. No such principle can exist in the faith of fallen spirits. What makes their faith so horrible is the terrible thought that there is no salvation for them. Their chains are eternal. Their night of despair is without any star to light it. No rainbow of promise greets their sight. Thus we see a bare knowledge of truth, no matter how important, is not sufficient. Our creed, to excel that of those fallen spirits, must take hold of the heart, and purify and cleanse it and make it holy.—Christian Instructor.

GENERAL SICKLES has furnished the State Department with the figures of the Cuban census, from which it appears that the total population of the over-faithful Isle is 1,359,811. Of these, 763,170 are whites, 278,927 free colored, 351,288 slaves, and 34,421 Asiatics. The census shows an apparent decrease since 1867 of 14,700.

OUR DEAD.

[redacted]

Just a little while, and they are fled;
One by one life robs us of our treasures:
Nothing is our own except our dead.

They are ours, and hold in faithful keeping
Safe forever all they took away.
Cruel life can never stir that sleeping;
Cruel time can never seize that prey.

How the children leave us! and no traces Linger of that smiling angel band:
Gone, forever gone, and in their places
Weary men and anxious women stand.

Yet we have some little ones still ours:
They have kept the baby smile, we know,
Which we kissed one day, and hid with flowers,
On their dead, white faces long ago.

Is love ours, and do we dream we know it,
Bound with all our heart-strings as our own?
Any cold and cruel down may show it,
Shattered, desecrated, overthrown.

Only the dead hearts forsake us never;
Love that to death's loyal care has fled
Is thus consecrated ours forever,
And no change can rob us of our dead.

Whitworth Female College.

MR. EDITOR: Having been a witness of the proficiency in their studies manifested by the senior class in Whitworth Female College, on a recent occasion, I have thought that a mention of the thorough and satisfactory character of the examination, as well as of the continued prosperity of the college, would not be unsuited.

But one of the committee of visitation of the Mississippi Conference was present at the time of which I write, which was to be regretted, inasmuch as the president provides that they may come, however far it may be, without expense to themselves. The severe test to which the young ladies were subjected indicated beyond question their real acquaintance with the study of geometry, and that they were not drilled to make a display for an hour. And here it may be said that complete training and accurate knowledge are aimed at in all the instruction given in the college. The beautiful is not lost sight of—it is regarded as essential—but the useful is esteemed first—fructus inter folia.

The history of the college is a marvel in these times of despondency, half effort, bankruptcy and failure. Since Rev. H. F. Johnson assumed the presidency of it, more than five years ago, it has taken no step backward. It is to-day a noble monument of the sagacity and benevolence of its founder, Rev. M. J. Whitworth, and of the remarkable administrative skill of its president. I presume there will be on the catalogue for the session the names of two hundred pupils. The boarding department is full almost to overflowing, there being at most accommodations for only three or four more. With a capacity to receive over one hundred, this fact shows how the college is patronized from abroad.

The increasing wants of the music department have necessitated the erection of another large building, containing fourteen rooms.

These are only a few items, and all has been attained with no outside aid. The public has never been wearied by appeals for help nor by lamentations over an expiring cause. The success secured is mainly due to the liberality, enterprise and genius of only three or four persons. This is deserving of mention when it is known that the property of the college is valued at about $50,000. A permanent endowment is needed, and past success gives the best guarantee to discriminating public that money bestowed here will be wisely applied. By thus rendering it independent, that which is now a power in the land, an honor and a blessing to both Church and State, will be continued as such for years to come.

But for the present parents who have daughters to educate may be assured that they will find here all that they seek—teachers (eleven in number) who are well skilled in their several departments, and an uninterrupted care which provides for the comfort and health of every pupil. A liberal hand is visibly at work everywhere.

Brookhaven, the location of the college, is most favorable. The place is healthful, progressive, right by the great highway of travel. It is well supplied with churches, while the community is orderly and intelligent.

Greenville Methodist Church.

MR. EDITOR: I noticed in your issue of the thirteenth instant a communication over the signature of Bro. S. P. Richardson, in which he has committed two errors, which I will undertake to correct.

The first one is where he refers to the services of Bro. Molley rendered the church at this place as pastor, etc. I presume he had reference to Bro. W. M. Motley; that would be correct. The second is where he says that "Bro. Barker, the present pastor, who was stationed here last year, under the blessing of God has made many valuable accessions to the membership." That much will do; but then he goes on to say that on his (Bro. Barker's) entering upon the work last year, he "began at once to collect material to build a house for God." "Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's." Bro. William M. Motley is the man who gathered the material to build that church, and if it had not been for his zeal and untiring labor in getting up that material Bro. Barker would now be preaching in the old Protestant church, and Bro. Richardson would not have had the pleasure of preaching the dedicatory sermon.

Bro. Motley called the church together at various times, exhorted them to work in the cause, appointed committees to take subscription lists, and go out and plead with the people for help. But this was about to fail, and the church would not have been erected. He then fell upon the plan, as the old adage says, not to let the right hand know what the left was doing. He got a blank-book, gave every subscriber his page, and would only let him see his or her own page, and plead with them to make one more strong effort; told the members of the church what a good thing it would be for them to have an interest in helping to erect an edifice that was worthy of worshiping God in, reminding them of the widow's mite, etc.

This is a slight description of how he managed to get the material together to build the church alluded to. I suppose Bro. Barker would have corrected it himself had he noticed the communication, and that Bro. Richardson was only laboring under a mistake; but I thought I would correct the mistakes, and give Bro. Motley the credit that was due him, for which the church and the people of Greenville should ever be thankful.

The Alabama Conference

APPROPRIATES ITS FUNDS TO THE SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of February 13 appears an article on this subject, over the signature of J. W. Shores. In this article Bro. Shores says: "The Alabama Conference, at its late annual session, passed resolutions by which the interest on $10,000 of its funds, at eight per cent., amounting to $800 a year, was turned over to the Southern University, at Greensboro, avowedly to pay the tuition of preachers' sons of the Alabama and the North Alabama Conferences."

For the sake of information I wish to ask Bro. Shores the following questions:

1. Why does the Alabama Conference propose to pay the tuition of the sons of the preachers of the North Alabama Conference?

2. Is the Alabama Conference so generous as to educate, out of its funds, the sons of the preachers of another Conference?

Bro. Shores will please answer these questions.

If the Alabama Conference is offering a gratuity to the North Alabama Conference in this matter, it is certainly but right that she should have credit for it, and that the North Alabama Conference should, at the proper time, render an acknowledgment of gratitude to her for her generosity.

An Opening.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to say, through the ADVOCATE, that there is a good opening for a good school-teacher at a place called Pleasant Grove, seven miles west of Columbus, Texas. The community have built a church and school-house combined, and are very anxious to secure the services of a good teacher. A married man, a Methodist and a Methodist preacher, would be preferred—one who would teach a Sabbath school on Sunday, and preach at least once a month. I consider it a great opening for usefulness. Thirty-five to forty scholars can be had regularly. The pay, per month, would be about $75 in specie. A house, garden-spot, etc., will be furnished the teacher near the school-house. If any one seeing this card will write immediately to Mr. B. F. Gee, Columbus, Texas, he can learn explicitly full particulars. The people want a thorough-going man or none. The community are generally well-to-do farmers, and I consider it a good opportunity to build up a large and permanent school.

L. ERCANBRACK.

P. S.—There is also a good opening for a large school, say thirty to fifty scholars, at Pecan Creek school-house, nine miles below Lagrange, Texas, on the west side of the Colorado river. This is a good and wealthy neighborhood—a very fine opening for a good and permanent school. The people are anxious to get a teacher; and a Methodist preacher, who can come well recommended as a good and thorough teacher, would find ready employment. Write to Thomas W. Smith, Lagrange, Texas, for particulars.

COLUMBUS, TEXAS, Feb. 17, 1873.

MR. EDITOR: At the last session of our Conference, held in Eufaula, Bishop Doggett assigned me this charge. I reached here on the eleventh of January, unable to do any work. I was attacked with a severe cold on the first of last December, which has been preying upon me ever since. I have now been here one month, and am still unable to preach. The attack has developed itself into a well-defined case of bronchitis. I have concluded, with the permission of my presiding elder, to return home. I take this step with a sad heart; but it is in accordance with the indications of Providence, and I try not to murmur nor complain. I hope the course taken will result in good both to myself and to the charge. I ask the prayers of my brethren that I may recover soon, and again be permitted to stand in my lot among them as an humble itinerant Methodist preacher.

Yours respectfully,

JOHN J. CASSADY.

CHOCTAW CORNER, ALA., Feb. 10, 1873.

THE Archbishop of Canterbury, having recently concluded that England was getting a little too much bad weather, administered a sharp rebuke to the clergy for neglecting the prayers for fine weather. It seems, however, that the excessive rains are but compensatory for the droughts of the preceding months, and were greatly needed to fill the wells and to flush the sewers, which had become foul. An English clergyman has answered the archbishop by declaring that he has not used the prayer and will not, because he believes the Almighty knows what is wanted in the way of weather better than the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Innocent Amusements.

The American Messenger relates the following admonitory case. Read it, parents.

A friend was in the city of B., and a near relative, who was a merchant, invited him to dine with him at a restaurant. While waiting for their order to be filled, our friend's relative manifested so much agitation and distress as to lead to an inquiry into the reason of it, whereupon his relative burst into tears.

"I fear," said he, after becoming self-possessed, "that Arthur is utterly ruined; he has a perfect passion for gambling."

"I am not surprised," answered our friend; "you will remember what I told you."

"Yes; and you were right and I was wrong. But it is too late now."

This wealthy merchant was wont to play cards with his children in the parlor. Beginning with them when quite young, he and his wife had spent many of the long winter evenings in playing cards. Our friend had been there and seen it, and had condemned the practice, and again and again warned the indulgent parents against nurturing a love for card-playing in their sons that might prove a snare, by and by, in the place of vicious resort. The parent replied: "Just the way to keep them out of such places. Provide them with amusements at home, and they will not go abroad for them. Your Puritanic notions would drive many a boy into mischief, just to gratify a desire for innocent games which is not gratified at home."

But a few years elapsed, and Arthur was twenty-one years of age, and a gambler. The father had satisfied himself that it was even as a brother-merchant had told him. While the father did not believe that his son was a guest at public gaming-boards, this merchant assured him that it was even so. Scarcely believing that it was possible, he resolved to ascertain. He had observed that his son left his desk, where he kept the books of the store, about such a time each day, and was absent an hour or more. He recalled also that he had scarcely been at home an evening of late, and frequently was out until after midnight. An apple-girl came into his office just before the hour at which he had observed his son leave the store, and he called her attention to the young man at the desk.

"If you will go upon the opposite side of the street," said he, "and watch that young man when he leaves the store, and tell me where he goes, I will give you a half dollar."

In less than an hour the girl returned to assure the merchant that she could "show him where the gentleman was." The father, trembling with emotion, followed her to a street near by noted for its gambling-hells, and going directly to a suspicious tenement, and pointing up the stairs, she said: "He went up there."

The father rushed up the stairway, and, opening the door at the head of it, what a spectacle appalled his sight! There sat his son with a group of professional gamblers, fascinated with the game for money, as a few years before he had been fascinated by it in the parlor for pleasure.

The father was the connection between the places and the sports, as if the hand of the recording angel had drawn it. He was well-nigh overcome. The great mistake of his life flashed upon his view to oppress him. An "innocent pleasure" had grown into a hideous crime. What he did for the enjoyment of his son had ruined him forever.

He related all the foregoing circumstances to our friend, seeking neither to justify himself nor "innocent pleasures," but confessing his error, and owning that games which are vicious in places of public resort cannot be wholly innocent in the parlor.

Pray With Your Children.

A young mother made it her daily practice to carry her little ones in supplication to the throne of grace, and yet complained of a want of faith and definiteness in asking for them the influence of the Holy Spirit.

"Do you pray for each child separately and by name?" inquired the pastor.

"No; that has never been my habit," was the reply.

"I think it of much importance as a help to our faith, and to the clearness and intensity of our desire on their behalf. You pray with them, I trust, as well as for them?"

"Sometimes I do, but not often."

"Let me persuade you, then, to take your little son and daughter each separately to the place of prayer, and, kneeling with them before the Lord, tell him the name, the daily history, the special want of each, and see if your heart is not opened to plead for them as you have never done before."

Tears were in the eyes of the young mother as she said, with trembling lips: "I'll try."

As evening came she had not forgotten her promise; but as she saw that Sarah, her daughter, was unusually peevish, she thought it best to take her little son first to her chamber. Willie was a bright and pleasant boy of five years, and when his mother whispered her wish to pray with him he gladly put his hand in hers and knelt by her side. As he heard his name mentioned before the Lord a tender hush fell upon his young spirit, and he clasped his mother's fingers more tightly as each petition for his special need was breathed into the ear of his Father in heaven. And did not the clinging of that little hand warm her heart to new and more frequent desire as she poured forth her supplication to the Hearer and Answerer of prayer?

When the mother and child rose from their knees Willie's face was like a rainbow, smiling through tears.

"Mamma, mamma," said he, "I am glad you told Jesus my name; now he'll know me when I get to heaven. And when the kind angels that carry little children to the Savior take me and lay me in his arms, Jesus will look at me so pleasant and say: 'Why this is Willie Huston; his mother told me about him; how happy I am to see you, Willie.' Won't that be nice, mamma?"

Mrs. Huston never forgot the scene. And when she was permitted to see not only her dear Willie and Sarah, but the children afterward added to her family circle, each successively consecrating the dew of their youth to God, she did indeed feel that her pastor's plan was "the more excellent way." So she resolved to recommend it to praying mothers by telling them this touching incident.

True Marriage.

True marriage is complete companionship. As the companionship grows less the marriage becomes untruthful, loses its earliest spring, dwindles from its apex. The deepest expression of love is longing for the object loved. When the longing decreases love has decreased in the same proportion. Companionship is the realization of the longing; and the realization which does not produce satiety touches and blends with the ideal. All the romance of the freshest emotions tends to and demands companionship. The most ordinary lovers are as Daphne and Apollo when first they catch the soft infection. The sentiments with which they are inspired warm them with poetic fervor, and the common things that compose their life assume the hues of remembered dreams. The instinct of companionship is strong upon them. They glide to each other like concurrent streams, and, once together, their rustic silence is more eloquent than molded words. Their sole thought, their one desire is companionship, whose presence and influence lend color and warmth, rhythm and rhyme to the rude prose of their being. For hours they will sit beside a stagnant pool and see the heaven of their hope mirrored on its turbid surface. They will walk hand in hand through barren fields that are to them as Armida's enchanted garden. They will be surrounded by poverty and meanness, and personal contact will conjure these into affluence and splendor. In all such externals companionship is the transparent power, the cunning creator of beautiful illusions, the spiritual sorcerer that compels the outward state to reflect the inner mood.

As with coarse, so it is with fine humanity. Like seeks like throughout the universe, and this seeking attains its end in companionship. The masculine and feminine in all the kingdoms strive toward each other; wanting rest until conjoined, and wanting development until contiguity be secured. While companionship continues satisfaction lasts; but both are usually temporary from the absence of congenial conditions. Marriage, I repeat, is companionship, and with the termination of companionship veritable divorce begins. Wedlock, as generally seen, is a cumbersome volume, with a sweet prelude of verse followed by tedious chapters of awkwardly-constructed prose. The poem represents companionship, and the subsequent part its withdrawal. If the companionship could be preserved, each month would prove a honeymoon; discords, bickerings and misunderstandings would diminish rather than increase, because the action of contact wears off angles and adjusts uneven surfaces to one another. Men would not sulk; women would not regret; nor would both turn to the past with the unavailing wish to undo the present. Their burdens would be lighter by the sharing of them; their discontents be softened by sympathetic unfolding. Their ways might be dark and devious; but the consciousness that they should walk, wherever they went, closely and tenderly together, would shed such light upon their pathway that the darkness would be dispelled and the devious made straight. It is never too late to resume companionship. Would that they who need it most might remember this! and yet they who have surrendered it rarely look for it again. When they step apart the slightest channel of their separation broadens and deepens, until what was a crevice becomes a yawning chasm, which few have the strength or courage to leap. If they would but stretch their yearning arms across, wounded faith, broken affection, bruised tenderness could pass over the natural bridge, and be made whole once more by receiving back what had been their own and must soon again be mutually possessed.—Women as Companions, in Galaxy.

A CHILD'S FAITH.—How straight and simple is the way a child comes to Jesus! No doubt, no hesitation, only simple faith and perfect love. A little girl of my acquaintance was once looking at a picture, with which most of you may be familiar, which represents a rock in the midst of a stormy sea, bearing upon its summit a cross, to which a female figure just recovered from the angry waves clings, faint and exhausted, while at her feet a hand, grasping a part of a wreck, is just disappearing in the black water.

"What does that mean?" asked the child.

"It is called 'The Rock of Ages,'" was the answer.

"That means Jesus, to whom we cling for salvation."

"You know the hymn says: 'Other refuge have I none.'"

"O yes!" said the child after a moment's hesitation, "but that rock isn't my Jesus; when I cling to him he reaches down and clings too."

Teach the little ones of this Jesus, "who reaches down and clings too," to whom we hold not so much from fear of falling, since underneath us are his everlasting arms; but because, like the trusting child whom its father safely carries, we love to cling that we may draw him closer.—National Sunday School Teacher.

THE Apostle Paul says: "Knowledge puffeth up." I have seen boys and girls very proud over their lessons and examinations, who had not wisdom enough to mend their clothes, or make a fire, or sweep a carpet, or harness a horse, or live two days without help. Wisdom is useful; knowledge is the raw stuff out of which we make wisdom.—Thomas K. Beecher.

Just Say So.

Dr. Murray pursued his collegiate course at Williamstown during the presidency of that acute and accomplished critic, Rev. Dr. Griffin. In his fourth year he was brought into more immediate contact with the venerable president; whose duty it was to examine and criticise the written exercises of the graduating class. Dr. Murray, when a young man, and even down to the day of his last illness, wrote a free, round and beautiful hand, and his exercise at this time, which was to undergo the scrutiny of his venerated preceptor, had been prepared with uncommon neatness and accuracy.

Dr. Griffin was accustomed to use a quill pen with a very broad nib. Introduced into his august presence, young Murray, with becoming diffidence, presented his elegantly-written piece for the ordeal. The discerning eye of the president passed quickly over the first sentence, and with a benignant look he turned to his pupil and said, in his peculiar way: "Murray, what do you mean by this first sentence?"

Murray answered, blushingly: "I mean so and so, sir."

"Then say so, Murray," at the same time drawing his heavy pen through line after line, striking out about one-third of it.

Having carefully read the next sentence, the venerable critic again inquired: "Murray, what do you mean by this?"

He tremblingly replied: "Doctor, I mean so and so."

"Please just to say so," again striking out about one-half of the beautifully-written page. In this way, with his broad nib, he proceeded to deface the nice clean paper of the young collegian, so that, at the close of the exercises, the erasures nearly equaled all that remained of the carefully-prepared manuscript.

This trying scene was not lost upon Murray. He considered it one of the most important events of his college course. It taught him to think and write concisely, and when he had anything to say, to say it in a simple, direct and intelligent manner. Indeed much that distinguished him as one of our most vigorous and pointed writers may be attributed to that early lesson: "Just say so, Murray."

Street-Preaching.

A sermon may be obtained from intercourse with the very humblest mind. And there is a good illustration of this in Dr. Liefchild's interview with a poor lad he met among the mountains of Ireland—one eleven or twelve years of age—poorly clad, no covering for his head, no shoes or stockings, but with a mild, cheerful countenance, and with a New Testament in his hand, keeping the gate of entrance to one of the richest and most magnificent views.

"Can you read?" said the doctor.

"To be sure I can."

"And do you understand what you read?"

"A little."

"Let us hear you," and I turned his attention to the third chapter of the gospel of John, which he seemed readily to find, and said: "Now read." He did so with a clear, unembarrassed voice:

"'There was a man of the Pharisees named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews; the same came to Jesus by night and said unto him, Rabbi.'"

"What does that mean?"

"It means master. 'We know that thou art a teacher come from God; for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him.'"

"What is a miracle?"

"It is a great wonder. 'Jesus answered and said unto him: Verily, verily, I say unto thee.'"

"What does 'verily' signify?"

"It means 'indeed.' 'Except a man be born again.'"

"What is that?"

"It means," he promptly replied, "a great change. 'Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God.'"

"And what is that kingdom?"

He paused, and with an expression of seriousness and devotion which I never shall forget, placing his hand upon his bosom, he said: "It is something here;" and then raising his eyes, he added: "and something up yonder."—Lamps, Pitchers and Trumpets.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS all over the world read with pride and thankfulness that among their number is to be found the Lord Chancellor of England. His arduous duties do not prevent him from being with his class of twenty or more young men and lads, Sunday after Sunday, and setting an example of perseverance that should animate every faint-hearted or weary teacher to fresh exertions. Says the Sunday School Magazine: "Two features of Lord Selbourne's work, as a teacher, merit universal imitation. In the first place, he does not rely even upon his well-stored mind, or upon his long practice in the arts of clear exposition and effective appeal, and go to his class unprepared. Most thoroughly is every subject specially studied for the purpose. Then he is not content with meeting and teaching his boys on Sunday. Each one has a place in his memory at other times; and those who have left are not lost sight of. A voluminous correspondence with old scholars, scattered all over the world, testifies to the noble thoroughness with which the leader of the English bar, and mentor of the House of Commons, has so long fulfilled his part in the great work of feeding the lambs of the Master's flock."—Christian Union.

TRUE and Christian patience is not vain-glorious; is not void of faith; is associated with humility; is powdered and salted with obedience to all God's commandments; is garnished with hope of the life to come; with modesty, with soberness, with gravity, with wisdom, with love not only of our friends and lovers, but also of our slanderers, of our backbiters, of our mockers and scorners, of our oppressors and robbers and most cruel enemies.—Roger Hutchinson.

OBITUARIES.

JOHN J. DAVIS was born October 28, 1851, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1869, and departed this life January 11, 1872, at his mother's residence, in Jasper county, Mississippi, in the full hope of a glorious immortality. He exhorted his friends not to grieve, saying that all was right with him. He was an exemplary youth; and much loved by those who knew him best. May God sanctify this afflictive providence to the good of all his friends, whose loss is his gain.

D. W. DILLEHAY, P. C.

SWEET LITTLE ADA, our infant babe, who was born on the twenty-third of October last, died this morning at three o'clock. She only lacked four days of being four months old. She suffered much for several weeks, but it is all over with her now. Our precious little Willie went to heaven four years ago. Now Ada is gone. Who of us will go next?

Your brother and sister in Christ,

HENRY P. LEWIS,
REBECCA A. LEWIS,
Of the Mississippi Conference.

HOLMESVILLE, Miss., February 20, 1873.

MRS. SUSANNA MELTON was born April 7, A. D. 1785, and died December 1, A. D. 1872, being eighty-seven years, six months and twenty-four days old. She was long an inmate of her son's family, Jesse Melton, of Holmes county, Mississippi, where she finally died.

Sister Melton was a spiritually-minded Christian as long ago as her children can remember, and by her prayers and motherly counsels and pious life trained a family for the Lord. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

W. P. BARTON.

LAURA A. MCCANN, wife of Rev. James W. McCann, died, of consumption, January 17, 1873, aged thirty-nine years, one month and nineteen days.

Sister McCann professed conversion in October, 1854, and attached herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church South about the same time, and lived an exemplary Christian to the end of life, leaving four children and a sorrowing husband to lament their loss. Sister McCann in her last hours expressed herself prepared and willing to leave this for a better world. May her husband and children live as she lived and die as she died—happy in their Redeemer.

JOHN M. MILNER.

WETUMPKA, ALA., February 19, 1873.

DIED, at Warrington navy yard, near Pensacola, Florida, January 11, 1873, Mrs. ELEANOR M. MORRILL, aged fifty-nine years.

Mrs. Morrill was a native of Portsmouth, Virginia, but had long been a resident of the place at which she died. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and by her kindness and general Christian deportment gathered around her a large circle of friends, whose pleasure it is to testify to the worth of her who has lately left them to rejoin other friends in a better state of existence.

On Sunday night, January 5, Mrs. Morrill was attacked by apoplexy. The following Sabbath found her spirit freed from its earthly tenement, for on the Saturday morning previous she quietly passed away. She was unable to speak and almost totally unconscious from the time she was taken sick until her death. Her family and friends were thus left without dying expressions from her; yet her known trust in God, and her expressions of readiness to die, uttered a short time before she was taken sick, afford ample ground for believing that she was prepared for the change. Her children, and four grandchildren toward whom Mrs. Morrill was acting a mother's part, have of course sustained a loss which is irreparable; but through the merits of Jesus the way is open for them to a glorious reunion with her who has gone before.

To Christians the circumstances of Mrs. Morrill's death should serve as an admonition to heed the warning of our Savior with regard to being ready whensoever we may be summoned to leave this life: "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh."

To those who are careless about their eternal interests these circumstances should serve as reminders that in their last hours they may not be in a condition to prepare for death, and should bring to their attention the necessity of beginning that preparation now. May all who read these lines prepare in health for death, as did our departed sister.

S.

COMING INTO THE KINGDOM.—Soon after I was settled over the church in H——, one of my members said to me: "I don't know what to think of my husband. He meets everything that is said to him about religion with a laugh, or some thing about the inconsistency of professed Christians."

Soon after that man came to my door. At last he said: "Well, I might as well out with it," and the tears came into his eyes. "I have found out that I am a poor, miserable sinner. Can you tell me what I ought to do to be saved?"

God had heard the prayers of the wife who had been so earnestly pleading at the throne of grace. I tried to point him to the Savior. Then he asked me to pray with him—that proud man, who had made light of all serious things. There on his knees he consecrated his life to God's service, and from that day he lived an earnest, consistent Christian life. And so one soul was born into Christ's kingdom.—American Messenger.

THE FACE.—"There is something very affecting in the simple and solemn earnestness with which children look into their elders' faces. They know by an instinct that they shall find there an unmistakable signal of what they have to expect."

THE ORGAN BLOWER.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

[illegible] friends,
The patient organ-blower heads;
I see his figure sink and rise,
Forgive me, Heaven, my wandering eyes!
A moment lost, the next half seen,
His head above the screaky screen,
Still measuring out his deep salaams
Through quivering hymns and howling psalms.

No priest that prays in gilded stole,
To save a rich man's mortgaged soul;
No sister, fresh from holy vows,
So humbly stoops, so meekly bows;
His large obeisance puts to shame
The proudest genuflecting dame,
Whose Easter bonnet low descends
With all the grace devotion lends.

O, brother with the supple spine,
How much we owe those bows of thine!
Without thine arm to feed the breeze,
How valueless the finger on the keys!
Though all unmatched the player's skill,
Those thousand throats were dumb and still;
Another's art may shape the tone;
The breath that fills it is thine own.

Six days the silent Memnon waits
Behind its temple's folded gates;
But when the seventh day's sunshine falls
Through rainbowed windows on the walls,
His breathless lungs, he stands, he thills
The quivering air with rapturous thrills;
The roof resounds, the pillars shake,
And all the slumbering echoes wake!

The preacher from the Bible-text
With weary words my soul has vexed;
(Some stranger, fumbling far astray
To find the lesson for the day;)
He tells us truths too plainly true,
And reads the service all askew.
Why—why the—mischief—can't he look
Beforehand in the service-book?

But thou, with decent eyes and face,
Art always ready in thy place;
Thy strenuous blast, whate'er the mate,
As steady as the strong monsoon;
Thy only dread a leathery croak,
Or small residual extra squeak,
To send along the shadowy aisles
A sunlit wave of dimpled smiles.

Not all the preaching, O my friend,
Comes from the church's pulpit end;
Not all that bend the knee and bow
Yield service half so true as thou!
One simple task performed aright,
With slender skill, but all thy might
Where honest labor does its best
And leaves the player all the rest.

This many-diapasoned maze,
Through which the breath of being strays,
Whose mingled notes our earth divine,
Has work for mortal hands like mine.
My duty lies before me. Lo!
The lever there! Take hold and blow!
And he whose hand is on the keys
Will play the tune as he shall please.

Old and New.

Interior History.

To gain the full force and depth of history's meaning it should be studied in three ways. First, in monstr; country by country, king by king, with the small details of each reign and period and land, until you see the whole as a brilliantly-colored historic picture. Secondly, as Buckle suggests, in cycles, measuring the outlines of the grandly-flowing curves of progress in which the ages flow on. In one volume of Humboldt's Cosmos there is a fine example of this larger outlook into time; that, for instance, in which he traces the growth of the love of nature, through the different phases of the childlike joy in shining stars and blue waters and fresh meadows, and the mystical symbolism of the pantheist, the tender reverence of the Christian mind, and the practical, minute, keen interest of the scientist; also of the two Ages of Discovery to which this strong love gave the first impulse—first, that in which sail after sail traversed the far-off and sunny sea of the South, and added rich and rare tropical lands to the old world's dominion; or beat, stiff with driving sleet and icy rains, around the desolate shores of the North; and the second age, when the heavens were opened to the wider knowledge of men, and telescope after telescope swept with widening range the starry gulfs of space.

But both of these methods alike treat of the exterior history of a nation, of its deeds and achievements; not of its modes of thought and feeling. And these are not only truly historic, but they are also prophetic; in measuring for you the capacities of a nation, they indicate its future form of development. The legendary ideal is the form given according to which the historic reality shapes itself hereafter. To study this interior history you must go back to the childlike and mystic period of its existence—to that portion of the record which lies just outside of dates, statistics and certain boundaries. You return to the age of legends and traditions when the mind has just wrought out its dimly-embodied desires in the first twilight of thought.

"For the dusk of the dawn is astir with the wings
Of invisible things;
And the world is awakened, and throbs with a strain
Betwixt passion and pain."

The myth of an Egeria was only possible to the first glow and white heat of conception. It indicates well the capacity of the Roman for intense and lofty contemplation; while from the legend of the twin brothers suckled by the fierce mother wolf, we see thrown out in long shadows the active Roman nature with its fierce passion for conquest and dominion. There is in the British tradition of King Arthur of the Round Table, which the Anglo-Saxon mind so eagerly adopted, the noblest promise of a heroic nature in the free obedience to the right, the recognition of the nobility of usefulness, which any nation or individual could desire as its ideal. It is a prophecy of excellence whose full heights have never been wholly attained.

We will usually find these legends most strongly outlined against the lowest and most troubled period of a nation's struggle for existence. Against the dark background of our needs we delineate the shining and lustrous figures of our desires. In the passionate upheaval and surging of the great floods of emotion these ideals are the high-tide marks, from which they shall presently descend to a lower and calmer level, but which stand as witnesses of their unseen powers. And so a living man—one who for a period has force enough to incarnate in himself a nation's desires, becomes a representative man, standing for his age—is the nation's ideal. It was so that Bonaparte gained his wonderful and magnetic influence over the stormy minds of France. In the general dissolution of old bonds, social ties, ecclesiastic restraints, the power of personal will and character ruled without a counterbalance; and no one ever more fully expressed the force and scope of an individual than this self-poised, self-raised ruler of men. And this power, limited, if you will—antagonistic to its own nature, was for awhile super-eminent because the thought of France—that every man was in himself a force, and had "de suo jure" freedom. So Napoleon's appeal, "Que [illegible]" [illegible] and vibrated through the French soul, and awakened a nation. He was for a period the incarnation of France.

There is always a certain symmetry in history. If we fail to apprehend it, still it is there. A historic event is the meeting—concurrence of two forces. It is genius which perceives, and holds up to all men's sight the outlines and colors of the thought of the great artist mind, which an inferior nature blurs both in seeing and reproducing. But there is a difference between apprehending this matchless symmetry and developing it in life, and forming it into words. The first nature becomes the man of action; and so we have Washington, Garibaldi, Mirabeau, Jackson. The second is the man of genius who sounds the key in which the whole after-theme is set.

For we are told that everything in nature—and also life—has its own key-note. If you touch it on a bridge, or in a building, the whole structure is jarred from foundation to summit; sound it out in the open air, and everything formed upon this note trembles in accord. So with a life, a soul, a nation, an age even, it thrills through and through when its ideal—the ideal of its dreams, its needs, its desires—is uttered. Rouget de Lisle, in his wild song,

"Enfans de la patrie! Le jour de gloire est arrivé!" sounds all the passionate love for the country; all the hope which beheld, as in an ecstasy of vision, its end fulfilled; which characterized the French revolution. If we can grasp that volcanic era of upheaval at all, we can do so by the "Marseillaise" as fully as by volumes of history. The fantastic idyllic taste of the superficial period preceding this, with its real desire for the lost simplicity and fresh enjoyment which its own conception had destroyed, was well expressed by Fenelon in a single line:

"La douceur avec-on devient ce qu'elle est dans les cieux."

As sometimes in music, the air is played in a soft, low prelude, and gradually flows off into variations of intricate harmony, through all of which, however, the same air sounds and reappears. Or as in a flower, if you go back through all the different phases of growth—the fully-opened flower, the faintly-tinted bud, stem and sprays of green leaves—back to the little seed, you may find therein inclosed the whole of the after-development of fruit and flower. So we say: "History repeats itself." "The voice of the past is the prophecy of the future." The Germans of Tacitus are easily recognized by us in the Germans of to-day. The Franks, when they first pass before our ken, express in their very name the desire for which their whole history is a struggle. The Jews, doomed by their destiny to exile and journeys to and fro, and with the same strong yearnings for their own land and race, are the very people in the far-off land of Egypt, under the old dynasty of the Pharaohs, whom we see in our cities and streets now. Historic lineaments are not easily effaced even amid diversity of country and climate, and outside contact and influence. A footstep is not easily lost here, but a path of a race lies before us, plainly traced, through every intersection and winding curve.

Dr. Arnold, of Rugby, in his profound and suggestive lectures on history, finely shows us what a many-sided study true history is. So a historian must necessarily be many-sided in mind and nature. He must sympathize with the poetical—the dreamers and seers of history—or else he will wholly miss the significance of the ages of legend and myth, which enfold the present, as in a matrix; best with this should be also combined a full appreciation of the value of the practical and of the common daily life of common men. Without a skill in detail, delicate coloring and subtle shades, he cannot give the element of the picturesque to his work; and if he wants the wider insight into history's larger curves, the theme will prove deficient in nobility and the harmony of a united purpose. For the full scope of history is with humanity rather than men, and it is untrue by every limitation or defect of sympathy.

He speaks of man best who most feels with him. By intellect we see, by feeling we touch, an object, and both senses are needed for the true impression.—E. F. M., in University Monthly.

Captain Torial Joss.

He was an energetic Scotchman, and trained to maritime life. He was early inclined to religion, but, being discouraged at home, he hid his Bible out of the house, and, reading it clandestinely, received from it impressions which he never lost. He was sent to sea when quite young; it was at a time of war, and, being taken by the enemy, he was carried to a foreign port and suffered a severe imprisonment. Returning to Scotland during the Stuart rebellion, he was immediately impressed and sent on board an English ship of war. He made his escape and connected himself with a coasting vessel which belonged to Robin Hood's bay, in Yorkshire. Wesley records, in his journal, frequent visits to this place, where he preached in the market-square and on the quay till he succeeded in founding a society. Joss, who had strictly maintained his morals, and even his religious scrupulousness in all his adventures, and had been a diligent student during the winter suspensions of navigation, joined the Methodists, and became noted in the town for the ability of his exhortations. Wesley discerned his talents and encouraged him. He retained his Scotch Calvinism, but, as he did not dispute about it, it was no obstacle among his brethren.

Still pursuing his sea-faring life, he preached on board his vessel, and became known as an evangelist in all the harbors which he frequented. His first regular sermon was delivered at Boston, Lincolnshire, where he produced an extraordinary impression. On being appointed to the command of a ship, he established regular worship among his crew, and became at once captain and chaplain, and soon trained a band of his converted tars to exhort and pray publicly.

He was a good sailor, and had accumulated enough property to become owner, in part, of his ship, with a fair prospect of wealth. But now disasters beset him continually, as if providentially to drive him from the seas. He made unfortunate voyages, and was repeatedly wrecked. At one time he lost his ship, and with difficulty saved himself and his crew; but, courageous against all odds, he went to Berwick for the purpose of building a still larger vessel. While there he preached to great crowds, and when about to leave, the common people mourned as at the loss of a faithful pastor. After he had sailed a friend wrote, without his knowledge, to London, respecting his successful labors in Berwick during the preceding nine months. The letter came under Whitefield's eye, and when he heard of the arrival of the preaching captain in the Downs he announced in his tabernacle that Joss would preach there the next Saturday evening, and dispatched a messenger to the ship, which had already received among sailors the name of "The Pulpit," to summon him to London. His modesty was startled at the unexpected honor, and he refused to go, but the messenger would not leave the deck till he consented. Amid wondering throngs the sailor proclaimed the gospel from Whitefield's pulpit, not only on Saturday but on Sunday, and Whitefield insisted that he should at once abandon the deck and give himself wholly to the ministry. He shrank from the proposition, but on his next voyage met with an accident which Whitefield deemed a warning. On his return to London still greater crowds gathered to hear him. Whitefield again urged him to confine himself to preaching, but he again resisted the call, and his following voyage was attended with a still worse disaster. On his third arrival at London his word was heard by yet greater throngs and with still greater effect. While in the city his brother, a pious young man, fell overboard and was drowned in the Thames. "Sir," said Whitefield, "all these disasters are the fruits of your disobedience; and let me tell you that if you still refuse to hearken to the call of God, both you and your ship will soon go to the bottom." He yielded at last, and after his fourth voyage gave up the deck and took the pulpit. In 1738 Whitefield had the happiness to recognize him as his colleague at the Tabernacle and Tottenham Court, and Captain Joss became the Rev. Torial Joss, of famous memory in the religious history of the times.

During thirty years he was Whitefield's associate pastor in the London Calvinistic Methodist societies, and his popularity was only second to that of Whitefield himself. The crowd ran after him, and his word, delivered with great native eloquence, was successful in the conversion of multitudes of souls. Berridge called him "Whitefield's Archdeacon of Tottenham." He not only spread Methodism extensively in the metropolis, but made preaching excursions into the country. He usually spent four or five months of each year in itinerating in England and Wales. The Welsh especially delighted in his simple eloquence. Many came twenty miles on foot to hear him, and wherever he went he left seals of his ministry. He was a good man, mighty in the Scriptures, and faithful to the end. After preaching the gospel more than thirty years he was smitten down by sudden disease. "O the preciousness of faith!" he exclaimed to the groups around his death-bed. "I have finished my course. My pilgrimage is ended. O thou Friend of sinners, take thy poor old friend home!" As if rapt in visions of the celestial world, he at last uttered the word "archangels," and expired.

Thus did Methodism gather its trophies from the sea and the land, and while the "regular" clergy treated with scorn its "irregularities," and bishops wrote diatribes against its "enthusiasm," but failed to save the heathen masses around them, it went forward, redeeming the people.—Methodist.

The Gift of Tongues.

Hortensia was a celebrated Roman lady, the daughter of the orator Hortensius, whose eloquence she had inherited in the most eminent degree. When the triumvirs had obliged fourteen thousand women to give, on oath, an account of their possessions, to defray the expenses of the State, Hortensia undertook to plead their cause, and was so successful in the attempt that one thousand of her fellow-sufferers escaped from the avarice of the triumvirate. The harangue which she delivered on the occasion was extant in the time of Quintillian, who speaks of it with applause.

Hortensia's example enforces a serious lesson on the women of to-day—not necessarily the duty of speaking. That may or may not be. But that famous speech of that noble Roman lady, whose words were long ago forgotten, yet glows with this living truth: Shrink not from using any talent you possess for the good of others.

Whatever the difference of opinion as to her right to the pulpit or platform, woman holds the scepter of her speech with absolute sway in private life. How does she use this power? How may she increase its value?

1. Learn to talk. Cultivate the graces of character, speech and tones of voice. Avoid talking of persons or insignificant details about your work. Have something valuable or entertaining to say. Exercise tact, good sense and good temper in drawing out those who listen, on topics of interest to themselves. Deserve the companionship of sensible, interesting people. Make it a pleasure for them to talk with you. Cultivate the art of saying things well. It is said that Pinto's tablets were covered all over with different arrangements of the simple sentence: "I went down to the Piraeus with Nicobrus, the son of Hiaeus." All stiffness and affectation are unpleasant in conversations which should be enlivened by playfulness and vivacity, but the habit of correct speaking is invaluable. Indirectly it reacts from the thoughts from which it sprung. Carelessness in words grows out of and produces carelessness in thoughts. Facility and accuracy are equally to be cultivated. Especially is the art of listening to be studied and practiced. A good listener is a silent but mighty force in a conversation. Tenderness and delicacy of feeling, a sympathetic heart, a gentle manner, inspire confidence, and the brain kindles with warmth from the heart.

2. Use the gift of speech in God's service. Let the spirit of the Master be infused into your words. Like the Roman Hortensia, let the talent and grace of language make you a helper for others. The oppressed, the suffering, the ignorant and the wicked need the service of your tongue. Little children are waiting for your words. The servants in the family listen for your counsel and sympathy. Genial, affectionate intercourse in the family would banish the sullen tempers, rude manners, harsh voices and, incidental expressions which often make the home circle repellant or tiresome. Let your words be apples of gold in pictures of silver. Win your way to others' hearts through the love and unselfishness of your own. Not with arrogance of superiority, but with the simplicity and sincerity of comradeship, speak words of counsel and instruction. Sympathize with those above you and below you. Put your best self into your intercourse with others. Suffer not your social relations to be meager, profitless, and a drawback to your spiritual growth. Sharing in common joys and sorrows, similar aims and hopes, let heart and brain answer to heart and brain with kindling inspiration.

"He who would be a great poet must make his own life a true poem." He who would talk well must live well. Out of the sweetness, richness and hope of your own life, made sweet and rich and hopeful through the Savior's love, let your words carry blessings to other lives. Christ in your heart shall sanctify and enrich your speech with grace and power. What are you doing for him with your gift of tongues?—Christian at Work.

FROM GERMANY we have an account of the supposed discovery of the Queen of Sheba's palace. M. Mauch, an African traveler, some time since discovered certain remains which he believed to be those of the ancient Ophir. The accuracy of that supposition was, however, called in doubt at the time, and the matter was forgotten. But a letter has just appeared in the Wiener Gazette from that gentleman, dated St. Helena, November 2, 1872, addressed to Mr. Mohr, a fellow-traveler, in which he says: "I believe that I have found the real Ophir in latitude twenty degrees fifteen minutes south, longitude twenty-six degrees thirty minutes east, and I think I possess proofs of the fact. The ruins which have been so often spoken about are composed of two masses of edifices in a tolerably good state of preservation. The first is on a mountain of granite; and among other constructions is to be remarked one which is an imitation of the Temple of Solomon, being fortress and sanctuary at the same time, the walls of which are built in wrought granite, without mortar, and still being more than thirty feet high. Beams of cedar served as ceiling to the narrow and covered galleries, and I have brought away some fragments of it. In reality no inscription exists, but only some special designs of ornamentation, which announce a great antiquity. The whole western part of the mountain is covered with blocks of great size, and which seem to indicate terraces. The second mass of ruins is situated to the south of the mountain, from which it is separated by a low valley; it remains a well-preserved circular form, with walls constructed as a labyrinth, also without mortar; a tower still exists thirty feet high, seventeen feet in diameter at the base, and nine feet at the top. Cedar-wood is used there in the same manner as previously described, and if anything is astonishing it is the fact that it should have endured so long without having suffered from the field-fires which occur every year. The circular edifice is accompanied by a large number of others situated in front, and which doubtless served as the habitation of the Queen of Sheba's suite. I have drawn, not without difficulty, a general sketch and a plan of this place. I was confirmed by the natives themselves in the idea that these ruins date from the Queen's time; for about forty years ago, before the irruption of the Matebele from the west, and the Zulu from the east, sacrifices were still offered up on the mountain. The natives still call the circular building the House of the Great Princess."—Church and State.

A SWEET HEART-SIN.—Let me step into your heart, sir, and peep upon its furniture. My hands are pretty honest; you may trust me; and nothing will be found, I fear, to tempt a man to be a thief. Well, to be sure, what a filthy closet is here! Never swept, for certain, since you were christened. And what a fat idol stands skulking in the corner! A sweet heart-sin, I warrant it. How it simpers, and seems as pleasant as a right eye. Can you find a will to part with it, or strength to pluck it out? And supposing you a match for this self-denial, can you so command your heart as to hate the sin you do forsake? This is certainly required. Truth is called for in the inward parts. God will have sin not only cast aside, but cast away with abhorrence. So he speaks: "Ye that love the Lord hate evil."—John Berridge.

Religious Intelligence.

THE United Presbyterian Church of Scotland are raising £4,000 to open a mission in Japan.

A COLORED Presbyterian church has been organized at Mount Pleasant, Alabama. The members of this church were formerly slaves of Dr. [illegible], and were "carefully trained," one of the Southern papers tells us, "in the principles of the Presbyterian Church by their owner."

THE Micronesia mission, established twenty years ago, and which now extends its work over twelve islands, reports the largest proportional increase of church-membership of any of the missions of the American Board, the last statistics received giving the number of communicants as 928, 189 having been added within the year.

FROM the Tsonto Mission House, Graham's Town district, In Kaffirland, Rev. C. Palmn, a native missionary (Wesleyan,) writes of work among the heathen in their kraals, and of the conversion of more than 100 adults among them, besides eighty young people of a day school he had recently established, and of a revival among the European Christians of his circuit.

A LARGE DIOCESE.—Bishop Horden, of the Moose Territory, stated that his district is 1,200 miles long by 600 broad. When he first went there he found the Indians in the most deplorable state. At Rupert's house they used to murder their parents when they got old, or put to death any one who complained of sickness, and they acknowledged doing this without betraying the slightest feelings of shame or remorse. A man belonging to another tribe confessed that during a winter of starvation his six children were killed and eaten. Now heathenism as a system had disappeared, and Christianity was the established religion of the land.

MESSRS. TRIAN AND ROBERTS, of the Presbyterian Board, who have recently gone to New Mexico to teach among the Pueblo Indians, received permission from the Indians to make use of two old unoccupied buildings in the Pueblos of Santa Domingo and San Felipe for school and dwelling houses; but a Romanist priest fastened one of the buildings and carried off the keys, laying claim to them in behalf of the Roman Catholics, because in the last century the houses were used as convents. The Presbyterian missionaries claim that, as the buildings were erected by the Indians and rightfully belong to them, they are at liberty to make disposal of their own possessions at pleasure. The matter has been referred to the Indian department for settlement.

A SAD and singular instance of persecution and massacre is reported from the Loyalty Islands, in the South seas. Protestant and Catholic missionaries have been there, converting the natives to their respective views of Christianity, which both sides concede to be pre-eminently the religion of peace and good will. But one of the Protestant English missionaries sends the distressing intelligence that the islands have seen a veritable Bartholomew's day. The Catholic natives at one place formed and executed a plot to massacre the Protestant natives. A number of the latter were surprised while fishing, and shot; some were taken prisoners, and afterward killed; two families were surprised and murdered while at their evening devotions, and finally the Protestant village was burned. The French authorities, at last accounts, were "investigating" the cruel outrage.

REV. DR. PATTERSON, in the Sunday School Times, furnishes the following information in regard to education in the East: "In Syria, from Antioch to Carmel, there are ninety-five places where Protestant schools are maintained. In some of these places, as in Jerusalem, Damascus, Beirut, etc., are several of these schools. Besides these, there are a number of important establishments of other faiths. In Beirut alone are eighteen large educational institutions, belonging respectively to Mossems, Greeks, Armenians, Maronites, Jesuits, and so forth. All these are at present peculiarly active, in order, if possible, to save their children from Protestant Christian influences; and as a result there are in Beirut, a city of 80,000 inhabitants, 56 colleges and schools for boys, with 3,173 pupils, and 1,981 girls—a proportion to the entire population of one-sixteenth. Of this number, 2,019 boys and 1,960 girls are in Protestant schools. In Acre there were in 1869 130 pupils; in Tyre, 62; in Sidon, 247. Mr. Saleily's schools, which are in Lebanon, have 32 teachers and 800 pupils. Tripoli has 39 schools, of which 26 are Moslem, having altogether 1,322 pupils, of whom 130 are girls, and 50 of these Protestant girls."

THE Methodists of Chicago have sixteen American churches, with a membership of 3,700, and church property valued at about $950,000. In connection with these there are seventeen Sunday schools, employing 558 officers and teachers, and giving instruction to 5,620 pupils. The Clark Street church, since the fire, has been in a chapel near Harrison street, but it is now finishing its new "Methodist Church Block," on the corner of Washington street. Trinity church is using the basement of its building on Indiana avenue. The Wabash avenue occupies the purchased church on the corner of Fourteenth street. Michigan avenue church occupies the basement of its new building near Thirty-second street. Oakland church has a comfortable building. Grace church, north side, worships in its shanty chapel, but expects to occupy the basement of its new stone church in January. Grant place, Centenary, Ada street, Park avenue, Maxwell street, Halsted street and Simpson churches were not burned out. Western avenue has just dedicated a new church, worth $10 The German membership is 700, with four churches, five S schools, 136 teachers and abo pupils. The church property about $110,000. To these added the Scandinavian M who have about 950 members, about $78,000 worth of church property, five Sunday schools and 600 pupils. This gives an aggregate of twenty-two churches, 1,300 members, twenty-four Sunday schools and 7,000 Sunday school scholars, and about $1 100,000 worth of church property.

THE American colony, and the numerous friends of the Rev. [illegible] Hitchcock, in Paris, will doubtless be glad to learn that the provisional character of his mission to the church of the American chapel is now terminated, and that he has become its permanent pastor. It will be remembered that after the Commune and the resignation of the Rev. C. S. Robinson, the chapel drifted along for nine months without a settled minister. In March last Mr. Hitchcock was sent over by the American and Foreign Christian Union as minister in charge for one year. On assuming the duties of his extremely difficult and delicate position he did not know personally a single member of his congregation; he found the old flock scattered, and an almost disheartened and disorganized church. A few short months, however, have wrought a marvelous change. Bending all his energies to the task, Mr. Hitchcock has now the satisfaction of seeing the congregation united and more prosperous, perhaps, than ever before, and, what is more, he has by his manly and liberal Christian bearing and delicate tact, won the esteem and affection of all those placed under his charge. Desiring to terminate the provisional character of his mission, and also to mark their appreciation of his high character and services, the congregation met at the chapel, and by a unanimous vote gave Mr. Hitchcock a call to become their permanent pastor.

MADAM DE PRESSENSE writes to the Evangelist an interesting account of the "Mission Populaire," a charity in which French Protestants are engaged. Their plan is to relieve the necessities of poor women, as far as possible, by establishing sewing-meetings and furnishing the needy the material needed to make the clothes they most need. Two hundred and fifty women attended, during the whole of last winter, these meetings at the Chaussee du Maine and in the Rue Madame. After two hours of sewing, interesting reading or singing, they laid aside their work to listen more attentively to the reading of the Bible. This mission also undertakes to furnish with work at their own homes all the women who cannot find it elsewhere. Sunday schools have been established, and something has been done in the way of visiting wounded prisoners in the hospitals, though the opposition of the Roman Catholics has hindered their work in this quarter. The mission contemplates the opening of a school for girls and boys, to which will be added a circulating library, evening classes for adults, lectures for workingmen and their families, a sewing meeting for women, and another for young girls who work in factories and elsewhere, and whom it is important to follow up in their lives so full of peril and temptation. Altogether, this seems to be a most judicious and Christian enterprise, and those Americans who have helped it by contributions have reason to believe that their charity has been well bestowed.

THE China Inland Mission, whose present laboring staff numbers eighty-four—twelve married missionaries with their wives, ten unmarried, and fifty native pastors, evangelists, Bible readers, etc.—has now over thirty stations and out-stations in which there are resident laborers. This mission, though not organized until 1865, had some of its present missionaries in the field much earlier. Twenty years ago the Chinese Evangelization Society, resulting from Dr. Gutzlaff's visit to England, was formed, and sent several missionaries to China, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. J. Hudson Taylor; but, as at this time a residence in the interior was impracticable, the society was at length dissolved, though some of its laborers remained at their posts. When Mr. and Mrs. Taylor were forced by ill health to return to England they devoted themselves to the work of finding missionaries for China, one of whom, Mr. Meadows, sailed in 1862, and four more were sent out by the middle of 1865, the date of the present society's organization. In the words of one of its founders, in an issue of that date: "The whole work, having missions in the interior as its special object, will be designated the 'China Inland Mission.' It will be unsectarian; and the missionaries connected with it will labor without guaranteed support from man, being satisfied with the promise of him who has said: 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.'" Hangchau was selected [illegible] the training-ground for new missionaries, where they could learn the language, customs and modes of the natives, and become [illegible] in missionary work; and funds [illegible] to the society, unsolicited, [illegible] sufficient abundance for them [illegible] widening operations, till, [illegible] of the second year, 186[illegible] pied the four stations [illegible] Fung-hwa, Shao-hin[illegible] of Ning-po, chau. ### Been with Jesus.

There was no mistaking what company Peter and John kept. Rulers, elders, scribes, everybody "took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." They sailed under no uncertain colors, they marched under no doubtful standard. They had been trained in no worldly school, their manners had not been formed in earthly courts, they were not widely traveled, nor were they versed in the literature and philosophy of the day, but there was something about them so singularly Christ-like that their discipleship admitted of no doubt. They had healed the lame man "at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful;" but apart from the miracle there was that in them which told the story of their profession, and published it to the world. Their boldness, for one thing, astonished their enemies.—Neither imprisonment, the imposing council, nor the commands and threats of their persecutors had any effect upon them. They had been baptized into Christ, and had so put him on that the matter was self-evident. The power, the doctrines, the spirit of Christ were manifest. That ignorant and unlearned men should rise to such courage and dignity of character, and should exhibit such eminent graces, was the greatest miracle of all. The healing of the lame man was a notable and supernatural event, but the miracle of miracles was the disciples themselves. So transforming had been their communion with Jesus that they stood out before the multitude and in the world as men divinely and gloriously transfigured.

To have been with Jesus, and to have been formed by him, was only in one sense the peculiar privilege of those who waited on the Lord's personal ministry. "Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed." Even the fellowship of Peter and John with Christ was far more quickening and elevating to them after his ascension than before. They had been with him more truly and to better purpose after he was taken from them than at any time during his bodily presence and ministry on earth. It is the common experience of believers, in this best and highest sense, to have been with Jesus; and the effect of this communion is ever the same—to impress the world with the Christliness of Christian character. This spiritual fellowship is the thing of which knowledge is taken by those who [illegible] themselves unspiritual, and often [illegible] posed, it may be, to deride and to [illegible] the gospel. Faith, love, pray- [illegible] habits of thought are so many [illegible] aspects of a believer's being [illegible] Savior. His affections are [illegible] things above, and he seeks [illegible] things which are above, where [illegible] on the right hand of [illegible] word of Christ dwells [illegible] and his soul is con- [illegible] those spiritual influ- [illegible] it imparts to those [illegible] up to his guid- who give themselves [illegible] be hid, though [illegible] led and encl- he might be persecu- [illegible] real disciples [illegible] to him. If conceal their relationship [illegible] the deep they have been with him [illegible] rth, and experiences of the spiritual [illegible] demon- in the growing power and [illegible] velev- strations of a holy life, an unb [illegible] pre- ling world will be quick to con- [illegible] but bend the cause of it. There is [illegible] one fountain whence these sweet an- sparkling streams of purity can flow.

No other school can take selfish, fallen and cowardly human nature in the rough, and polish it after this sort. The companionship is evident even to those who do not much care to know it, and the effect is to compel an unwilling homage to the truth.

Fellowship with Christ cannot be covered up in any of the pursuits and relations of life. There were disciples of Moses, of Gamaliel, Sadducees, Pharisees—men tinctured with the heathen philosophies and speculations, and others who were mere trimmers in doctrine and practice. But there were men about whom there was no question whatever. They had been with a greater than Moses—with one infinitely wiser than Confucius or Plato. Had science been their pursuit, their relation to Christ would have been as clearly for him as that of Tyndall and Darwin is against him. Newton and Herschel were as familiar with Christ as they were with the stars, and men took knowledge of them that they were Christians as well as astronomers. Thus in the entire range of art, letters and statesmanship, if men have been with Jesus, the fact will be known. In the business and relations of life common to us all, it is not possible that we should have been with Christ and our acquaintances never led to suspect it. Where there is nothing more than a formal profession, and where the heart has not been profoundly touched by the Holy Spirit, the world may indeed be ignorant of our religion. If we have mingled in its sinful and frivolous pleasures, and have conformed to its doubtful and dishonest practices, no amount of sagacity could have detected in us any traces of communion with Christ. A man who has been with Jesus, if he have not betrayed the Master as Judas did, will be known by his Christ-like character and conduct. In this character he will stand out from the world, and be recognized by it. In the family circle, in public employment, in general society his position will not be equivocal.

Actual living fellowship with Christ is the highest source of power and influence. It is more to have been with Jesus than to have been with his apostles, or to have been in his visible church, or to have been drawn within a radius of opinions and convictions of which Christ is the center. There is a superficial Christianity, powerless and obscure, because it has never reached this direct contact with Christ himself, and has never felt the vital and regenerating energy of immediate and personal communion with the Son of righteousness. For the world to take knowledge of us that we claim to be Christians, and that we are loosely and formally connected with the church, is a very different thing from that life of faith which arrests the giddy and skeptical, and carries them up to its hidden source in the Son of God. No shrinking, compromising, cowardly, pleasure-loving spirit can do this, whatever may be the profession. If any man be in Christ he is a new creature; and this new creation in Christ is something so wonderful, and so naturally inexplicable, that even careless and doubting sinners are constrained to refer it to the divine hand. To have been with Jesus is the Christian's distinguishing privilege and experience, and the knowledge which the world takes of him centers in the life and character which have been formed and inspired by communion with Christ.

On the Mexican Mission.

From the tone of our exchanges we believe that the church will give a hearty support to the work which Bishop Keener is inaugurating in Mexico. From the expressions we have noticed we give the following extracts. The Galveston Christian Advocate says:

We find the above in the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE of the twenty-third ultimo. The same paper informs us that the Bishop left that city upon his mission in Mexico on the twentieth of January. We rejoice that our church is entering this inviting field with so much vigor. Will not all the Texas preachers respond to the Bishop's appeal? Ten thousand dollars is the least amount required to place our missionary movements in Mexico on a proper basis, where five times that amount can be profitably employed. Within a month each preacher in Texas can raise $10 for this work. Let the Bishop feel that he has not only an interest in the prayers of the church while on his "missionary journey," but that his brethren are cordially co-operating with him in his labors.

The Richmond Christian Advocate refers to the subject in the following terms:

We at last have the pleasure of writing the head-line of this little article. We have a mission in Mexico, or at least we have a Bishop there who will establish one, we venture to assert, before he returns home. What a field is now opening to us in that fair and beautiful land! To lift the people of Mexico from the degradation into which they have been plunged by a false but specious system of religion, is a work in which a man might rejoice to spend the best years of his life. Surely our people will come forward promptly with their gifts for Mexico when they read Bishop Keener's report, as we trust they will soon have the pleasure of doing.

The Pacific Methodist has an excellent paragraph under the heading of Protestantism in Mexico:

The dark pall which has so long hung over the religious destiny of Mexico is being swept aside, and the great Protestant churches of the United States are making active efforts to introduce and diffuse the truths of the gospel into that land. There is likely to be some friction in the work, singular as it may seem. The Presbyterian Church claims a priority in the occupancy of the field and wishes no interference, or at least is jealous of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and charges her with appropriating the advantages which were derived through the agency of the Christian Union. The Northern Methodist General Missionary Committee has taken steps to occupy the field immediately, and Bishop Haven is probably there already.

The Southern Methodist Church has long looked with eager heart for the time to come when she could penetrate the land where bigotry has throttled truth for so many generations, and now, when the auspicious hour dawns, she springs to the work, despite the poverty of her mission treasury.

The letter written by Bishop Keener to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, which we publish this week, shows the manner of his faith. He is not the man to undertake a work so important without due consideration, and though his active energy may seem the creature of an impulse, yet we know that it is but the result of a settled purpose, and we believe great good will come of it. There is need for more labor in Mexico than all the churches combined can afford, and it seems the greatest folly if jealousy or punctilliousness is allowed to prevent the extension of the glorious light of the gospel among this people.

Let us pray, then, that the good work may prosper on every hand, and at the same time let us aid our noble Bishop in his venture by giving of our money.

Concern for Sinners.

We quote from "An Address to Young Preachers," by Dr. Lovick Pierce, in the Southern Christian Advocate:

I am profoundly astonished at the manifest want of this peculiar concern for sinners, graphically depicted by the Holy Spirit in this chosen illustration. As well might a mother in travail strive to hide her anxious pangs as for a Christian man or woman to seek to hide this travail of soul for sinners in general—not to speak of unconverted children and friends—if, indeed, they were in this painful state. But, alas! it is my sad duty to say that the church generally presents no symptoms of soul-travail. In all that is presented in what we now call revivals, I see nothing that approaches what common sense tells me the Holy Spirit signified by the employment of this striking figure to set forth not what might, but what must precede a Holy Ghost revival.

The church was evidently intended in much more than a mere figurative sense to be considered the mother of Christ's children. Take away this idea from the church as a divine institution and you destroy it. But give it its maternal place in the family of Christ, and you will at once see why it is that the increase of Christ's household is made dependent upon the travail of Zion.

But let us return to the relation sustained by the ministry to this travail in Zion. As already intimated, there was within my day a time when with them this peculiar concern for sinners constituted a continual burden. They never entered their pulpits until they had wrestled in prayer for the special help of their Heavenly Father. They could see no reason why God should withhold the tokens of his favor, except as an evidence of his displeasure. This, then, godly men felt, "may be, because of some fault in me," and they prayed all the more earnestly. This state of travail for dying sinners was regarded as the crucial test of a man's call to the ministry. No powerful awakenings, no visible conversions—such as were clearly authenticated by the testimony of the Spirit—were intolerable. Now I want to be clearly understood when I say that I suppose that any circuit preacher of that day did more of this sort of preaching in one year than any one of you does now in ten. And I pray you, my young brethren, not to let satan beguile you. It is true that having to preach every day was favorable to the maintenance of this mood of mind; but no change in the methods of our ministry can justify any declension in our yearning concern for the salvation of souls. And I tell you there is a sad falling off at this point.

If the life of this painful solicitude depends upon its daily use—as I dare say it does—then there is no regular pastor who can plead the want of daily labor to save souls. I fear that even in our cities, where pastoral work seems more easy and natural, there is a wide misapplication of it. I do not believe that it is so much the duty of pastors to run after those who ought to be considered the saved as after those who are in this respect unsaved. To my mind it does not seem possible to feed this affection, called travail, on what we call pastoral visiting among our church-members. It can only be fostered by pangs for the unborn. I am most special in these remarks. Christ could have meant nothing less, nothing else but this in his parable of the one lost sheep, against the ninety and nine in their fold at home. To seek and to save the lost was Christ's main business when on earth; and we must imitate him. Every degree we fall below this sense of spiritual travail is a declension toward zero in our ministerial power. My opinion is that as pastors we are called to rule in the church, and to feed Christ's sheep from the stores of knowledge which we are specially enjoined to lay in for this purpose, and from the stores of our experience. But we are not to abridge our special call to the greater work of calling sinners to repentance. Nor are we to consider that we have done this fully because we have preached repentance where they might and ought to have heard the proclamation. We ought never to feel that our duty toward sinners has been done so long as there is any practicable mode of approach to them untried by us.

Our Missionary Collections.

The following communication, addressed more particularly to presiding elders, is probably already in the hands of our brethren of the ministry. We publish it that all may have the benefit of its perusal. The secretary is working vigorously to arouse the whole church, and all must lend a helping hand. "Line upon line, line upon line; here a little and there a little." Presiding elders, pastors, stewards and the membership generally must work now as never before. The mission field is white to the harvest, the open door was never so wide open as at this hour, and Southern Methodism must not fail to respond to the call.

MISSION ROOMS,
Nashville, Tenn., Feb. 1, 1873.

REV. AND DEAR BROTHER: I take the liberty of addressing you briefly on the subject of missions. Since the year 1866 success has crowned our efforts, and our people, amidst their poverty, have displayed a large liberality. Our old missions have been revived, and new fields have been cultivated. An old debt has been nearly extinguished, and our missionaries have been sustained in their arduous labors. The present board is involved in no debt, but thanking God, they take courage. The regular collections for the year ending June, 1873, will perhaps exceed those of the year previous; but the amount realized is not equal to the demands upon the Central Board. After allowing sixty per cent. to the Annual Conference boards, the remainder is entirely too small to sustain the work before us. The mission in China is more encouraging than ever before; the brethren in that field greatly need help. A missionary should be sent to Japan without delay. Central America calls for the bread of life; the great West, including Kansas, New Mexico, Colorado, Nebraska, Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Oregon, California, Arizona, and the western border of Texas, are all ready to receive the gospel at our hands. We need, in addition to missionary preachers and teachers, books, houses of worship and school-rooms. We should have our Discipline and hymns translated into several languages. Now how are we to meet all these demands? We cannot progress with our work as a great church should do, and as we are expected by the Christian world to do, with less than $100,000 annually, exclusive of the appropriations to domestic missions in the several Annual Conferences. To give the Central Board $100,000, the whole church must raise $250,000 annually. We have six hundred and fifty thousand members in our church; forty cents from each of these would more than meet this demand. Now, my dear brother, can you not average this amount, or more, on your district? Will you preach on the subject? We need many sermons in aid of this glorious cause. Will you induce your preachers to preach on missions in all their congregations? Will you bring the matter before your District and Quarterly Conferences, and seek the hearty co-operation of every preacher in your charge? Our church is losing ground every day for want of missionaries in proper fields. These cannot be sent without means. Let us make a manly, Christian effort to bring our people, all our members, up to their duty. Strive to make them understand that it is a blessing, a means of grace, to give; that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Urge the rich to give liberally; and let the poor bring their offerings to the Lord, and then the work will be accomplished.

Shall we expect a large increase on your district in missionary contributions? May the Master give you success!

J. B. MCFERRIN, Sec.

A Grave Omission.

The Methodist is addressed by an inquirer who charges the Northern Bishops with one grave omission in their late address. As the address, we believe, was issued after the late Presidential election, we think they might have safely noticed the evil complained of. The talk of the Methodist about never having heard of the thing among Methodists, and that the Bishops never imagined such a vice to exist, is singular, to say the least of it. But here is the inquiry and the answer:

"I find in the address of our venerable Bishops one grave omission—namely, that of warning our members and local preachers against the common practice of selling their votes, and others of our church who, with money, tempt doubtful ones to buy. In my own charge there are several members (some of them have been professors over forty-five years) who, during the late election, publicly sold out for $5, $10, $15, and in some instances for $25. I am sorry our Bishops should have omitted it, and feel that it is high time something is said upon this overlooked question. I would like to know what a pastor is to do in such a case, as there is nothing in our Discipline bearing upon it. Is it sufficient to exclude a person from the kingdom of grace and glory?"

We answer our correspondent that, doubtless, the reason why the Bishops' address said nothing about such cases was the fact that they never imagined any such vice existed among us. We never before heard of an example of it among Methodists, and are profoundly mortified to hear of any now. How could these Methodists have been trained by their pastors? If they did this wrong, supposing it to be no immorality, their moral sense could hardly ever have been touched by the pastoral ministrations upon which they have waited; or, if once touched, it must have sunk again into perilous stupidity. There is no duty of the citizen to the State more sacred than that of the ballot. He who abuses it commits no common sin. He sins against the whole nation, and in the "great day of accounts" he will find himself proportionately responsible.

To our correspondent's inquiry about the disciplinary amenability of such crimes, we have none other than a most positive answer to give. We do not believe that any Bishop, or other official expounder of the law of the church, would hesitate a moment to say that such flagrancies come under the interdictions of our General Rules. They most certainly are "sufficient to exclude a person from the kingdom of grace and of glory," unless repented of. Wherever they are tolerated in the church the denomination will be disgraced, and ought to be if it does not make haste to correct the evil by exemplary application of its Discipline.

Interesting Relic.

The following letter, taken from the Nashville Advocate, was written to Rev. F. E. Pitts, thirty-seven years ago, by the late Rev. John Brice, of Baltimore, grandfather of Bishop Keener:

"As it is your desire to possess a knowledge of several occurrences that took place, in the Chesapeake Bay, during the late war between this country and Great Britain, which terminated in the year 1815, I have, in compliance with your wishes, undertaken to relate them as they were communicated to me by Captain Seymour, one of our local preachers in Accomac county, on the eastern shore of Virginia, and another friend and member of the church.

"Upon the arrival of the British fleet, under the command of Admiral Cockburn, in the Chesapeake Bay, it appears that Mr. Thomas, a local preacher, was captured by the fleet, while in the command of a small coasting vessel. Upon the admiral's questioning him as to his knowledge of the navigation of Hooper's Straits, formed by the Pargin islands, he said, in his familiar style, that he knew them charmingly well. Then the admiral asked if he could take his fleet through; he replied, yes, that he could. The admiral then said to his officers, we have found a man for our purpose, and immediately said to Thomas that he would give him $500 for that service.

"'Well,' said Thomas in reply, 'whoever would have thought that such a poor fellow as I am should see so much money? I live in a house with a dirt floor; I shall now have it floored with plank, and then shall be a gentleman.'

"The admiral then put the question to him: 'Will you undertake it?'

"'What!' says Thomas. 'Take the enemy into the bosom of my dear friends, whom I love as my life, for $500? No; if you should fill the ship with English guineas I would not.'

"'Then,' says the admiral, 'I will cut off your head and throw it overboard.' To which Thomas replied: 'Come life, come death, blessed be the Lord! I am ready to go and be with God.'

"The admiral then exclaimed: 'Good God, did I ever expect to meet with such a man! If it cost me all I possess I would give it if I could be placed in his situation.'

"He immediately turned to his officers and directed them thereafter not to interrupt Thomas' property or person, wherever found.

"It may be further remarked that the admiral had formed so exalted an opinion of Thomas' piety that he sent for him every Sunday to preach on board his ship to the whole crew (including himself and officers,) who conducted themselves with the utmost decorum. Thus a man without any literary acquirements, but possessed of supernatural gifts, was preferred to all others.

"In the progress of the fleet up the bay, after the above occurrence, the crews landed on Kent Island to procure provisions, for which payment was made; while there the admiral made acquaintance with a Methodist local preacher, for whom he had formed a particular attachment. Just as the admiral's barge was leaving the island the preacher, in order to shake hands with him, waded in the water up to his knees, extending his hand; which, upon the admiral's noticing, said: 'Row back; there comes a man to take leave of me whose shoes I am unworthy to unloose.'

"About the same time—that is, before the procedure of the fleet from Pargin Islands—Captain Seymour went on the admiral's ship and obtained permission to continue thereon the religious exercises, as was customary. JOHN BRICE."

Letter from Bishop Pierce.

MR. EDITOR: Please publish the following notice:

By agreement, Bishop Marvin will attend the District Conferences in Missouri for me while I attend in Georgia for him. This arrangement has not been made for our accommodation, but to enable me to promote, if I can, a special interest of Emory College.

This notice I give as an answer to several letters received from Missouri. Bishop Marvin will arrange with the presiding elders as to the time and order of the district meetings in your three Conferences. Brethren will please correspond with him. G. F. PIERCE.

THE RURAL SOUTHLAND is an excellent agricultural monthly, published in New Orleans at $1.50 per annum. It is the official journal of the Mechanics' and Agricultural Fair Association of Louisiana. We have received the March number.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE is beautifully illustrated this month. The Galaxy for March has a tempting table of contents. Good Words and the Sunday Magazine for February are each of them worth the cost of the year's subscription.

ARTHUR'S HOME MAGAZINE and its beautiful little companion, the Children's Hour, for March are both finely illustrated and filled with wholesome articles.

THE ALDINE for March has eleven fine illustrations, of which we note especially: After the Storm, White Birches of the Saranac, and Barnyard Toilets.

THE NORTH AMERICAN BEE JOURNAL for February has been received. Published by A. F. Moon & Co., Indianapolis, Indiana.

REVUE DE LA MODE for March is full of useful matters for the ladies. Published by S. T. Taylor, New York.

GOOD THINGS FOR THE YOUNG OF ALL AGES for January contains a good many good things.

APPLETON'S JOURNAL of March 1 is a fine number, and handsomely illustrated, as usual.

BY A NOTE from Bro. David Ayers we learn that the St. John's church in Galveston, of which Dr. J. R. Walker is pastor, is having a new organ put up, which cost in New York $3,500.

Also that the basement of the new St. James church is nearly completed, and a mission Sunday school is to be organized in it in a week or two. We are glad to see these indications of prosperity and progress. The example of our Galveston brethren should stimulate the church everywhere to increased energy and liberality in advancing the cause of Christ.

DR. B. H. MOSS, of this city, was stricken with paralysis about three weeks ago, and has been nearly helpless since the attack. We are glad to announce that there is some improvement in his condition, and we hope that God, in his good providence, may yet restore him to health. Thousands of prayers will go up continually for him. Seriously as he is missed in his professional duties, he is still more missed in his work and offices in the church.

FROM the Southern Christian Advocate of February 26 we learn that the Wesleyan Female College, of Macon, Georgia, has been temporarily closed on account of the appearance of smallpox in the institution. Dr. E. H. Myers, the worthy president, is suffering from a mild attack of variolold. We sincerely hope that the doctor may soon recover, and that the college will shortly resume its regular exercises.

REV. J. G. WORLEY, of the Louisiana Conference, was seriously injured by a fall from a street car while in attendance at the recent session of the Conference. He has been confined to his bed since the accident until within the last week. We are glad to report that he is now able to move about somewhat, on crutches, and that there is a fair prospect of his being able to enter upon his assigned field of labor in a few weeks.

THE annual parade of the New Orleans firemen, on the fourth instant, was very fine. The procession was long, and the display of engines, horses and gallant men was truly magnificent. The entire population were out to welcome and honor the men who at great peril and much self-sacrifice guard our city from conflagrations.

ATTENTION is directed to the Southern educational agency, which is advertised in this issue of the ADVOCATE. It commends itself to us as an enterprise of great utility, and, if properly conducted, we believe it may be the means of accomplishing much good for Southern education.

FROM seven hundred acres of land in Brockport, New York, $200,000 worth of beans have been raised and sold this year.

GEORGIA has $3,668,350 invested in cotton factories, and $619,800 in iron foundries.

Dying in the Dark.

An item in the newspapers says: "Ludwig Feuerbach, the German philosopher, who died at Nuremberg, September 13, expired in saying: 'Truth, O truth—where is it?' The man who died in this bewilderment, and with the confession of despair on his lips, had professed to seek truth all his days. At times in his life he must have thought he had gained what he was seeking for, for he wrote on such themes as the "Essence of Christianity" and the "Essence of Religion," and what he propounded on subjects so vital and comprehensive must have been what he saw as "truth." How came it, then, that he died with the acknowledgment that what he had sought he had never gained, and knew not where it was to be found?

Feuerbach was through life a student and teacher of philosophy, and a student, as he would say, of "religions." If any truth is in the world, or may be discovered by man or revealed to him from heaven, this man in the course of a lifetime's studies in theology, science and philosophy, might have fallen upon it, or found it crosslug his pathway. Why did he die without the light—die still pursuing, but gathering no satisfying result? Because he lost out of view, or discarded as unworthy of belief, the idea of a personal God. He believed in humanity, and nothing higher. "Break the illusion," he says, "that God is a being distinct from man; restore the true conception that God is only a name given to the ideal nature of man himself, the grand personification of man's grander personality, and at once humanity straightens itself up to its full height, believes in its constitution, respects its law, trains its powers, educates its capacities, walks with uplifted countenance, enjoys the use of its faculties, and pushes out toward its perfection."

These are brave and high-sounding words. But how they wilted in the presence of death. Humanity was no God to the poor human soul just passing out in the great unknown future. Pantheism was good enough in the lecture-room or the review, but it faded away like a dream when the vision of another life began to dawn. We have known that Atheism failed those who trusted it in the presence of death. But Pantheism is no better refuge for the human soul. Humanity deified is a poor God for humanity dying. Only the Christian, to whom God is a personal being, a divine Father, and Christ a present, loving Savior, can die calmly, confidently, hopefully. To him truth has come in a Person whom it is his joy to trust, and no shriek of despair is heard as his soul goes up to God.—Presbyterian.

THE Nashville Christian Advocate says: "We are very sorry to hear that Bishop Paine is suffering greatly with rheumatism—he has been almost helpless for some time. He fears that he will not be able to attend the session of the Baltimore Conference, which meets March 5. Bishops Pierce and Doggett, it is hoped, will be in attendance. Bishop Paine took a severe cold in attending a funeral in the country. We fervently pray that he may soon be relieved, and that his valuable life may long be preserved to the church."

THE American Christian Review, in referring to the statement that men are never excluded from the churches for the grave sin of covetousness, asserts its knowledge of five men, all in good circumstances and good standing in the community, who were expelled at one time from the Disciples church in Little Flat Rock, Indiana, for that sin. No other charge was made against them. They had refused to pay their proportion of the cost of a new meeting-house.

A BIBLE FOR THE MIKADO.—Dr. Hepburn, a well-known American Japanese scholar, recently received permission to present to the Mikado a copy of the Bible in English, with the last edition of the doctor's Japanese and English dictionary. This Bible Dr. Hepburn took to Japan with him thirteen years ago. For these thirteen years has Dr. Hepburn been waiting to press his gift upon the ruler of Japan, patiently watching for an auspicious season. The presentation took place in November.

A LITTLE INCIDENT at Montreal will serve to illustrate how easily stories and traditions of miracles may have been started. A cross of moisture has been noticed to appear at night and disappear in the morning. Many devout souls were convinced that a saint was buried there, and eager crowds came to carry away the holy soil. The saint that lay beneath proved to be the intersecting water-pipes, which had a defective joint that supplied the moisture for the miracle.

THE coal shipments over the Pennsylvania and New York railroads for the year ending November 30, 1872, were nine hundred and eighteen thousand one hundred and twenty-eight tons.

ON SATURDAY, the first of March, the People's Legislature elected General McMillen as United States senator from Louisiana.

THE CITIZENS' BANK.—Among the banking corporations of our city there is none which deserves to rank higher, in the estimation of the commercial community of this city, than the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana. With a large capital, kept well in hand for the relief of the merchants and tradesmen of the city in times of financial pressure, it will be found a most valuable dependence to its patrons. The officers are in close sympathy with the business enterprises of the city and country, while they are courteous, obliging and prompt in meeting the reasonable demands made upon them for assistance in the trials to which, in the manner of conducting our mercantile operations, merchants are so frequently subjected. We regard Mr. John G. Gaines, the president, as a model business man of great experience, fine judgment and generous feelings. It is with great pleasure that we direct the attention of our readers to the advertisement in another column.

SEPTOLINE OIL COMPANY.—At No. 62 Camp street and 15 Dauphine street, dealers as well as individual buyers will find always a very large stock of petroleum oils, gas fluids, oil and gas chandeliers, lamps and lamp trimmings of all kinds, portable gas fixtures of every description, tin and japanned ware in every style—all at prices to suit the most modest pocket.

THE BETHESDA MINERAL WATER has received the highest recommendation from many competent authorities; among others the late Dr. Stone recognized its efficacy in the treatment of liver and bilious affections and kidney and urinary diseases. Mr. H. D. Huff is the sole Southern agent, and will supply the water in any quantity desired.

VISITORS to the city should not fail to examine the prices at the cheap crockery and house-furnishing bazar of Navra & Oliver, 171 Canal street, opposite the Varieties Theater, before purchasing elsewhere.

THE ATTENTION of our readers is directed to the advertisement, in this issue, of J. G. Bermel, No. 121 Canal street, where will be found a full assortment of fancy articles and hair goods.

WE CALL ATTENTION to the advertisement of W. F. Clark, manufacturer of carriages and buggies, at No. 131 Rampart street.

UNDISPUTED FACTS.—It has been truly and significantly said that domestic happiness is more dependent on good digestion than virtuous creeds or moral codes. If the dogma holds, the oracle can be consulted by a prompt application to Price, the Delphic author of the Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Wherever, within the length and breadth of the land, Price's Bitters have penetrated, every household has been illumined by the sunshine of the unclouded joy, and every family reveled in the sweets of health and contentment. The sparkling eye, the ruddy cheek, the cheerful smile and happy silence no less than the elastic step and the unfaltering tread, what are they but the eloquent testimonies of some vitalizing elixir? No secret botany holds the charm, no scientific alchemy creates the spell. The days of miracles are gone; the magic, mysteriously-working wonders have passed away, and the age of plain, practical one—gives us a simple tonic that, by a happy amalgamation, restores to energy and strength the enervated system. Take Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters, and you bid an eternal farewell to such unwelcome guests as dyspepsia, indigestion, nervousness, neuralgia, flatulency and debility.

REMOVE from the blood those wastes arising from the action of the system which, if allowed to remain in the circulation, give rise to diseases which speedily destroy life. Nature has appointed the kidneys and liver as her agents, by whose action impurities shall be eliminated from the system; and when these agents are torpid or debilitated, or disabled from any cause for their business, Hamilton's Buchu and Dandelion imparts fresh life and vigor to them, and makes of them the best blood purifiers one can have. This preparation is for sale at Frederickson & Harte's and E. J. Hart & Co.'s drug stores. ja14 2m

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND SOLD.

WILL CLEANSE YOUR CLOTHES WITHOUT RUBBING.

EVERY ONE SOLD IS FULLY WARRANTED.

NO FLUIDS OR EXTRA SOAP USED.

IT CONSUMES LESS SOAP, LESS TIME AND LESS FUEL THAN THE USUAL method. It saves Labor, Wear and Tear, and the Annoyance of Washday. It requires no attention while the process of cleansing goes on. It will do the Washing of the Family while you are eating breakfast and doing up dishes.

Steam has long been known as the most powerful agent in removing dirt, grease and stains from clothing, and bleaching them white. Paper makers have for many years used steam in cleaning and bleaching their rags, and they succeed in making, by its agency, the liltiest pickle from the gutter perfectly pure and white. Until the invention of the STEAM WASHER or WOMAN'S FRIEND, although often attempted, no method had been discovered of applying Steam directly to the clothing, which could be used in a portable manner for domestic purposes. The WOMAN'S FRIEND washes without labor. It will do the washing of an ordinary family in from thirty minutes to an hour. The STEAM WASHER is superior to all other devices for the following reasons:

1. It does its own work, thereby saving a large portion of the time usually taken in a family.
2. It uses much less soap than is required by any other method.
3. It requires no attention whatever while the process of cleaning is going on. A lady can do her washing while she is eating her breakfast and doing up the breakfast dishes.
4. Clothing wears double the time, washed in this Washer, that it will washed by a machine, or by hand-labor or a washboard.
5. Lace Curtains and all fine fabrics are washed in a superior manner. For Flannels this Washer is most desirable, as it will not full them, as a machine or hand-rubbing does. All fabrics, from the finest lace to a bed-blanket, can be washed perfectly and with ease without the rubbing-board.

IT IS TRULY A LABOR AND CLOTHES-SAVING INVENTION.

PHOENIX OIL.—PREPARED BY J. J. LINK, New Orleans.—This valuable Liniment has no equal, and can be depended on as one of the best offered to the public. The proprietor, therefore, leaves it to them to judge of its merits, feeling satisfied that its virtue will speak for itself. This Liniment will cure the following diseases if the directions are strictly followed, viz.: Piles or hemorrhoids; cases of twenty-five years standing have been cured with this Liniment. Who will suffer with this painful disease any longer, when so cheap and easy a remedy is offered? For burns or scalds the proprietor challenges the world to produce its equal; it will instantly give relief. For old indolent sores it has effected cures where the most scientific failed. For fresh cuts, sprains, bruises, tetterworm, ringworm, scald head, erysipelas, sting of a wasp, spider or snake bite, chapped lips, chapped hands, sore mouth, sore throat, sore or caked breast, rheumatism, and pain in the side, breast or back. In cases of pneumonia it will give great relief, where there is much pain in the side or breast, by rubbing the patient with it. For warts and corns it is good, and will remove them if the directions are strictly followed. This Liniment will be found a certain cure for the following diseases in stock: glanders, poll evil, fistula, foul ulcers, sprains, bruises, sweeny, ringbone on dogs. In fact no family or stock will be without this valuable preparation after it becomes generally known. I would discount to retailers. For sale by WILLIAM COX,

THE NINE PARTS OF SPEECH

Three little words you often see
Are articles—a, an and the.

A noun's the name of anything,
As school or garden, hoop or swing.

Adjectives tell the kind of noun,
As great, small, pretty, white or brown.

Instead of nouns the pronouns stand—
He head, his face, your arm, my hand.

Verbs tell of something to be done—
To sit, stand, sing, laugh, jump or run.

How things are done the adverbs tell,
As slowly, quickly, ill or well.

Conjunctions join the words together,
As men and women, whale or feather.

The preposition stands before
A noun, as of or through the door.

The interjection shows surprise,
As Ah! how pretty! Oh, how wise!

The whole are called nine parts of speech,
Which reading, writing, speaking teach.

The House-Mouse and the Wood-Mouse.

A house-mouse and a wood-mouse once met and invited each other to a visit. The house-mouse was to go first to the wood-mouse; so the wood-mouse made her house, which was at the foot of a fir-tree, look as nice as she could, and took home some roots and berry-buds for dinner.

Then the house-mouse came and tapped at the door, and courtesied like a lady, and the visit began. Of course company must like what is set before them; and so the house-mouse tried to eat; but it was hard work, and, to do her best, she couldn't chat as much as at other times.

Next day it was the house-mouse's turn to have company. She lived in a granary, and had heaped up a nice pile of barley and wheat and rye, and bits of cake and pork and ends of candle. And then the wood-mouse came, and so her visit began.

The wood-mouse had never before had such a dinner, and the house-mouse had to tell how she came by such nice things. She told about the pantry and the kitchen and the cupboard, which last was so hard to get into.

But, just as they were saying how much better it was to live here than in the wood, they heard some one come slily over the straw.

"Hush, hush! there comes Sheriff Cat," said the hostess. So they sat still, hardly daring to breathe; but, before they knew it, the sheriff was standing right over them.

"Who are you, mussing up my granary?" said he.

"Only two little mice," said the house-mouse.

"What are you doing here?"

"Only having a little dinner."

"Eating up all my grain?"

"Oh, no! We have only taken what was lying loose."

"I am going to take you now."

"Oh, no! Don't take us," said the house-mouse, "and we will tell you a story."

"Let me hear it, then," said the sheriff.

"Once there was a little bird—"

"Well, what did he do?"

"He was going to sweep the floor—"

"Then he was very neat."

"And he found a dime—"

"Then he wasn't poor."

"So he bought a tiny piece of sausage."

"Then he had enough to eat."

"He put it on the coals to fry."

"Then he didn't eat it raw."

"He laid it on the door-sill to cool."

"Then he didn't mean to get burnt."

"But the cat came and snatched it."

"And so I shall snatch you," replied Sheriff Cat.

But the wood-mouse ran quickly away, and didn't stop until safe under the root of the fir-tree. She was so scared that she did not dare to come out again until she was so thin and hungry that she could hardly creep; and she resolved never more to visit the granary.

And what became of the house-mouse? That is for you to guess.—The Nursery.

A REAL BEAR STORY.—A Canada paper tells the story of a little girl and a bear. The girl's name was Addie Baker, and she was only seven years of age. One day she started off up the lane that led into the pasture to meet her father and grandpa, who were off in the cow-pasture building fence. The lane rises up a sharp hill from the barn for about a dozen rods, and then drops into a little hollow just out of sight of the house. Addie was just going into this hollow—she was walking along with her eyes on the ground—when she was startled by the sudden rustling of the leaves and a low growl.

You can judge of her alarm to find herself so suddenly face to face, within a few feet, of a large, fierce-looking animal with two little ones. She could not tell what kind of animals they were, but thought at last they must be some kind of sheep, she said, and so threw out her arms to "scare 'em." The bear—for such it was—then growled and jumped toward her, showing her teeth savagely. The little girl sprang back in alarm, and ran with all her might for the house, the bear close at her heels. But Madam Bruin, for some reason, gave up the down-hill chase and went back to her little ones. As the little girl, in looking over her shoulder, saw that the creature was going back, she stopped, not thinking there was much danger. The bear turned to look at her before she disappeared into the hollow where her cubs were, and Addie said she "dared him," and "made as though she was going after him," whereupon "he looked so ugly that she ran into the house and told the folks about it." Addie's mother knew at once what she had seen, and was very much frightened by the adventure of her little daughter, and also thankful for her escape.

PAT'S PLEA FOR THE BIBLE.—In a school in the west of Ireland, a few years ago, were two boys about the same age—fifteen or sixteen. Their names were Pat F. and Philip O'F. There were many intelligent young people in the school, but Pat and Philip took the lead in most things; and, indeed, the visitors were often astonished at the remarkable readiness and appropriateness of their replies to the miscellaneous questions put to them. Philip has become a missionary of the cross in Turkey. We do not know what has become of Pat, at that time by far the most promising boy in the school. But [illegible] he is."

We remember on one occasion Mr. B., well known in the neighborhood, paid a visit to the school. He was desirous of trying at once the knowledge of the Scriptures possessed by the scholars, and their power to apply it to the solution of controverted points. Mr. B. assumed the language of an opponent to the general reading of the word of God.

"Boys," said he, "what right have you to read the Bible?"

"Every right, sir," said the boys; "for Christ said (John v, 39) 'Search the Scriptures.'"

"All very well," said Mr. B., "to prove that big people may read—men and women who have come to years of maturity—but what has that to say to little fellows like you?"

"The word of God is fit for little people too," said Pat, "for we read (Second Timothy iii, 15) that Timothy knew the Holy Scriptures from a child."

"But," said Mr. B., "Timothy afterward, you know, became a priest. Your text only proves that young boys who are going forward to the priesthood should be taught the Holy Scriptures."

"Oh, but, sir," said Pat, with a bright twinkle of his intelligent eye, that proclaimed he had the best of the argument even before the answer came, "wasn't Timothy (Third Epistle i, 5) taught by his grandmother? And sure, sir, she wasn't a priest!"—Wesleyan Juvenile Offering.

THE BOY AT THE PALACE GATE. A little boy in England wished very much to see the Queen; so he determined to go at once to her palace and ask to see her. But the sentinel on guard before the gate only laughed at the boy, and pushed him aside with his musket. Still the lad could not give up his purpose, now he had come so far. Not till the soldier threatened to shoot him did he turn and run away. One of the young princes saw him crying, and, on learning the cause, said, with a smile, "I'll take you to the Queen;" and past the guards he walked into the very presence of his royal mother. With surprise she asked her son about the lad; and when she heard his story she laughed, as any kind-hearted mother would, and with some kindly words sent the delighted boy away with a bright piece of money in his hand.

It is a hard matter for the poor to gain admittance into the presence of an earthly sovereign. But the way into the presence of the great King is always open, and even the beggar in his rags is welcome. Just as this prince brought the child who longed to see her into his mother's presence, so Christ takes us by the hand and leads us into the presence of his Heavenly Father. For the dear Son's sake we are made welcome. Without him we can never be admitted. Never forget, when you pray to God, to ask all blessings for the sake of Jesus, for in no other way will prayer ever be heard or answered. No one who longs to see the King in his beauty but will find the Prince of life ever ready to lead him up to his very throne.

LAY PREACHING.—"I want to tell you," said an American minister, "what a layman did for me in Greenfield, Massachusetts. I was only sixteen years old. My mother had died in the previous December. I was driving the cows home toward evening through a slight rain. A man with an umbrella overtook me, and, holding it over me, said:

"'My boy, these are fine cows.'

"'Yes,' said I, 'they are fine.'

"'Why, that one with the short horns and broad back is a Durham.'

"His interest in what interested me won me. After awhile he asked:

"'Have you got a mother?'

"'No, sir,' said I, 'she died last winter.'

"'What was the last thing she said?'

"'O, sir, the last thing she said was: May God have mercy on these children!'

"'Well, my boy, ain't you a Christian?'

"'No, sir.'

"'Why ain't you?'

"'I expect it is because I love sin so much.'

"Fixing his eyes earnestly on mine, and shifting his umbrella so as to grasp my hand with his right hand, he said:

"'What, my boy, and you are not a Christian!'

"'No, sir,' said I, with streaming eyes, 'but I want to be.'

"And then he talked with me so gently and kindly that I shall never forget it. O the preaching of a seasonable word! It was his preaching."

KEEP AWAY FROM THE WHEELS. Charles Williams lived near a manufactory, and he was very fond of going among the workmen and the young people who were at work there. The foreman would say to him: "Keep away from the wheels, Charlie."

Charlie did not mind, and would often say: "I can take care of myself." Often he would go nigh, and the wind of the wheels would almost suck him in, and two or three times he grew so dizzy that he scarcely knew which way to go.

At length one day he staggered while amid the wheels and fell the wrong way; the band caught his little coat and drew him in, and he was dreadfully mangled. So it is, boys, when you go into temptation; you may think you can take care of yourselves, and keep clear of the wheels; but oh, you may find yourselves dreadfully mistaken! Before you are aware of it the band may catch you, and nothing can save you. Keep away from the wheels!

THE other day a little boy who had cut his finger ran to his mother and cried: "Tie it up, ma; tie it up quick, for the juice is all running out!"

Farm, Garden and Household.

Propagation of the Orange.

James Parker, of Summit, Mississippi, gives the Rural Southland his experience in the propagation of the orange, as follows:

"I am pleased to see so much lively interest taken in the cultivation of this king of Southern fruits. I have spent many a pleasant day among the beautiful orange groves of Louisiana. And many times I meditate on those lovely scenes of by-gone days. A few hints on its propagation and my success with this delightful fruit may not be amiss.

"I have always obtained the best results by procuring as much seed of the sour orange as needed, and in a well-prepared piece of ground sow them in drills about two feet apart, the seed dropped regularly a few inches apart in the drills, and covered about one inch; the seed may be sown in February, and if they are from well-ripened fruit they will germinate readily. If the seedlings are kept clean and free from weeds, as they should be, they will make a fine growth during the season. In November following prepare another piece of ground to transplant the seedlings in nursery rows. The rows should be four feet apart. The seedlings should be lifted with care, and only in small quantities, to prevent them from drying.

"I have root-pruned them—that is to say, I have shortened their main roots. A trench is opened with the spade or plow, and the seedlings set in carefully, the same depth that they were in the seed-bed, the soil drawn to the roots and pressed so as to make it compact. The distance in the rows should be one foot to fifteen inches; this is all that is necessary, except to keep them clean and in a growing condition. In the month of August they will be in fine order for budding; the bark will slip free, and if the right kind of buds are inserted there will be no failure. I have used the previous year's growth for budding with better success than the young growth of the present season. In this way I have scarcely lost one bud. In cutting out the bud it is useless to attempt to take the wood out, as the germ of the bud is injured by such a process. The usual mode, as practiced in budding the apple and other fruits, is all that is necessary to secure the best results with the orange. Insert the bud about eighteen inches above the ground, and use strips of bass matting for tying. If any buds have failed they may now be grafted, and this will prevent any loss. All shoots from the sour stock should be kept off, and the trees cultivated as in previous seasons.

"In this way I have propagated the orange with the best success. The trees can be transplanted one year from the bud. They will grow fast and bear soon if a little attention is given them."

PRUNING.—There is less correct knowledge among cultivators of the habits and nature of growth of trees than of any other department of farming. With regard to pruning there is one infallible guide, viz.: Never prune a tree when the saw you are using will keep bright. That proves that the pores of the wood are full of thin sap. If they are then cut the sap will run out. When shall we prune? When the sap is thick, and will gum up the saw, so that it will need washing once or twice in two or three hours. The thin sap has then ascended to swell the buds and expand the blossoms and leaves, and having performed its [illegible] labor there, what portion remains, but in a thickened form, returns down under the outside bark, and increases in diameter. The sap-vessels are now comparatively empty and the tree can be pruned, if judiciously done, without much injury.

Shortening in trees is another matter. That may be done in most trees at any time without much harm, as none of the large vessels are cut, and the leaves below the place cut would be likely to absorb the passing sap. The downward motion of the sap takes place about the middle of June. Then the sap-vessels are comparatively empty. After the leaves have fallen in the autumn they are in a similar condition.—New England Farmer.

RASPBERRIES.—Those who wish to raise raspberries for the market, or who are willing to be at the expense and trouble for their own supply of the fruit, will do well to select the best varieties from the nurseries, set them out in good places, and take first-rate care of them. But for those who, for want of money or inclination, will not do this, it will be found the next best thing to transplant the common wild raspberry from its usual habitation beside pasture stumps and roadside fences, into a row in the kitchen garden. Few wild fruits have a finer flavor, and none are borne more abundantly, with less care; neither are there many which can be more surely counted on for yielding year after year, without regard to vicissitudes of frost and drouth.—Rural Sun.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Scientific American commends onions as a specific against epidemics—not as an esculent, but sliced and kept in a sick-room, where they will absorb any atmospheric poison. They should be replaced by fresh ones every hour. It is noticed that in the room of a smallpox patient they will blister and decompose very rapidly, but will prevent the spread of the disease. Their application has also proved effective in the case of snake-bites.

VEAL OMELETTE.—Three pounds of chopped veal, two eggs beaten, one tablespoonful of sweet cream, one tablespoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of ground pepper, six tablespoonfuls of rolled crackers, one teaspoonful of thyme or summer savory. Make it into a long roll, put into a dripping-pan with water enough to keep from burning. Bake well. Some add a slice of salt pork chopped.

VESTED INTEREST—Money in the waistcoat pocket.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GIN

The great popularity of the EAGLE GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Gin is lighter than any other gin, thus having an advantage for planters who wish to save power. All the planters using the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that their cotton is sent to market if always brings the highest market price, as no other gin or any other or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of these Cotton Gins have been made and sold during a period of twenty years the undersigned has been the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans, who has never had a gin returned or rejected, out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinder of the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other Cotton Gins, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the two inches larger cylinder in larger-sized gins can be secured. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin from an established reputation, can purchase the Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are getting an unrivaled experiment, but will obtain a gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. All sizes of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment, and should be particular to state if the saw is to be left-hand motion gins.

A CHALLENGE
Is extended to the world to place before the public a better Cough or Lung remedy than
ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.
IT HAS NO EQUAL. Read what well-known Druggists of Tennessee say about Allen's Lung Balsam:
SPRINGFIELD, TENN., Sept. 13, 1872.
GENTLEMEN: Please ship us six dozen Allen's Lung Balsam. We have not a bottle in the store. It has more reputation than any Cough Medicine we have ever sold. Have been in the drug business twenty-seven years. We mean just what we say.
Very truly yours, HURT & TANNER.
What the Doctors Say.
Drs. Wilson & Ward, physicians and druggists, write from Centerville, Tennessee: "We purchased Allen's Lung Balsam, and it sells rapidly. We are practicing physicians, as well as druggists, and take pleasure in recommending a great remedy, such as we know this to be."
Physicians do not recommend a medicine which has no merit. What they say about Allen's Lung Balsam can be taken as a fact. Let all afflicted test it at once, and be convinced of its real merits.
It is harmless to the most delicate child. It contains no Opium in any form.
Directions accompany each bottle.

WANTED—MEN WHO WANT TO MAKE Money.—Here is an opportunity for making money rarely presented in a lifetime. We have got the best and surest-selling article ever invented, that every housekeeper buys on sight. It is a small Furnace, weighing only six pounds, that can be used with or without a stove. It will fit in the holes of any sized stove or range, and will do as much work with one quart of fuel—charcoal, chips, coke, corncobs, wood or soft coal—as can be done on any stove with one-half bushel. It will boil, broil, roast, toast, bake and stew. It is the best flat-iron heater in the world. Its economy in saving fuel is marvelous. You have no smoke, gas or heat in the room. It sells the year round. Retail price only $2. Thousands are sold every week. Any man with a small capital can clear from $20 to $40 per day by owning the right of any good county, and a whole State is of incalculable worth to a man of enterprise. We will send a sample Furnace to any part of the United States on receipt of $2. Address, for circular,

THE NEW LOUISIANA REMEDY,
FOR
COUGHS, CATARRH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, CONSUMPTION, ETC.,
is creating extraordinary interest wherever known. The following is a sample of the evidence that is pouring in from all directions:
(COPY.)
[illegible]
Two years ago my wife was pronounced by physicians to be fast going into consumption, and I was constrained by a friend to use Smith's Pulmonic Sirup, and since the use of it her recovery has been remarkable; in fact almost entirely cured. The medicine we consider INVALUABLE.

which acts on the KIDNEYS, LIVER and BOWELS, and removes impurities of the system by opening its outlets.
W. C. HAMILTON & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.
Mress Fever Tonic.
Ask your druggist for this Remedy. A box of Pills with each bottle, and, is sold: NO CURE NO PAY. Take no other Ague Cure. Ask for KRESS FEVER TONIC. It is the safest. Don't forget the Warrant. If it fails to cure you, get your money back.
W. C. HAMILTON & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

PILES CURED.
HAMILTON'S BUCHU AND DANDELION promotes digestion of the food by its influence on the stomach. It promotes the healthy action of the Kidneys. It secures activity of the Liver and regularity of the Bowels, and Prevents Constipation, which causes Piles. Try it.
W. C. HAMILTON & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

NINETY-NINE PER CENT.
L. W. Faulkner, of Champaign, Illinois, says "I have been selling KRESS FEVER TONIC two years under a warrant, and have had but one bottle returned as failing to cure. From what I see of its action I believe that it will cure Ninety-nine cases of Ague in every One Hundred."
W. C. Hamilton & Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, warrant this remedy to cure Ague in all its forms. A box of Pills FREE with each bottle.
Rational Treatment of all Kidney, Urinary and Liver Diseases
IS EFFECTED BY
HAMILTON'S BUCHU AND DANDELION
It acts directly on these organs, enabling them to remove those wastes in the blood which cause Gravel, Diabetes, Bright's Disease, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Scrofula, etc.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-eighth ultimo:

|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... 21,661 |
| Lake | 142 |
| Mobile | 685 |
| Florida | 11 |
| Texas | 375 |
| Total | 22,054 |

On Saturday the demand, being checked by a scant supply of freight-room and the high pretensions of masters, continued inanimate throughout the day, with a general tendency in favor of buyers, except for clean, white cottons and the better qualities, the comparative scarcity of which enabled factors to realize for such descriptions full prices, while all other kinds were dull and drooping, selling in most cases at a decline of ⅛c., and although at the close the press quotations were unchanged, some authorities reduced the figures for good ordinary and low middling to the above extent. The quotations of the Exchange, on the contrary, under a general revision of quotations, were raised ⅛c. on all grades but ordinary. The sales, exclusive of 701 bales late on Friday, summed up 4,400 bales. On Monday, under light receipts, buyers came forward with a much better spirit, and although the movement was again checked by the scant supplies of the kinds most in request, yet fully 9,000 bales changed hands, partly at previous rates and partly at an improvement of ⅛c., the closing rates showing a net advance to that extent in all grades above ordinary. On Tuesday the movement was restricted by the combined influences of a moderate supply of freight-room, high freights, a decline in foreign exchange and light supplies of the better qualities, which were the most in request, but the sales, nevertheless, summed up 5,450 bales. During the morning clean, even-running lists commanded fuller prices, in many cases showing an advance of ⅛c., but later in the day the market was less buoyant, and, although it closed firm, it was without any quotable improvement on Monday's rates. The sales of dusty or sandy cottons include low ordinary at 12⅛c., and ordinary at 14c. We also reduce sales of strict good ordinary at 18@18⅛c., do., with staple, at 18⅜c., low middling at 18⅛, 18⅜@18⅛c., strict do. at 19c., strict low middling to middling at 19⅛c., middling at 19½@19⅝c., and strict middling at 20c.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 18,850 bales, against 14,350 for the corresponding time last week and 13,800 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 895,255 bales, against 787,050 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 472,448 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 146,007 to Great Britain, of 35,844 to France, and of 126,067 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

THE GOLDEN SIDE.

There is many a rest on the road of life,
If we only would stop to take it;
And many a tone from the better land,
If the querulous heart would wake it.
To the sunny soul that is full of hope,
And whose beautiful trust ne'er faileth,
The grass is green and the flowers are bright,
Though the wintry storm prevaileth.

Better to hope, though the clouds hang low,
And to keep the eyes still lifted;
For the sweet blue sky will soon peep through
When the ominous clouds are rifted.
There was never a night without a day,
Nor an evening without a morning;
And the darkest hour, the proverb goes,
Is the hour before the dawning.

There is many a gem in the path of life,
Which we pass in our idle pleasure,
That is richer far than the jeweled crown
Or the miser's hoarded treasure;
It may be the love of a little child,
Or a mother's prayer to Heaven,
Or only a beggar's grateful thanks
For a cup of water given.

Better to weave in the web of life
A bright and golden filling,
And to do God's will with a ready heart,
And hands that are swift and willing,
Than to snap the delicate silver threads
Of our curious lives asunder,
And then blame Heav'n for the tangled ends,
And sit to grieve and wonder.

HABITS OF LITERARY LABOR.

When Mr. Pickwick informed Mr. Jingle that his friend Mr. Snodgrass had a strong poetic turn, Mr. Jingle responded:

"So have I—Epic poem—ten thousand lines—revolution of July—composed it on the spot—Mars by day, Apollo by night—bang the field-piece—twang the lyre—fired a musket—fired with an idea—rushed into wine-shop—wrote it down—back again—whiz, bang—another idea—wine-shop again—pen and ink—back again—cut and slash—noble time, sir."

There are other people beside Mr. Pickwick who accept this method of literary production as quite natural and legitimate. We remember seeing, some years ago, a sketch by an extravagant humorist of a man, who wrote a book in a single night, tossing each sheet as it was finished over his left shoulder, pursuing his work with a pen that hissed with the heat of the terrible friction, and fainting away into the arms of anxious friends when the task was finished. Preposterous as the fiction was, it hardly exaggerated an idea prevalent in many minds that literary production is a sort of miraculous birth, that is as strenuous and inevitable as the travail which brings a new being into life. Indeed there are some, perhaps many, writers who practically entertain the same notion. They depend upon moods, and if the moods do not come, nothing comes. They go to their work without a will, and impotently wait for some angel to stir the pool, and if the angel fails to appear that settles the question for them. Such men, of course, accomplish but little. Few of them ever do more than show what possibilities of achievement are within them. They disappoint themselves, disappoint their friends, and disappoint a waiting public that soon ceases to wait, and soon transfers its expectations to others. Literary life has very few satisfactions for them, and often ends in a resort to stimulating drinks or drugs in order to produce artificially the mood which will not come of itself.

There is a good deal of curiosity among literary men in regard to the habits of each other. Men who find their work hard, their health poor and their production slow, are always curious concerning the habits of those who accomplish a great deal with apparent ease. Some men do all their writing in the morning. Some of them even rise before their households, and do half their day's work before breakfast. Others do not feel like going to work until after breakfast and after exercise in the open air. Some fancy that they can only work in the evening, and some of these must wait for their best hours until all but themselves are asleep. Some cannot use their brains at all immediately after exercise. Some smoke while writing, some write on the stimulus of coffee, and some on that of alcohol. Irregularity and strange whims are supposed to be characteristic of genius. Indeed it rather tells against the reputation of a man to be methodical in his habits of literary labor. Men of this stripe are supposed to be mechanical plodders, without wings, and without the necessity of an atmosphere in which to spread them.

We know of no better guide in the establishment of literary labor than common sense. After a good night's sleep and a refreshing breakfast a man ought to be in his best condition for work, and he is. All literary men who accomplish much and maintain their health do their work in the morning, and do it every morning. It is the daily task performed, morning after morning, throughout the year—carefully, conscientiously, persistently—that tells in great results. But in order to perform this task in this way there must be regular habits of sleep, with which nothing shall be permitted to interfere. The man who eats late suppers, attends parties and clubs, or dines out every night, cannot work in the morning. Such a man has, in fact, no time to work in the whole round of the hours. Late and irregular habits at night are fatal to literary production as a rule. The exceptional cases are those which have fatal results upon life in a few years.

One thing is certain—no great thing can be done in literary production without habit of some sort; and we believe that all writers who maintain their health work in the morning. The night work on our daily papers is killing work, and ought to be followed only a few years by any man. A man whose occupation is that of literary production ought always to engage in labor with a willing mind, and he can only do this by being accustomed to take it up at regular hours. We called upon a preacher the other day—one of the most eloquent and able men in the American pulpit. He was in his study, which was out of his house; and his wife simply had to say that there was no way by which she could get at him, even if she should wish to see him herself. He was wise. He had his regular hours of labor, which no person was permitted to interrupt. In the afternoon he could be seen; in the morning, never. A rule like this is absolutely necessary to every man who wishes to accomplish much. It is astonishing how much a man may accomplish with the habit of doing his utmost during three or four hours in the morning. He can do this every day, have his afternoons and evenings to himself, maintain the highest health, and live a life of generous length.

The reason why some men never feel like work in the morning is either that they have formed other habits or that they have spent the evening improperly. They have only to go to their work every morning, and do the best they can for a dozen mornings in succession to find that the disposition and power to work will come. It will cost a severe effort of the will, but it will pay. Then the satisfaction of the task performed will sweeten all the other hours. There is no darker or deadlier shadow than that cast upon a man by a deferred and waiting task. It haunts him, chases him, harries him, sprinkles bitterness in his every cup, plants thorns in his pillow, and renders him every hour more unfit for its performance. The difference between driving literary work and being driven by it is the difference between heaven and hell. It is the difference between working with the will and working against it. It is the difference between being a master and being a slave.

Good habit is a relief, too, from all temptation to the use of stimulants. By it a man's brain may become just as reliable a producer as his hand, and the cheerfulness and healthfulness which it will bring to the mind will show themselves in all the issues of the mind. The writings of those cotemporaneous geniuses, Scott and Byron, illustrate this point sufficiently. One is all robust health, the result of sound habit; the other all fever and irregularity. What could Poe not have done with Mr. Longfellow's habit? No; there is but one best way in which to do literary work, and that is the way in which any other work is done—after the period devoted to rest, and with the regularity of the sun.—Dr. F. G. Holland, in Scribner's Monthly.

IT IS A BLESSED CONSOLATION that there are a few writings, such as the Bible, Shakespeare and the Constitution, which men generally agree to comment upon and expound rather than criticise; and I have turned with a sense of infinite relief from the whole world of expression, and the whole universe of criticism, to the old colored woman who comes to our house on Mondays to help with the week's washing, because she is a picture of no school, a poem whose verses may not be scanned; because her unselfish, womanly life, and saintly presence and conversation have essential beauties and nobilities beyond the touch of art or the impertinence of Kames' Elements.—Scribner's Monthly.

---

CHRIST is prepared for us often to deal very treacherously, and to be often deceived by satan's lie that there is good in forbidden fruit; yes, he is prepared for all our foolishness. He turns to Peter and says: "Lovest thou me? feed them." He turns to the Father and says: "Lovest thou me? bless them." Oh! it is precious in this tempestuous world to wrap ourselves up in a sense of his unchangeable love, his inexhaustible grace.

---

THE wood of the Osage orange, says the Rural World, is highly valued in the South for carriage and wagon-building. Changes of weather are said not to affect it, and wheels made of it stand a great amount of wear and tear without needing repair, while other wheels require to have the tires shrunk once a year. The wood also yields a beautiful orange dye.

"AN EXCELLENCY?"

"Though there are different opinions among members of the Episcopal Church, it is still a unit. It is one of the excellencies of the church we so poorly represent that it permits great diversities of thought. A man may be a member of the Episcopal Church and think Presbyterianism the best form of church government. He may be a member of this church, yet prefer immersion, and not permit his children to be baptized in infancy. He may be a Calvinist or Arminian; he may agree with Ganssen about inspiration or with Coleridge."—Southern Churchman.

Certainly. Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ is the only requisite for membership in his church. A man may believe in transubstantiation, and still be a member of the Presbyterian Church. The church is the school of Christ, and it ought not to exclude the ignorant. This is not to be criticised. But a man may be a minister in the Episcopal Church, and still teach rationalism or Roman Catholicism or deism or atheism. This is the scandal. We have a great and sincere respect for the Episcopal Church; but we regard this as a great blot upon its character.

While riding near Louisville we noticed four stones in a field. Upon asking what it was, we were told that it was the foundation of an Episcopal church. After placing them in position the people could not agree whether it should be High or Low Church, and the work was abandoned. They were so divided that they could not co-operate in raising a wooden frame-house. Yet this is a "unity" which other denominations are exhorted to imitate. If the Low Church party had seceded from the Episcopal Church forty years ago it would now be one of the strongest bodies in our country, instead of being the weaker party in one of the smallest denominations in our land.—Christian Observer.

possessing a peculiar and thrilling quality of tone, most pipe-like in its nature, and which can be used in many passages with charming effect.

The above Stops are in every case separate, and additional sets of reeds, are entirely distinct from the "Tremolo," which always accompanies them, and which is never perfect without them, and can all be brought at will into the full organ, adding greatly to its power and richness of tone.

They take pleasure in announcing to the musical public and the trade the valuable addition to their Organs of a most beautiful Solo Stop,

THE ÆOLINE.

It is an additional set of reeds, exquisitely voiced and ingeniously arranged in a separate wind-chest (patented September 13, 1870.) Its quality of tone is the most delicate and soft imaginable. It is capable of the greatest variety of effects in combination with their other stops, the improved VOX HUMANA in particular. It has elicited the warmest encominms from all organists and musicians who have examined it. It is perfectly simple in its construction, and they predict for it the highest degree of success. Its charming effects, especially when used in connection with their improved styles of cases, can but be appreciated by every musician.

IMPROVED CASES, ETC.

By the construction of these Cases the quality of tone in their Instruments has been greatly improved, every facility for the comfort and convenience of the performer has been provided for, and the effect of their beautiful and graceful design is such as to entirely obviate the disagreeable boxy appearance which has been for so long a time an unpleasant characteristic of the Reed Organ.

In addition to the above improvements, attention is called to

THE MOTHER'S DECISION.

BY ELIZA S. TURNER.

If I had an engle's wings,
How grand to sail the sky!
But I should drop to the earth
If I heard my baby cry.
My baby, my darling,
The wings may go, for me.

If I were a splendid queen,
With a crown to keep in place,
Would it do for a little wet mouth
To rub all over my face?
My baby, my darling,
The crown may go, for me.

DISCOVERIES IN ROME.

The Rev. Walter Condict communicates to the Evangelist some of the interesting results which have been developed in the prosecution of the archæological excavations at Rome. These excavations originated in the enterprise of Napoleon the Third. Desiring to furnish all the original illustration he could to his Life of Julius Cæsar, he bought the Palatine Hill, and commenced digging for relics. After his overthrow at Sedan he sold out to the Italian government, who have continued the one good work he commenced, and have also opened excavations at the Forum.

A few weeks ago a marble was opened which throws some light on the disputed question whether the story that Romulus was the first King of Rome is a fact or a myth. It is ancient, and contains a list of the kings, with the name of Romulus on the head.

"Another most curious confirmation of the ancient historians is found in the discovery of a spring, well walled up, but flowing still in the center of the Forum. It lies a few feet below the pavement upon which the ancient Romans trod. Livy narrates that about the year three hundred of the city a gulf appeared in the Forum, which was filled with great difficulty. The fact that Livy attributes the occurrence to miraculous agencies led Niebuhr to discredit the whole story, and class it with the myths of the heroic ages. But here is an ancient spring, with evidences accompanying it of there once having been a marsh in that very place. This surely might have given way beneath some unusual load placed upon it, and have been the 'gulf' of which Livy speaks. But still more to the point is the fact that the masonry here indicated the very age mentioned by him. The result is that critics are inclined to restore Livy's account to the pages of history once more. * *

"In another part of the city the workmen have uncovered the pavement and walls of an ancient guard-house, occupied, it seems, by a portion of the fire brigade. Upon these walls are the rude scribblings of ambitious soldiers, who wrote their names, the number of their legion and the name of their commander. All these curious scratchings are so legible that any one can read them. * * * * *

"But most interesting of all are the excavations made beneath the Church of St. Clement. This church was said to be one of the most ancient in Rome, and tradition had it that it was built upon the very spot where once stood the house of the Clement named by Paul in the New Testament—hence its name. But as some doubt was thrown upon these statements by the fact that the church seemed to stand too high to be so old, that the debris of so many centuries ought to have left it now considerably beneath the general level, it was determined that excavations should be made. Going down from the pavement of the Sacristy, at a distance of fourteen feet the workmen came upon an ancient pavement, whose existence was never so much as suspected before. Then burrowing either way horizontally they found the standing pillars and walls of an ancient church, all record and memory of whose existence had been lost. The whole place is now cleared, and upon the walls the visitor sees the frescoes, still well preserved, and many of them of Bible subjects, beautifully executed. This, then, is the true ancient Church of St. Clement, of historic interest. It dates back to some time in the fourth century, and is a place no Christian can visit with other than feelings of deepest reverence."

In the rear of this church was found a walled-up door. When this was opened the well-preserved remains of a private house of the Augustine age were found. It is conjectured that this may have been Clement's house.

SCIENTIFIC.

A RAPID and economical method for the artificial production of ice has been brought to the attention of the Paris Academy of Science. The process consists in the evaporation of ether in a current of air, which passes on through a layer of coke or pumice-stone, constantly saturated with sulphuric acid. The vapors are condensed by the action of the machine itself, and the ether is afterward regained by distillation. The cost of running is chiefly for coal in the distilling process, and it is stated that one pound of coal is sufficient to produce twenty-five to thirty pounds of ice.

WHEN a shell is held up to the ear there is a peculiar vibratory noise. Philosophically investigated, the peculiar sound thus recognized is a phenomenon that very much perplexed learned gentlemen for a long while. The experiment is easily made by simply pressing a spiral shell, common in collections, over the cerebrum of either ear. If a large shell, the sound is very much like that of a far-off cataract. Now what causes it? Every muscle in the body is always in a state of tension. Some are more on the stretch than others, particularly those of the fingers. It is conceded that the vibration of the fibers of those in the fingers being communicated to the shell, it propagates and intensifies it, as the hollow body of a violin does the vibration of its strings, and thus the acoustic nerve receives the sonorous impressions. Muscles of the leg below the knee are said to vibrate in the same way, and if conducted to the ear produce the same result.

GLACIERS IN THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS.—It has been frequently said that there are no traces of glaciers in the Rocky mountains, and this position has been recently reaffirmed by Dr. J. W. Foster in the American Naturalist. But it is forcibly and, we think, conclusively combatted by Mr. Richard Bliss, Jr., a member of last year's Harvard expedition to Colorado, who refers to several terminal moraines on the west side of the range, under Gray's peak, and one on Clear creek (east side) near Fall river. The recognition of terminal moraines is a matter in which young geologists may be deceived; and this case on Clear creek must be somewhat obscure. We have passed the spot repeatedly without suspecting it. But on the other side of the range the conclusive evidence of glacial polishing and furrowing is not wanting. Mr. Bliss mentions the canon of the upper South Platte, near Montgomery, a small mining town in Park county, in which he found these indications unmistakable and abundant. Their absence on the other flank may be accounted for by the exceeding friability and ready decomposition under atmospheric exposure of the granites and syenites first encountered in entering the Rocky mountains from the east.

NICOTINE IN TOBACCO-SMOKE.—In the last number of the Centralblatt (October 5) Dr. Emile Heubel, of Kiew, a somewhat noted university in Russian Poland, gives a pretty full account of researches which he had carried on with regard to the presence of nicotine in tobacco-smoke, summing up his conclusions thus: 1. Nicotine is, without doubt, contained in tobacco smoke, and its presence can be proved as well by chemical analysis as by physiological experiment. 2. During slow combustion the nicotine is to be constantly found in the smoke, a quantity of the alkaloid, varying as the tobacco is or is not rich in nicotine, passing over in the smoke. 3. This nicotine exists in tobacco-smoke, for the most part at all events, as a salt of the alkaloid. 4. The fact that nicotine, in spite of its considerable volatility and easy solubility is, during the process of smoking, by no means entirely, or even for the most part, dissipated or dissolved, appears to have its solution in the circumstance that in tobacco-smoke, as well as in tobacco-leaves, the nicotine exists not as a free alkaloid, but as a staple salt of nicotine. 5. In the working of tobacco-smoke, both upon the human and brute organisms, an essential share in the effect is taken by the nicotine ingredient of the smoke. In the course of his preliminary remarks Dr. Heubel records a striking experiment thus: "That a relatively large quantity of nicotine passes over in tobacco-smoke seems to be supported by the following observation which I once made—that the smoke, only partially collected and condensed, derived from the combustion of but a single cigar, and from which, after condensation, only from six to eight drops of distillate were derived, was amply sufficient to produce in a large frog the most violent nicotine convulsions, general paralysis and death."—London Lancet.

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

Cure for Virulent Smallpox, or Scarlatina and Measles.

A merchant and ship-owner of this city has had the following sent him from England, where it was furnished by Mr. L. Larkin, member of the Royal College of Surgeons, and who vouches for it as a "medicine that will effect a revolution in the healing art as regards the prevention and cure not only of smallpox, but also of measles and scarlatina, however malignant the type, in a manner more efficient and extraordinary than could ever have been hitherto anticipated even by the most ardent philanthropist.

"On the first appearance of fever or irritation ushering in attacks, whether occurring in families or large communities, the subjoined mode of treatment should at once be entered on: Take one grain of powdered foxglove or digitalis (valuable in the ratio of its greenness—the dark should be rejected,) and one of sulphate of zinc (this article is commonly known as white vitriol.) These should be rubbed thoroughly in a mortar or other convenient vessel, with four or five drops of water; this done, a noggin (or about four ounces) more, with some sirup or sugar, should be added. Of this mixture a tablespoonful should be given an adult, and two teaspoonfuls to a child, every second hour, until symptoms of disease vanish.

"Thus conducted, convalescence, as if by magic, will result. The rapidity of an event so auspicious will equally delight and astonish. It may, however, be necessary further to note, that should the bowels become obstructed in progress of the disease, an evil by no means common, then a drachm to the compound powder of jalap (formed of two parts cream of tartar with one of jalap) and one grain of the herb, treated as above, formed into a pastil with sirup or sugar, should be given to an adult, and half the quantity to a child. This simple medicine shuts out every other form or article whatever, as totally unnecessary, if not pernicious.

EVERYTHING that enters Paris has to pay octroi duty. For many weeks an elegantly-attired gentleman drove a well-appointed dog-cart from the outskirts to the city, being attended every evening by a neat-looking groom. One night the dog-cart was upset in the presence of the gens-d'armes, who, on going to the rescue, noticed that the groom had not moved from his seat. "Come," said one of the men. The groom preserved a dignified silence. "Come down," cried they, angrily; "don't you see your master is hurt? Are you drunk or stupid?" The groom preserved his English sang froid; and the employes, giving him a shake, discovered, to their unutterable astonishment, that he was made of zinc, and contained one hundred and fifty liters of cognac!

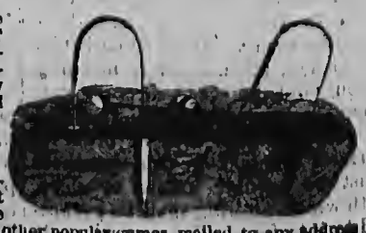
BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.



WE DESIRE TO CALL THE ATTENTION of our friends and the public generally to our large and well-assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, March 6.—The conference report on the postoffice appropriation bill retained the clause inserted by the Senate, excluding absolutely from the mails all free matter after the thirtieth of June, 1873. This, of course, cuts off all free newspaper exchanges and all free mail delivery of country newspapers.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—The Senate has ratified the treaty with Mexico for the continuation of the Mexican mixed commission for the adjustment of claims. The action of the Mexican government is yet required.

The following nominations were made to-day: S. B. Packard, as marshal of Louisiana; A. G. Malloy, marshal of the western district of Texas; A. M. Hughes, United States district attorney for middle Tennessee, and John M. G. Parker, as surveyor of customs at New Orleans.

Messrs. Aldis, Howell and Ferris have been reappointed Southern claims commissioners.

Senate.—Mr. Newman has been reappointed chaplain to the Senate.

Mr. Spencer was to-day sworn in as senator from Alabama.

Mr. West presented the credentials of Mr. McMillen, elected senator by the McEnery Legislature. Ordered printed.

WASHINGTON, March 8.—There is now little interest taken in Louisiana matters, and really no prospect of any action except that which the administration may see fit to take in support of the Kellogg government. The issue is dead until the next meeting of Congress. The question was up in caucus upon the credentials of Gen. McMillen and Pinchback, but as the subject would cause interminable debate, and could have no effect upon the general interests of the State, it was, by general consent, waived. Neither McMillen nor Pinchback will be seated during the present extra session.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 10.—Advices from the seat of war indicate that Captain Jack has yielded, and that the Modoc war is over.

NEW YORK, March 11.—The Samana Bay Company to-day invested General Richard Taylor, of Louisiana, with the title of commissioner, and appointed Captain Samuel vice president, to act as medium between the board of directors and the government.

The steamer Tybee, recently purchased by the company for $57,000, will sail to-morrow with supplies.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—General McMillen furnishes the following view of the situation: "The real meaning of the decision reached in the caucus of the Republican senators, on Saturday, is that neither at this nor at any future session of the Senate will Pinchback be admitted to a seat. The Republican senators refuse to recognize the Kellogg government as legally organized, and, although it has the armed support of the President, they cannot recognize it.

"It is generally understood that unless some arrangement, satisfactory to the people of Louisiana, is made before Congress meets in December, that then some action will be taken to establish a regular and legal government in that State.

"Pinchback is very indignant at the refusal of the Republicans to admit him, and at a meeting of negroes last night, in behalf of free Cuba, he ventilated his grievances in a manner altogether his own. The Durell-Kellogg usurpation will never receive the indorsement of the Senate."

FOREIGN.

LONDON, March 6.—There is a rumor afloat that the Marquis of Lorne and Princess Louise have separated, because of incompatibility of temper. The princess is in a religious retreat near Windsor, and the marquis has gone abroad. There is no authority given for the report, and it remains to be confirmed.

President Thiers has recognized the belligerent rights of the Carlists in Spain.

The impression grows in London that Don Carlos will succeed. There are rumors that the Carlist leaders intend to raise a loan.

LONDON, March 7.—Viscount Ossington, John Evelyn Denison, died last night, in the seventy-third year of his age. He was a member of Parliament almost continuously from 1823 to 1872, and was speaker of the House of Commons from 1857 to the year of his retirement.

PARIS, March 7.—The government has up to this date paid to Germany 3,500,000,000 francs on account of the war indemnity.

TURIN, March 9.—The ex-King of Spain arrived in this city yesterday, and was welcomed with extraordinary enthusiasm by the people.

BERLIN, March 10.—Prince Bismarck made a powerful speech today in the Upper House of the Prussian Diet, in support of a bill limiting the powers of the Roman Catholic clergy.

Queen Pauline, mother of the King of Wirtemberg, died to-day, aged seventy-three years.

HIT AT HIS PROFANITY.—Mrs. G.—"I really must give cook warning, Charles. She does use such very bad words!"

Mr. G.—"Really, dear! What sort of words are they?"

Mrs. G.—"O—well—the same as you use!"

War in New Orleans.

We clip from the Picayune an account of events which occurred in the city on the fifth and sixth instant:

All day yesterday the police were kept in readiness, and about half-past six o'clock all the night and day men were ordered to their stations.

General Badger, chief of the metropolitan police, had at his headquarters about fifty men, who were armed with Winchester rifles. About half-past eight o'clock information was received that the citizens were assembling on the streets for the purpose of attacking the third precinct (Jackson Square) station.

During the evening information was received from the fifth and seventh precincts that bodies of police, on their way to the Carondelet street armory, had been stopped by citizens and disarmed.

About nine o'clock information was received that a body of citizens, numbering nearly three hundred, armed with shot-guns, tongs, broomsticks and various weapons, had appeared in front of the third precinct station.

About the same time General Longstreet ordered General Badger to advance on the citizens with his police, and disperse them at all hazards. He accordingly went to the Carondelet street armory and detailed one hundred men, and, with one twelve-pound Napoleon gun, marched down Chartres street, where the collision with the citizens occurred.

At twenty-five minutes past ten he received the following dispatch:

"Superintendent's Office and State House:

"I have arrived with my gun and detachment. I dispersed the mob with canister. All quiet.

"A. S. BADGER,
"Chief of Police."

THE MILITARY.

Of the three companies of United States infantry out last night, one took possession of the armory on Carondelet street, one quartered in the City Hall and the third returned to their quarters. The cavalry retired to the barracks at one A. M.

GEN. SHERMAN'S DISPATCH.

General Emory, at about nine o'clock last night, received the following dispatch:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., March 5, 1873.

"Colonel D. H. Emory, Commanding Department of the Gulf:

"The President directs you to prevent any violent interference with the State government of Louisiana. Acknowledge receipt.

"W. T. SHERMAN."

At one o'clock this morning General Badger, with about two hundred police and two twelve-pound Napoleon guns, started up to Jefferson city, and after a little skirmish captured the market-house, with six prisoners.

About ten shots were fired by the citizens and fifty by the police, in which Kendrick Chandler and Ernest Livaudais were shot and wounded, the former through the stomach fatally, and the latter severely in the arm.

The police arrived about a quarter to two o'clock, and, advancing on the station, ordered a surrender, which, as there were only about eighteen men in the place, was done. While the police were advancing, and before this demand was made, it was stated, the shooting took place.

The prisoners, consisting of two old men and four boys, were placed under guard, while the wounded were conveyed to a drug store opposite. They were here examined by Dr. Chaplain, and Kendrick Chandler's wound pronounced fatal. He said, on being questioned, that he was shot after he had surrendered, and when totally unarmed.

Earlier in the evening, it is said, there were about twenty-five or thirty men on duty, but the greater portion had left before the arrival of General Badger and the metropolitan police.

The cannon were placed in front of the market-house, facing the street, while the police were stationed in the building.

No attack, however, was apprehended from the citizens, and at half-past three o'clock all was quiet everywhere throughout the city.

At fifteen minutes past eleven o'clock, on Thursday, March 6, 1873, about one hundred metropolitan police, armed with Winchester rifles, took possession of the hall of the House of Representatives, the Senate chamber, the office of Governor McEnery, and all the State offices located at Odd Fellows' Hall.

The police immediately placed under arrest Representatives M. J. Foster and Octave Havson, and Senators Alf. Voorhies and A. Leonard, and J. C. Moncure, speaker of the House, marching them over to the first precinct station, where they were locked up in the drunkards' cells, the only statement on the books being by order of General Longstreet.

The gentlemen arrested, after remaining in confinement for some little time, were all finally released on the order of Kellogg.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GOV. M'ENERY AND GEN. EMORY.

"EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
"New Orleans, March 6, 1873.

"Major General Emory, Commanding Department of the Gulf:

"General—I have the honor to submit to you the inquiry whether or not the action of the metropolitan police force of this city, in the seizure of the Odd Fellows' Hall this morning, and the armed prevention by said force of the assembly of the Legislature of this State in said hall, meets with your countenance and approval, and whether or not the United States forces under your command will support this armed occupation of that building.

"I have the honor, general, to remain your obedient servant,

"JOHN MCENERY,
"Governor of Louisiana."

"HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF GULF,
"New Orleans, La., March 6, 1873.

"Hon. John McEnery:

"Sir—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your communication of this date, in which you ask 'whether or not the action of the metropolitan police force of this city, in the seizure of the Odd Fellows' Hall this morning, and the armed prevention by said force of the assembly of the Legislature of this State in said hall, meets with your countenance and approval, and whether or not the United States forces under your command will support this armed occupation of that building.'

"In reply I have to state that the seizure of the said building by the metropolitan police was without my knowledge, and made without conference with me.

"In regard to any expression of opinion as to the act, having no authority in the premises, I must respectfully decline to make any reply.

"In answer to that part of your letter which asks whether my command 'will support this armed occupation of that building,' I have the honor to inclose to you a copy of a telegram received last night, from which you will see that it is made my duty 'to prevent any violent interference with the State government of Louisiana.'

"Previous instructions have directed me to recognize the government of the State of Louisiana to be that represented by the Hon. William P. Kellogg.

"If the act referred to by you in your letter is the act of Governor Kellogg, and of the government of the State of Louisiana represented by him, and any violence is used to interfere with this act, I shall most assuredly consider it my duty, under my instructions, to use the whole force of the United States at my disposal to prevent such 'violent interference.'

"I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"W. H. EMORY,
"Col. Com'g, Brev. Maj. Gen."

The Ninth Census.—Our Women.

It is commonly supposed that there are more females than males in a given population, and such is the case in most, if not all, the European countries; but it will doubtless please the spinster sort here to learn that in the United States we have more men than women. The men number 19,493,565 and the women 19,064,806, showing an excess of men of 428,759—a difference produced by the foreign immigration, which brings far more men than women to our shores. Of these men, 7,570,478 are between the ages of 18 and 45, or fit to bear arms, while 8,425,941 are 21 and upward, or entitled to vote. The natives fit to bear arms are over 5,697,085, the foreign 1,873,402; the natives 21 years of age and upward are 6,896,623, and the foreign 2,542,583. All our people are pretty well occupied in gainful labors, but not so numerously as they should be, while there is an enormous discrepancy between the occupied men and women, which it seems to us ought not to be. Of the 28,000,000 over 10 years of age, 12,000,000 only are reported at work, but more than 10,000,000 of these are men, and only 2,000,000 women. Clearly, there ought to be a larger provision for the industry of the women, who are able and willing to work, and need work, but who are crowded out of appropriate branches of industry by lazy and lubberly fellows who might be doing much better for themselves and their country in other places. There are some employments to which women are not at all adapted physically, such as those of the hunter, trapper, miner, sailor, mechanic and many others, which the men have rightly all to themselves; there are others, such as teaching, domestic service and boarding-house keeping, which they divide quite equally with men; but there are others again, like clerkships in offices and shops, and the lighter professional and mechanical occupations, in which they do not have a fair share. Of the 14,000 posts under government, for example, they get but 600; while of the 250,000 clerkships in stores, in telegraph, insurance and other offices they get less than a beggarly 7,000; though there are uses to which they are pre-eminently fitted. These tables, by the way, giving the special occupations of the sexes in detail, are among the most valuable in the volume.—New York Post.

PECULIAR PEOPLE.—People who like bagpipes. People who dislike oysters. People who have no poor relations. People who dye their hair. People who like getting up early in the morning. People who have more money than they know what to do with. People who give donations to street beggars and organ-grinders. People who take long walks before breakfast. People who light and leave off fires on fixed days. People who like paying income tax. People who give large parties in small rooms. People who have the ice broken to enable them to bathe in winter. People who keep all their old letters. People without prejudices, weaknesses, antipathies, hobbies, crotchets or favorite theories. People who have nothing the matter with their digestion, and can eat anything. People who take snuff. People who hold their tongues.

Our Claim at Washington.

The readers of the Advocate are aware that a petition has been presented to both houses of Congress for indemnity for the use of the Southern Methodist Publishing House during the war, and damages to the house by the Federal army during their occupancy. The management of this claim has been committed by the Book Committee to Rev. Richard Abbey, who is familiar with all the facts connected with it, having had charge of the house at the time it was taken by the government.

Mr. Abbey entered upon his duties immediately after his appointment by the Book Committee, and from that time has given this subject his closest attention. A letter from our attorney, Judge Wilson, as well as letters from Bro. Abbey, and information from other sources, induce us to believe that Congress, at an early day, will adjust this claim with equity to our church, and with honor to the government. The following letter from Bro. Abbey will be read with interest.

A. H. REDFORD, Agent.

"WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 12, 1873.

"Rev. A. H. Redford, D. D., Agent, etc.:

"Dear Brother—The general business before Congress is so intensely absorbing, and the present session is so near its close, that I think I shall leave here in a few days. And before I do so, I suppose it may be expected of me to give you a kind of summing up of what has been done, and what has not been done, respecting the Publishing House claim against the United States.

"This is the third time I have been here since you first placed this business in my charge, in August last. I have not been out of the city since last November; and in that time, I may be permitted to say, your interests here have been carefully watched. Last September I employed the Hon. John Wilson, late third auditor of the Treasury, to act as our counsel—a good selection, I think. Under his direction the claim was presented to both houses of Congress on the first day of the present session, and referred to the appropriate committees. At the first I was told by a number of well-informed gentlemen that it was next to impossible to get a report and action at the present session, owing to the lateness of our appearance, and the very heavy accumulation of such business before the committees. Our hope of getting early attention, either in this Congress or the next, rests upon the peculiarity of the claim, it being a public charity, with no individual interests, but its real beneficiaries being semi-national, and numbering millions now living and millions unborn.

"Being unaccustomed to such matters, I was not long in learning that the business had more magnitude, and required more care and attention, than I had supposed; but on every hand I was well encouraged as to final results. The popular character of the claim commends it to favorable notice. Beside official and frequent intercourse with the two committees, I have had conversations with, I suppose, fifty leading prominent members of Congress, from all parts of the Union, and, almost without exception, they have been very gratifying and satisfactory. Some of the best friends I have met with are from the more distant North, East and West. And while I cannot say we have met no opposition at all, it is proper that I say I have heard of none that does not seem easily to remove on explanation. Though in one or two instances opposition has been expressed, yet I do not know of a member of Congress who is likely to oppose us finally. So far we have met no serious obstacle in either of the committee rooms. Of course neither house of Congress has, as yet, any knowledge of the claim beyond the mere fact of its existence.

"The claim, according to a fair construction of the laws of Congress, made not by ourselves, but to be estimated from the testimony, by the appropriate committee, is larger than many have supposed, while it possesses some peculiarities found perhaps in no other. Its final adjustment will require time, labor and expense, but I think we may look for a fair, reasonable settlement at no very distant day.

"Several bills and amendments are before Congress looking to an enlargement of the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims. Some of these may be acted upon the present session, which may give us access to that court, if it shall be deemed desirable.

"I will ask Judge Wilson to write you himself on the subject. Yours, very truly, R. ABBEY."

Nashville Christian Advocate.

ACCORDING to the census of 1870 the total number of schools in the United States was 141,629; the number of teachers, 221,402, of whom 93,329 were males and 127,713 females. The total number of pupils was 7,209,938—3,621,996 being male and 3,587,942 female. The total income of all the schools was $95,404,726, of which $3,663,785 came from endowments, $61,746,039 from taxation, and $29,992,902 from all other sources, including tuition. The total income reported is nearly three times that for 1860, and nearly six times that for 1850. It is considered quite impossible that there should have been any such increase; and the apparent augmentation is, without doubt, referable to a failure on the part of the former census officials to secure complete returns.

NO STEP well prayed over will bring ultimate regret.

Rome and the Jesuits.

We recently made reference in our book notices to Dr. Dollinger's Lectures on the Reunion of the Churches, published by Dodd & Mead, in this city. It is a book whose statements dwell in one's mind. The article on "Conscience and the Vatican," in the last number of the Mercersburg Review, recalls one of the most striking features of the book, namely, the charges it makes against the Jesuits. They, who have watched Dr. Dollinger's course for some years back have been struck with the change in his attitude toward both Protestantism and the papacy. In this book it is very clearly marked, and it shows itself in the deep indignation which he feels toward this society which has captured the Pope.

When we take into account the position and eminent learning of Dr. Dollinger, his life-long connection with the Romish Church, his intimate acquaintance with history, and his evident candor, we cannot but feel that these lectures make up one of the heaviest indictments ever made against the Jesuits. And this view is emphasized by the consideration that the lecturer's desire is to make as little as possible of the differences between the various branches of the church. He is hopeful; he almost believes that union can be effected, but never with the Jesuits—"the old, well-proved and implacable enemies of ecclesiastical union, the men to whom any union, which is not an unconditional surrender, is an abomination." Nor is this charge the mere partisan rhetoric of one who declaims in a passion. He cites the cases which prove his point. He does not, of course, enter into a detailed account of all their evil influence; no book would hold that. But he refers to Poland, where all their work was "the work of force and intrigue, dictated by motives of policy and ambition," "conducted by the Jesuits with their brutal tyranny." It led "to the aggrandizement of Russia and the downfall of Poland." The pre-eminent principle of the Jesuits, that "authority must remain inviolate," "made the papacy hostile to all reform." Of their evil reputation he says:

"No blessing rests on their undertakings. They build with unwearied assiduity, but a storm comes and shatters the building, or a flood breaks in and washes it away, or the worm-eaten edifice falls to pieces in their hands. The oriental proverb about the Turks may be applied to them: 'Where the Turk sets his foot grass never grows.'"

Then follows a brief outline of their work in Paraguay, Japan, North America and Abyssinia, the Levant, the Greek Islands, Persia, the Crimea and Egypt, and he says:

"Above all has the Society of Jesus devoted its best services to its native home of Spain. Themselves children of the Spanish race, and inheritors of the Spanish character for sixty years, they displayed their Spanish feeling throughout Europe; they labored for the spread and consolidation of the universal monarchy of Spain. The result was the bankruptcy and depopulation of that once powerful kingdom, and its loss of one possession after another, so that by the end of the seventeenth century, to cite the language of a Spanish writer, it had become an inanimate corpse, the skeleton of a giant. Well might a Spanish diplomatist in Rome say, at the time of the suppression of the order: 'The Jesuits are the wormwood that gnaws on our bowels.'

"They it was who brought on the German nation the Thirty Years' War and its results, and to them Catholic Germany owes the decline of its schools and its consequent backwardness in cultivation, and its long intellectual sterility."

They destroyed the German empire (and it seems but just retribution that on its re-establishment they should be rendered powerless.) They have made Austria what it has been, destroyed Bohemia, secured English hatred toward Catholics, ruined the Swedish and Portuguese kings, brought on the French revolution; and so, wherever they have been permitted to work, they have wrought damage. And what is, on some accounts, still more noteworthy, Dr. Dollinger condemns many of the Popes themselves, in the same round terms, and with the same show of historical evidence—condemns them for blindness, obstinacy, foolishness and crime. And yet, what is this development of character but the logical outcome of the spirit which has dwelt in the Romish hierarchy for these hundreds of years. The spirit which puts the church first must reach this result if it be carried out. There is in this history evidence of the truth of at least part of Coleridge's aphorism: "He who begins by loving Christianity better than truth will proceed by loving his own sect or church better than Christianity, and end in loving himself better than all." And it is evident, even from these lectures, that now Romanism is Jesuitism; and the fearful effect of Jesuit control upon the church on which it has fastened reminds us of that dreadful scene in the twenty-fifth canto of the Inferno, where Donati, transformed into a hideous monster, seizes on Brunelleschi:

"This horrible reptile
Upon the other's limbs entwined his own.
Then they stuck close, as if of heated wax
They had been made, and intermixed their color, Nor one nor other seemed now what it was."

So this hideous creation of a fanatic's brain has fastened on that which claimed to be the body of Christ, and now he who sees Rome sees Jesuitism; he who sees the Jesuits sees Romo.—Christian Intelligencer.

Shampooing the Roumi.

Let no tourist, experienced only in the effeminate imitations of the hummam, or Moorish bath, to be found in New York or London, expect similar considerate treatment in Algeria. He will be more likely to receive the attention of the M'zabite bather after the fashion narrated in the following paragraph, which is a quotation from an English journalist in the land of the Kabyles:

"We were told to sit down upon a marble seat in the middle of the hall, which we had no sooner done than we became sensible of a great increase of heat; after this each of us was taken into a closet of milder temperature, where, after placing a white cloth on the floor and taking off our napkins, they laid us down, leaving us to the further operations of two naked, robust negroes. These men, newly brought from the interior of Africa, were ignorant of Arabic; so I could not tell them in what way I wished to be treated, and they handled me as roughly as if I had been a Moor inured to hardship. Kneeling with one knee upon the ground, each took me by a leg and began rubbing the soles of my feet with a pumice stone. After this operation on my feet, they put their hands into a small bag and rubbed me all over with it as hard as they could. The distortions of my countenance must have told them what I endured, but they rubbed on, smiling at each other, and sometimes giving me an encouraging look, indicating by their gestures the good it would do me. While they were thus currying me they almost drowned me by throwing warm water upon me with large silver vessels, which were in the bath under a cock fastened in the wall. When this was over they raised me up, putting my head under the cock, by which means the water flowed all over my body; and, as if this was not sufficient, my attendants continued plying their vessels. Then, having dried me with very fine napkins, they each of them very respectfully kissed my hand. I considered this as a sign that my torment was over, and was going to dress myself, when one of the negroes, grimly smiling, stopped me till the other returned with a kind of earth, which they began to rub all over my body without consulting my inclination. I was as much surprised to see it take off all the hair as I was pained in the operation; for this earth is so quick in its effect that it burns the skin if left upon the body. This being finished, I went through a second ablution, after which one of them seized me behind by the shoulders, and, setting his two knees against the lower part of my back, made my bones crack, so that for a time I thought they were entirely dislocated. Nor was this all, for after whirling me about like a top to the right and left, he delivered me to his comrade, who used me in the same manner; and then, to my no small satisfaction, opened the closet-door."

This is the true Moorish bath. Meantime the M'zabite or negro, as he dislocates your legs, cracks your spinal column or dances over you on his knees, drones forth a kind of native psalmody, which, melting into the steamy atmosphere of the place, seems to be the litany of happiness and of the pure in heart. Clean in body and soul as you never were before, skinned, depilated, dissected, you emerge for a new life of ideal perfection, feeling as if you were suddenly relieved of your body.—The Roumi in Kabylia, in Lippincott's Magazine.

THE INTELLECTUAL ASPECT OF MARRIAGE.—Mr. Philip Gilbert Hamerton writes of marriage in its intellectual aspect, for Scribner's Monthly. He contends that only two courses are open for an intellectual man. He says he should marry either some simple, dutiful woman who will "see to the household matters, and love him in a trustful spirit, without jealousy of his occupations; or else, on the other hand, he ought to marry some highly intelligent lady, able to carry her education far beyond school experiences, and willing to become his companion in the arduous paths of intellectual labor." A distinguished artist once told Mr. Hamerton he preferred marrying an entirely ignorant and simple person, who would not be likely to interfere with him in any way. Literary men, however, according to the writer, require some equality of companionship; but the want of thoroughness and reality in the education of women is not especially favorable to this. Mr. Hamerton thinks the history of many marriages which have failed to realize intellectual companionship is comprised in a sentence which was actually uttered by one of the most accomplished of his friends: "She knew nothing when I married her; I tried to teach her something—it made her angry—and I gave it up." The worst that can be said of this is that it is painfully true. But there is another side of the picture. Who shall a cultivated, intellectual, literary woman marry? And when such an one "comes to herself" after marriage, and finds herself linked to a stupid whose tastes are low, and whose manners and morals need considerable emendations, what is she to do about it? And moreover, if literary people do happen to marry those of their own class, must they quarrel simply because there are a number of noted precedents for that painful practice?—Golden Age.

THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 1873.

FOR THE NEW YEAR.

Another year! another year!
Has borne its record to the skies
Another year! another year
Untried, unproved, before us lies
We hail with smiles its dawn so fair
How shall we meet its final day

Another year! another year!
Its squandered hours will meet us there
Oh! many a heart must quail with fear,
O'er memory's blotted page to gaze
No record from that leaf will fade
Not one vestige may be made.

Another year! another year!
How many a grief has marked its flight!
Some whom we love, no more are here—
Translated to the realms of light.
Ah! now can bless the coming year
Like those no more to greet us here.

Another year! another year!
Oh! many a blessing, too, was given
Our lives to deck, our hearts to cheer,
And antedate the joys of heaven.
But they, too, slumber with the past,
Where joys and griefs must sink at last.

Another year! another year!
Grant we no linger on the past,
Nor let us shrink, with faithless fear,
From the dark shade the future casts.
The past, the future—what are they
To those whose lives may end to-day?

Another year! another year!
Perchance the last of life below;
Who ere he close Death's call may hear,
None but the Lord of life can know.
Oh! to be found, whene'er that day
May come, prepared to pass away.

Another year! another year!
Helpless earth's thorny paths to tread;
So may each moment bring us near
To thee, ere yet our lives are fled.
Savior! we yield ourselves to thee,—
For time and for eternity.

Foreign and Home Missions.

MR. EDITOR: I would not disparage the attempt or depreciate the results of foreign missions. They are both good; and the men who can sacrifice their American citizenship and their social relations by throwing themselves upon the mercy of the feelingless, shrewd, calculating Chinese, or the swift, impulsive Japanese, or the thick-headed, savage Hottentot, deserve the highest praise from man and noble recompense from God. The church, as it does but imperfectly, should sustain them with all the necessities for comfort, by which their many other deprivations, if possible, might be counterbalanced.

The results of foreign missions have been many and important. The merchant or trader may attribute to himself the opening of Eastern ports to the influx of Western trade and thought, but the true history of these changes, as it has been developed for the last two or three centuries, finds its beginning in the introduction and preaching of the Christian creed in the East. Undoubtedly this is the case. The Japanese embassy, having come hither for the express purpose of studying the local enterprises, inventions, and in particular the school systems of America, I attribute to the same cause. I am not sectarian enough to give Methodist, Presbyterian or any Protestant mission the sole honor of effecting this remarkable event, but I had as lief include the workings of those pioneering fathers of the Catholic Church whose lives were first offered as fit sacrifices for every advance into the solid phalanx of infidelity and barbaric persecution. Blood has marked every step, and those priests were the first who suffered. Now the scene is changed. The law secures the safety of missions, and they are free to proclaim Christ's religion throughout the domains of the Eastern countries. Wonderful as most events of religious history in the East, is the fact that universities for the education of the children of missionaries and the proselytes to the Christian faith are being now built. Large sums are contributed, and societies formed, the operations of which will be remarkable. Desirable localities have been found in the Himalaya regions, and some have been purchased for the purpose of school-building, and others are in prospectu. Now, while attention is turned to foreign missions, the tendency seems to be to overlook home missions. We say we are doing very well at home. We have preaching every Sunday, prayer meeting during the week, and what more could we desire? Then our large Christian hearts turn to the pagan, and we say: Send missionaries there.

Some portions of the South are more highly favored than others. Now, while New Orleans can boast of its weekly services, there are hundreds of churches in the country which are visited by ministers but once a month. The people in these localities, deprived of preaching, are not only behind in social life, but in spiritual life. They need spiritual food, that their social life may be elevated.

I have just come from a section of country away out in the cold, mountainous districts of Tennessee—wild, rugged, sublime mountains, whose awful heights lose themselves in the heavens, and whose grim visage speaks of power and heaving. The people partake of the nature of the country—rough but kind, ignorant and simple, irreligious and superstitious. Here they are for hundreds of miles covering the valleys and laboring on the rocky roadsides of these mountains. A few shoats, a few old log-mud cabins used for churches; preaching once in four or six weeks; the ministry, as a general thing, as ignorant as the people. You find a dozen men unable to read intelligently where one is more fortunate. Hundreds can neither read nor write their names. They say: "What's the use to go to church? We can't learn anything from that old fellow. He don't know any more than we do." And in this way generation after generation come and go, knowing nothing save a few practical lessons of common life, early learned, but absolutely destitute of that knowledge calculated to develop and elevate their intellectual and spiritual man. This is the place for missionaries. This is the place for the church to send its missionary fund, to build churches and Sabbath schools and day schools for the education of the present and growing generations. It is well enough to go to China, but if by going to China we neglect parts of our own country, and leave them really in a worse condition than China, we are acting at least unwisely.

We need not go to China to contend with the intellect and genius of that people. They are here in our midst. They fill our Western ports. They erect their own pagodas, and continue the superstitious customs of burying their dead in their own country. Let missionaries who design going to the East take a trip to California, and give the infidels in that State and in the other Western States the battle that these barbarians are trying to wage on civilization. They want deeds, not words. They point to sections of our country and derisively ask: "How does your Christianity tolerate such ignorance, such deplorable backwardness among your own color, in your own nation?" And it is an argument against us.

Listen to what a learned divine, writing to the Advance, says:

"We in California need not go to the distant lands nor to historical ages to witness the approaches of Christianity against a huge heathenism and the beginnings of its overthrow. The dark, compact, massive, hoary paganism of China juts over, like a bold promontory, upon the sunny land of California. We see the cues, ceremonies, processions, priests, joss-houses, hear the snappings, sputterings, drummings and pipings. The superstitions of three thousand years and three hundred million of people, and the pride of the Chinese empire are back of the promontory. And here is Christianity advancing to meet it, and beginning to penetrate it in the person of a few representatives, in themselves feeble and no match for such an undertaking, but with a divine commission and helped by divine energy, bringing the improved methods and facilities of the nineteenth century. It is the beginning of a great conflict at our doors between two civilizations, two kingdoms, two destinies. Two systems are struggling for the Chinese empire, before our faces, each desirous of having the handling of its fortunes and its souls. The conflict is not yet carried on on a large scale, but the moral principles involved are none the less grand on that account."

The conflict is not, or rather will not be, as man against man, but one Christian against thousands of heathen—a few thousand against three hundred million. The church must do what civil power cannot or will not do. The great and glorious work of teaching and elevating the thousands that populate the mountain fastnesses and extensive, wide-sweeping prairies, shrouded in ignorance and superstition, devolves upon the church, and these are the missionary fields. It is only by preparing our own armies that we can expect to be victors. If we are idle we forfeit the assistance of God. The church should be alive to these issues.

Church Finances.

MR. EDITOR: The question of church finances is an old one, and so trite that, were its discussion not indispensable to the welfare of the church, we should be inexcusable for mentioning it in your columns. To place the church on a self-supporting basis financially has been the object of thousands of her most thoughtful and devout sons for many years past.

It was highly interesting to witness the discussion of questions pertaining to this subject in a recent District Conference. Brethren in the ministry held that the gospel was not supported because the people had never been properly instructed on the subject. It was held that the people had never been properly taught from the pulpit the duty of paying the preacher for his services, and of holding their entire property subject to the demands of Heaven upon it.

On the other hand, it was stated by a steward of wisdom, experience and success that whenever a preacher had gone forward in the faithful discharge of his duty, saying nothing about money, he had found no difficulty in collecting money for that preacher's salary; but if a preacher said much about money, the outside world and many in the church would set him down as preaching for nothing but money. For such a preacher's salary it was very difficult to collect anything.

Now, sir, it appears that both these positions are right, though they seem contradictory. The people must be taught to support the gospel; they must be taught this duty from the word of God; yet a preacher should never urge a congregation to the payment of money of which he is to be the recipient. It may be stated as an axiom that no minister of the gospel can directly urge a congregation to the payment of his own salary without being suspected by many persons of such mercenary motives as are inconsistent, in their estimation, with a sincere desire for the salvation of souls.

The preacher who enforces the duty of giving or paying money should never be the recipient of that money. What, then, is to be done? The people need to be taught the duty of supporting the ministry, yet the ministry must not undertake to teach them that duty.

According to the economy of our church the duty of collecting money for the support of the gospel is assigned to officers called stewards. They may not only collect money publicly or privately, but it is made their duty, in case of deficiency of funds, to "write circular letters to the societies to be more liberal." But may they not go further? Would there be any impropriety in a steward, who is supposed to be a man of "solid piety," making a public appeal to a congregation to pay their church-dues, and enforcing that appeal by all the arguments which the Scriptures supply? Why should not stewards preach the gospel of finance?

The progressive development of the kingdom of God among men unquestionably tends to a realization of Moses' prayer, when Joshua besought him to forbid Eldad and Medad, who were prophesying outside the tabernacle: "Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets." The preacher may first instruct the stewards, as Paul did Timothy, if he choose; but let the stewards preach the financial doctrines of the church. Paul never asked for his own salary, though he laid down the law plainly and powerfully in behalf of other ministers. Benevolence, the blessedness of [illegible] consecration of property to God, may be preached; but "pay me that thou owest" comes in bad taste from the pulpit.

Thy Faith Hath Made Thee Whole.

(LUKE VII, 48.)

MR. EDITOR: In reading the Scriptures I find several like texts, with the same meaning, if not the same words. This has set me to thinking, and the result of those thoughts is that they mean just what they say, viz.: that faith is salvation; and not merely a means to or condition of—only in an elementary sense—but the thing itself. For he never, on such occasions of healing, says, The Father has saved thee, or I have saved thee, or the Holy Spirit has saved thee, but "thy faith."

Now, if this be salvation, it is not very material to a man whether his creed is strictly orthodox or his succession apostolical, or his rites ritual, ceremonies and sacraments of the most approved style and taste or not; but the great question is: Do they save him? In this connection the apostolical exhortation, "Examine yourselves and see if ye be in the faith," is very pertinent; and if you are, all the rest is well.* You will not be much troubled when the enemy shall thrust into your soul a passing doubt of the truth of Christianity or of the authenticity of the Bible. The saved man is not much concerned on these questions. Salvation is his great aim; and, being conscious of it, he is not concerned about how it came. He has taken the Bible as his guide in seeking it, and feels that he has it. He cares not whether the Bible be a fable or the word of Deity. It all may be theoretically doubtful, if you please, but practically it is true to him, and is all he wants. He knows that he is good, holy and happy—that he is now saved; salvation being deliverance from present evil, and the fear of possible evil in the future.

It is true that the best of God's people sometimes suffer much in the flesh—disease, poverty, persecutions, bereavements, scandal and death; but will not this faith (or salvation, which I call the same) turn all these apparent evils into the choicest blessings when they are seen coming from a loving Father's hand?

It is said in the Bible that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son to die for the world," etc.; that "like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him;" that Jesus Christ, for the day that was set before him, endured the cross, despised the shame, etc., and that this Being is omnipotent, all-wise, just, holy, pure and good, and withal loves me even unto the death, and hath demonstrated this love beyond all possible doubt. Can any man believe this and not instantly be saved? Faith, then, is present salvation, and will be eternal if retained. Such a privilege would turn hell into a waste, howling wilderness if the inhabitants were only granted the liberty of repentance and faith!

But if faith is salvation, should we not know something about it very soon? If a man is not saved now, when will he be? If this faith that works by love and purifies the heart—and there is no other purifier—does not work now, when will it? In death, alas! Is death our savior? God help us to believe.

Malays at Singapore.

BY REV. J. M. W. FARNHAM.

The population of this place is about ninety thousand, nearly half being Malays, who are said to have taken possession of the island in the thirteenth century. The aborigines are now scattered over the peninsula and adjacent islands, much reminding one of the condition of the American Indians. There may be seven or eight thousand of them. They give very singular accounts of their origin. The following is likely to interest the disciples of Darwin:

"Among one tribe it is stated with all gravity that they are descended from two white apes, who, having reared their young ones, sent them into the plains, where the greater number perfected so well that they became men; those who did not become men returned once more to the mountains, and still continue apes."

These last words do not so much favor the development theory, though there may still be hope for them.

Another account is that God, having called into existence a being of great strength and beauty, named him Batin. God, desirous that a form so fair should be perpetuated, gave Batin a companion, and sent them forth to dwell in the earth. Charmed with its beauties, they took up their abode in the Island of Singapore, increasing and multiplying with a rapidity and to a degree now unknown. From these two they say all the tribes have descended.

Another tribe give the following account: "The ground," say they, "is not solid. It is merely the skin of the earth. In ancient times God broke up this crust so that the earth was overwhelmed with water, and destroyed. After this God caused the mountains to rise, and sent forth to float upon the water a vessel closed up tightly, containing a man and a woman that he had made. The vessel having floated to dry land, the man and woman nibbled a hole and came forth. At first, however, everything was obscure. There was neither morning nor evening, because the sun had not yet been made. By and by the woman became pregnant, not, however, in her womb, but in the calves of her legs. From the right leg she brought forth a male child, and from the left leg a female. Hence it is that the issue of the same womb cannot intermarry. All mankind are the descendants of the children of this first pair."

A somewhat similar account is given by another tribe: "They say their fathers originally came from heaven in a large and magnificent ship built by God, and set floating on the waters of the earth. The ship, sailing round and round the earth, at last grounded upon one of the mountains of the peninsula, where they declare it may still be seen. Their fathers disembarked and took up their abode upon the mountains, plains and coasts, but all under one chief."

The marriage ceremony is simple, and "the new-made acquaintance of the morning is often a bride of the evening. It is more a matter of arrangement with the parents than courtship with the daughter; the form generally observed reminds one of the old tale of Hippomenes and Atlanta. If the tribe is on the bank of a lake or stream, the damsel is given a double-bladed paddle, and allowed a start of some distance; her lover, similarly equipped, starts off in chase. If he succeeds in overtaking her, she becomes his wife; if not, the match is broken off." The arrangements having been so far completed, it is seldom that objections are made at the last moment, and the chase is a short and successful one. Though the maiden's arm may be strong, her heart is warm, and she soon becomes a willing captive. If there is no body of water at hand, a circle is formed and the maiden, stripped of all but a waist-band, is given a fair start. If she runs round three times before her lover overtakes her, she remains a virgin. But it is said that, however far they start in advance, or however fleet of foot, "but few outstrip their lovers."—Morning Star.

Mary Magdalene.

As an illustration of the way in which legend and tradition may falsify history, pervert the sacred Scriptures and impose a baseless belief upon the world, the common notion respecting the character of Mary Magdalene may be fitly cited: It has been accepted as a settled and indubitable matter of faith that she was a fallen woman, and as such delivered from her besetting sin by the pitiful and merciful Savior.

And yet there is not really a single hint, intimation or suggestion of the kind in the New Testament respecting her. She appears first in Luke's gospel in the company of honorable women, who ministered unto Christ of their substance. It appears that she had been an unhappy victim of demoniacal possession. The "seven devils" from whose evil power she was freed were enough surely to deprive her of the texture and substance, the essence and the joy of a true life. But the number seven, as is well known, was used idiomatically among the Jews to denote perfection or completeness; and its occurrence in the narrative concerning the case of Mary Magdalene means no more than that she was wholly seized and possessed of the evil spirits.

We have no intention of discussing here the nature of demoniacal possession. Its symptoms and manifestations are fully described by the New Testament writers. It produced convulsions of body in some instances, in others a wild frenzy, and in still others settled melancholy, occasionally verging toward idiocy. There is a vast scope still left for inquiry concerning the relations of the human mind to invisible spirits. Seeing, as we do, what the diablery of modern spiritualism can accomplish in the way of "possessing" once rational and fairly-balanced minds, there can hardly be wisdom in doubting the accuracy of the literal record of demoniacal possessions contained in the New Testament.

Subjection, however, to the demons is not to be identified or confounded with sins of impurity, nor with overt crime of any sort. It was a horrible distemper of a subtle order, and in itself a burden and a curse.

It appears that Pope Gregory the Great was the first to give distinct and authoritative shape to the falsehood since current respecting Mary Magdalene. The Eastern Church was never drawn into the error. And in the Latin Church some of the chief of the fathers distinctly rejected it. But the name and fame of Gregory were strong enough to give it place among the vain traditions and delusive legends which have come down through the ages, to live among the many glosses and perversions of Scripture which had their conjectural beginnings in the fancy or in the vanity of some careless expositor.

Once under way, the story floated on. It was caught up by poetry and art, and introduced into the canon of a sentimental religionism, where it remains to this day. And yet every painting of the Magdalene is but a pictured lie. And every asylum for fallen women bearing her name is a slander upon the sanctity and purity of her scriptural fame.—Rev. H. S. Porter, D. D.

A REMARKABLE LETTER has come to light, signed by Mr. Mori, Japanese embassador to this country, which, if authentic, suggests greater hopes for that empire than its most sanguine friends in Christendom have dared to entertain. From its contents it appears that Japanese scholars and officials propose to recommend the adoption of a new language for Japan, more copious, practical and simple than their own, which proves a hinderance to their advance in civilization. The first choice for a new language is the English in a simplified form; and Mr. Mori has asked a distinguished linguist among us whether such simplification is feasible. At first glance this project looks visionary; but nothing seems to be improbable with that waking and ingenious nation. But the point of it is that the English tongue is their choice—the language with which Christianity, liberty and toleration are identified. If Japan, in future generations, shall become an English-speaking power, she can hardly fail also of becoming as greatly transformed in her religious faith and practices.

A MINISTER having remarked that "there would be a nave in the new edifice the society was erecting," an old lady said "she knew the person to whom he referred."

OBITUARIES.

DIED, on the morning of the second of March, THEODORE, infant son of Rachel and Theodore [illegible], New Orleans.

SISTER LUCY MARIA IRWIN, youngest daughter of J. H. Foster, was born in Yazoo county, Mississippi, April 21, 1816. At an early period of her life—before she was three months old—her father had her dedicated to God in baptism by Rev. H. Williamson. At the age of ten years she openly acknowledged her obligations to God by a public profession of religion, and henceforward until her death she led a life consistent with the high profession she had made in her youth. June 29, A. D. 1865, she was happily united in marriage to Mr. H. F. Irwin, the playmate of her youth, with whom she lived very happily, discharging faithfully the duties of wife and mother. September 18, 1872, in the twenty-seventh year of her age, and the seventh of her marriage, she closed her useful life, after a severe illness of a few hours, leaving her devoted husband to feel and mourn his irreparable loss. Her death was triumphant. Though the summons came unexpectedly, and the messenger speedily executed his commission, yet she was neither unprepared nor taken by surprise. Fully conscious of her condition, and under the conviction that in a few hours the struggle would be over, with composure and deliberation she prepared to encounter "the last enemy." Commending her babes and loving husband to her Heavenly Father, and requesting her weeping companion to meet her in the better land, she calmly bade them all farewell, and with the accents of prayer trembling on her lips she closed her eyes on earth, to open them again on brighter scenes in heaven.

A. W. CAMPBELL, P. C.

SATARTIA, February 1, 1873.

ELLA CURB died December 13, 1872, of diphtheria, aged two years, four months and twenty days; VIOLA CURB died December 27, 1872, of the same disease, aged four years, seven months and twenty-six days; LENA CURB died January 2, 1873, of the same disease, aged six years, three months and twenty-four days, all daughters of Mr. A. M. and Mrs. Fannie J. Curb, of Perry county, Alabama.

Thus in the short space of three weeks three lovely little sisters passed from the habitation of man to the paradise of God; and though they were tender in years, yet, being blessed with Christian parents, they had learned there was a hell to shun and a heaven to obtain, and were careful to close each day by committing themselves to their Creator. Disease first seized upon little Ella, but her disposition was so quiet and unassuming that she patiently bore her affliction, and without a struggle breathed her last. Viola was next taken, and, though her suffering was extreme, she calmly submitted to her fate, and seemed happy in anticipation of meeting Ella on the shores of eternal bliss. Lena, though quite young, was a member of the Sabbath school, and always took great delight in its exercises. The night before she was taken sick she sang, "I have a sister in the promised land," and expressed a desire to go there. It is sad indeed to surrender one child to the icy arms of death, but more so when called upon to give up three in so short a time; yet our loss is their eternal gain. We knew that he who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," doeth all things well. And now that they are gone, may they be a three-fold cord of love to draw their parents and friends to heaven.

B. F. CANON,

MY TWO angel boys, WILBUR F. and EDGAR J. SCOTT, the Lord has taken suddenly to himself. Wilbur died on the eleventh instant, after an illness of thirty-four hours, and Edgar on the fifteenth instant; he was sick not quite twenty-four hours. The disease is said to have been meningitis, perhaps both brain and spine involved. There was a difference of but fifteen months and twenty-two days in their ages. Wilbur was born September 16, 1855, and Edgar January 7, 1857. The circumstances that make up part of their history are perhaps worthy of notice. Both of them were born into the world near the same hour of the day and passed out near the same hour. Both were named and baptized on the same day, and both laid in the same grave. I suppose there never were two boys who had more congenial spirits toward each other. Whatever difference of opinion took place at any time, it was always settled in a kind and brotherly way. All the little property that they owned was a copartnership. Once upon a time each of them owned a pony. Edgar's died. Wilbur, seeing his brother in trouble, said: "Come, Babe, you can have half of mine." The outside world is disposed to say that preachers' sons are as bad or worse than other men's sons; but I thank God that this is not my experience, neither is it my observation in reference to other ministers' sons. I can say more for my sons than I can for many others of worldly parents. If they ever disobeyed their parents, told a falsehood, swore an oath or drank a drop of ardent spirits it never came to their knowledge.

They loved the school-room and the Sabbath school. I heard them repeat their last verses and remember them well. Wilbur's: "Let not your heart be troubled. Ye believe in God; believe also in me." Edgar's: "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift." They loved the church and all its institutions. Both of them said they expected to be ministers of the gospel. But God, in his wisdom and goodness, has taken them to himself, perhaps to give them employment among the angels. Who knows but that God will permit them to be ministering spirits for the family circle that they left, as they were the first of the number taken up into angelic regions, and to cheer them along life's weary way, counteracting the evil impressions by bearing themselves close along by our sides, and when we, one by one, drop off the mortal coil, assist other angels in conducting our spirits up to God! They are my boys to love as ever, and more, for they are where my greatest in[illegible] I loved them), [illegible] darling boys of earthly prospects, hearts and minds being educated for usefulness; but the Master has called, and his behests must be obeyed. I "submit to God," and resign my boys into his hands, though it be like breaking my body in two and tearing my soul asunder. I know that God is good and wise, and will do right. Good-by, my angel boys; but thank God, not forever: "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

S. S. SCOTT.

MINDEN, LA., February 19, 1873.

MRS. ELIZA BATTLE, for more than thirty years a member of the Franklin Street Methodist Episcopal Church South, departed this life, at her residence in this city, December 7, 1872, in the happy assurance of admission into mansions prepared by her Savior for those who love him.

She was converted under the ministry of Dr. Jefferson Hamilton, and from the day of her union with the church to that of her death she was ever faithful to the Lord and his people. Having an earnest nature, a clear intellect and firm will, her attachments were ardent, her convictions profound, and her conduct settled and uniform. She loved her family and friends and church with a devotion that nothing could break off, and a constancy that never wearied. Blessed by Providence with great riches, and a large circle of friendship and acquaintance, she was necessarily much occupied with society. But amid all the splendor of her social life she always endeavored to pursue the walk and preserve the spirit of an humble disciple of Jesus. The hospitalities of her home were dispensed at once with the easy elegance of taste and wealth, and the candor and simplicity of a gentle Christian heart.

Her wealth she held as a trustee of the Lord, and distributed it according to the dictates of an enlightened conscience. Her husband, for he spoke, doubtless, and at her suggestion, left at his death to Franklin Street church an endowment of [illegible], and afterward, of her own will, she made a still larger donation to the educational interests of our church; indeed in Mrs. Battle the church had a patroness and a servant, the poor had a friend, the distressed a comforter; for, in addition to the munificent public benefactions, her life was marked by many private charities—unostentatious actions, which "let not the right hand know what the left hand doeth."

As long as she had strength her place in the house of God, at the table of communion, the class meeting, the prayer meeting, was occupied; and after she became too feeble to go her heart longed to be there. The last sickness of this good woman was painful and protracted, but her faith in Jesus remained unshaken. All was done to protract her precious life that love and skill could do; but God had said, "It is enough;" came up higher," and her spirit quitted its earthly tenement and went up to the world of glory. At a meeting of the church officers the following resolutions offered by Bro. C. W. Butt, were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, God, in his all-wise providence, has seen fit to call from our midst our beloved sister, Eliza Battle; and we feel it to be a mournful pleasure to give expression to the high estimate in which she was held by the church of her communion therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of Sister Battle the Franklin Street Methodist Episcopal Church South has lost one of its most valued and valuable members, prominent alike for her generous sympathy with the poor, her enlarged Christian liberality to all the benevolent enterprises of the church, her unostentatious piety before God, and her punctual and constant attention to duty.

Resolved, That in our hearts we will cherish the memory of her name as a sweet odor, and treasure her pious example as one "blessed among women," having the "ornament of a meek and quiet spirit," and worthy of all emulation.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes, a copy forwarded to her afflicted friends, and published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

VALUE OF SWEEPINGS.—It is stated that one of our jewelry manufactories (Ailing Bros. & Co.) recently put down new flooring in their workshops, and that the gold obtained in burning the old flooring not only paid for the new one, but for putting two coats of paint on the entire factory. In another (Carter, Howkins & Dodd) the hands all work on a sort of bracket standing out from the bench in front of them, so that the filings of gold may fall on a tin plate below, and be returned to the melting room. The greatest care is exercised to prevent waste. The floors, benches and seats are carefully swept every evening, and the sweepings put away to have the gold removed from them by chemical process. Every now and then aprons, benches, stools and even the flooring are burnt up to get the gold out of them. Even brushes, clothes, cotton, wool and rags are burned. The average quantity of gold saved annually in this way in this factory is about $50,000 worth. All the water in which the five hundred employes wash their hands is carefully filtered four times, and the amount of gold recovered from it averages about $15,000 a year. A barrel of sweepings will fetch $1.50 a pound; and even after they have, as they think, extracted all the gold from them, they sell the refuse to the smelters at nine cents, and even as high as eleven cents a pound.—Newark Advertiser.

LOVE—HUMAN AND DIVINE.

BY MARY B. DODGE.

O sea, deep sea, heart-pulsing sea,
All-conquering ruler! life is brave,
To bend to thee, as wave to wave.
Though thou from wreck may'st hardly save,
(While every sense thou dar'st to lave
In a full tide of restless)
For joy or pain, or what may be,
Through shine and shadow, loyally,
Thy huge am I, O mastering sea!

O sea, blue sea, fair-smiling sea,
With feathered crests by sunshine smote!
In days gone by I launched my boat,
Gaily on soft warm waves to float
For aye and aye. Sad breakers wrote,
Upon the shore, how recklessly
A tossing billow scatters, free
Of fancied bounds, youth's hope in thee,
Then sliding, stormbrewed, changeful sea!

Yet boundless sea! unfathomed sea!
If on the sands thy shallows float,
Thy central depth knows no deceit,
Where once I sailed, I walk to meet
A Form, that stands with restful feet,
Crowning thy untamed mystery;
Light leads my footsteps tenderly—
Upheaving arms outstretch to me—
And thou art mine, eternal sea!

University Life in Scotland.

BY JOHN FRASER, LATE OF GLASGOW UNIVERSITY.

I propose to give a brief account of the inner life, regulations and character of Scottish universities, which may contain some useful suggestions and hints for the alumni and teachers of similar institutions in this country. Not that I would uphold the superiority of the former, or institute invidious comparison between the two, for with much good the great colleges both of Scotland and England contain also much evil. I may at the outset say a word or two about the differences, many and essential, which exist between the scholastic systems, say of Edinburg and Glasgow, and Oxford and Cambridge. The latter universities are essentially aristocratic. They appeal to the upper and wealthy classes, on whom almost alone they draw their support and nourishment, and offer no inducements to the poor, the able and the needy. To become a graduate of Oxford a man must be prepared to spend from $6,000 to $10,000. Consequently its doors are to intents and purposes closed on the lower classes. There are, of course, what we call bursaries, fellowships, scholarships and the like, through which it is possible for poverty to crawl into the sacred precincts of these hot-houses of England's nobility, but practically wealth and rank possess a monopoly of high-class education south of the Tweed. As a partial result of this, it follows that men do not go to Oxford for their mental improvement only, many, perhaps indeed the majority, as much for the social status which graduation confers as with the view of becoming proficient in philosophy, mathematics or law. I shall be within the mark when I say that out of every hundred lads who matriculate annually at Oxford or Cambridge, at least twenty go for cricket and boating, forty to make good acquaintances and lay the foundation of future success in society, while not a few go for no other reason than because everybody else goes, and it is considered the proper thing for a gentleman to do. In the English universities, again, the residence is mostly within doors—that is to say, they not only teach, but lodge and board their students, as is the case with so many of our own schools and colleges. Now in Scotland, except in St. Andrews, this is never the case. The students all reside outside the walls of the university; they are taught, not boarded. The colleges of Glasgow, Aberdeen and Edinburg are colleges pure and simple, not combinations of hotels and educational seminaries. But this, although as I shall show presently, by no means a small difference, is after all the least important circumstance that serves to make the two systems radically distinct and even opposite in their character, working and results. The grand feature of Scotch university education, as distinguished from that of England, is its cheapness. If Oxford and Cambridge are the aristocracies of knowledge, Glasgow and Edinburg are its republics. Graduation in the latter can be accomplished for little more than $300, and has been obtained for less. The consequence is that every respectable and intelligent father, who is not positively indigent, can send, and in most cases does send, at least one of his sons to college. There is hardly a respectable native cotter, farmer or tradesman, the father of a family, from Berwick to Caithness, from Tyreo to the Frith of Forth, who does not cherish the ambition to send a son to one or the other of his country's universities. "John may wag his head in the pulpit," is the common cry, and most frequently John does wag his head in that place. The learned professions, therefore, are driven not from the upper, but from the middle and humbler ranks of society. Scotch clergymen, Scotch doctors, Scotch professors, and, though less frequently, Scotch lawyers are mainly the three first almost exclusively taken from the ranks. Their nobility and the few who ape that order, send their sons to the blue-blooded seminaries across the Tweed, while the plebeian colleges draw their supplies from the workshop and the plow, the desk and the field. The broad result of all this is that in Scotland education is less exact, but more general than in England, and not only more genial, but wider, broader, deeper and more practical. You will not find in Glasgow or Edinburg the refined and polished specimens of scholarship which are annually turned out across the border, but you will find men who, if less able to write Ciceronian Latin or Horatian verse, are better up in philosophy, logic, general knowledge, history and their special professions than are their academic rivals of Oxford. The latter make capital commentators, first-rate pedagogues and successful philologists; the former are the stuff out of which your Hugh Millers and Walter Scotts, your Macleods and Publishes, your Sir William Thomsons and Charles Naplers, your great men of business and science are made. But if the Scotch system seems best adapted for fitting men for the practical business of every-day life, it certainly falls to form the exact and perfect scholarship which has been the glory of Oxford for centuries. Scotch clergymen are eloquent, industrious and energetic. They make good critics and write sermons which, if a trifle dry at times, are usually vigorous and sensible; but they seldom distinguish themselves in the upper walks of refined scholarship. If your desire to become versed in the best theological English literature of the last five hundred years, where will you turn? Not to Glasgow, but to Oxford, not to the lights and leaders of the great Presbyterian bodies of Scotland, but to the fathers of the Established Church of the sister country. So, too, for great scholars you must turn your back on the north and proceed southward, if you would have a Porson or a Jowett. But if in this respect the distinction is in favor of England, it should be borne in mind that it is the happiness of the many, and not of the few, which ought to be the aim of rulers and teachers. And if the northern seminaries give the world fewer scholars, they turn out more men. But there is another difference on which I have barely touched, namely, the non-residential character of the Scotch as compared with the English universities. Of student-life, rightly so called, there is almost none in the former. The pupils reside outside the building, and are scattered all over the city or district in which their university is situated. They meet, of course, in the class-room, and occasionally at political and literary meetings, or on the green at foot-ball and cricket, but there is little social intercourse between them. A lad will sit beside you in the same class-room every morning for six months, and "mister" and "sir" you to the last day of the session every time he addresses you. Campbell always talks of his classmate, even of his fellow-lodger, as Mr. M'Tavish, and M'Tavish is scrupulously careful to be equally polite to Mr. Campbell. In Oxford boat-racing and cricket, hunting and billiards, form a distinct branch of the curriculum. A lad will go to Oxford to become the captain of the University Eleven, as a man would go to Parliament with an eye to the premiership; and the former, if successful, would esteem himself a bigger man than her majesty's minister-in-chief. Of this muscularity there is little in Glasgow or Edinburg. A lifeless and languishing foot-ball club, an occasional half hour at cricket, these afford the only opportunities for this kind of sport which exist. As to billiards, the student who was known to be addicted to the cue would forever lose caste. There is only one vice in which a Scotch student can be proficient without losing his character—the drinking of whisky, and even that is rapidly dying out. Of boat-racing there is absolutely none. Nor are there any social clubs or club-houses. The men, in the first place, are too poor to afford them, and, in the second, they have never been accustomed to them, and they are averse to changes. Strange as it may seem, in a country so liberal, Scotch students are mostly conservative. For Lord Rector they prefer Mr. Inglis, a local lawyer, to Gladstone, Lord Derby to Lowe, and Disraeli to Ruskin and Tennyson. There are other and many details in which the English university system differs from the Scotch, but what I have said includes the main essential points. I shall now proceed at more detail to consider university life in Scotland, and give such estimates of the expenses of tuition and living as may enable my readers fully and quickly to realize the facts narrated. For this purpose I shall take the University of Glasgow, as being the one with whose history and character I am most familiar, merely premising that it is a fair representative of its kind. With the exception of that of St. Andrews, which was founded in 1410, Glasgow College is the oldest in Scotland, its history dating back to 1451, in which year Pope Nicholas the Fifth granted the charter of the university. The ordinary session lasts from early in November till late in April, after which begins a sort of supplementary session of three months for medical students. There is no entrance examination, and all that the intending alumnus requires to do is to sign his name in the registrar's book, and pay a matriculation fee of $5.50. This entitles him to enroll as member of any class to which he has mind. Suppose that he simply wishes to graduate, take his degree of M. A., he will probably join the junior class of Greek, Latin and mathematics, although any two of these is quite enough at a time. In order to join the class he has simply to call at the house of the professor, which in most cases forms part of the university building, present his matriculation ticket, and pay a fee of $17.25. He is then entitled to attend in the class-room, either one or two hours a day during the session, along with from one to two hundred other lads. If he joins the Junior Humanity he will have to be in his seat at eight o'clock A. M., and be ready to undergo an examination in the passage of Ramsay's Antiquities, and Cicero or Horace, which has been prescribed. Later on in the day he will attend in the same place with his note-book, to take notes of the lecture which his teacher will deliver on Juvenal or Persius. And so with the other classes which he has joined, and this he has to do for nearly six months, excluding a few holidays at Christmas, New Year and other times. If, as is usually the case, he is poor and from the country, he will lodge in a cheap part of the town, with a fellow-student, and his expenses for board, washing and lodging will not exceed $2.50 a week. To make up this sum he will teach privately at $1 a month for one hour a night, or work at his trade, if he has one, in the intervals between college hours, or teach in some evening school for a wretched pittance. I have known men who ultimately attained the highest honors who lived on from $1.50 to $2 a week, their diet being oatmeal porridge, herring and potato. One of these now occupies a distinguished position among the dons at Oxford, another is one of the best mathematicians of the day, while a third is a well-known dignitary of the Church of England. The classes requisite for the degree of M. A. are Latin, Greek, moral philosophy, logic, mathematics, natural philosophy and English literature. These may be taken in two years, if the student, on matriculating, has sufficient knowledge of Greek and Latin to enable him to dispense with the junior classes in these branches, and at once enter the seniors, but they usually occupy three years. The expenses therefor may be briefly stated:

LOWEST RATE—FOR THREE YEARS.

The True Truth vs. Official Truth.

BY FATHER HYACINTHE.

The world should not be misled into believing that because almost every one of the Catholic bishops have submitted to the decrees of the Vatican council that they believe in them (and we cannot attempt here to show how that "submission" has been exacted,) and much less that they accept the present condition and government of the church as wise or sanitary. We believe that every intelligent bishop in the Roman communion deplores the present state of affairs as inextricable for the church, dangerous for governments, and fatal to individual faith. We know of those who groan in silence, being conscience-bound; others who writhe under continual torture of the conflict between earthly responsibilities and their interior convictions. Others there are given over to despair; but, thank Heaven, there are some who hope, because they trust not in man, but in God.

In proof of this state of mind and conscience in the episcopate, as well as to corroborate the description I have given in my recent discourses of the corrupted Catholicism that is imposed upon France, I deem it a duty to give to the public, in their simple and indignant eloquence, two extracts from letters written to me since the council by one of the most worthy and eminent bishops in the Roman Church. Although written in the freedom of private correspondence, I have obtained permission to publish that which relates to our subject. The condition of affairs makes it easily understood that his name and identity must be withheld from the world. I can only affirm their perfect authenticity. He writes:

"There is no salvation for France except in a powerful awakening of a religious sentiment. But that awakening is impossible as long as she is not cured, at whatever the cost, of the cancerous sore of superstition and hypocrisy which is personified in the Order of Jesuits and their adherents. Upon this point my conviction cannot be shaken. You know how firmly I am persuaded that the only true religion is the Christian Catholic; and that the evangelical doctrine, such as was taught by Jesus Christ and transmitted by the apostles, is the divine principle which, infiltrated in all the veins of society, renders the nations of the earth curable, and inoculates them with a new and powerful life. And I am no less convinced that the worst of all religions is that which does not respect the great principles of natural law which are stamped on the soul by the hand of God; and consequently nothing can be less favorable for the spiritual and temporal welfare of men than the depraved and corrupted Catholicism of the present day. All efforts of true Catholics should tend to purify the world of this accursed tare of Jesuitry! Against such a formidable enemy as this we must combat with energy, not only until we have overthrown it, but until we have plucked it out by the roots! There will be hypocrites and evil-workers in the world always; but there should not be a kingdom of Jesuits substituted for the kingdom of Jesus Christ, our only King and Savior."

In another letter he writes:

"Poor France! It appears to a certainty that she is condemned to drink the cup of bitterness to the very dregs! Instead of giving herself up to the dangerous dreams of military vengeance, why has she not the courage to throw off from her shoulders this mantle of lead which, by assiduous and perfidious labor of nearly half a century, has been imposed upon her by the Jesuits? In doing this she would, I am certain, become resuscitated, as by enchantment, to a new and vigorous life. In order that France may become moral and religious, they must cease to insinuate the morals and religion of the Jesuits. For, on one hand, the noble and generous character of the Frenchman turns with horror from such degradation; and, on the other hand, not knowing any other or better religion, she sinks into that indifferentism which smothers every spark of inspiration and enervates all vigor of the soul. Here is the great danger of to-day. There must arise some mighty voice, like that of Ezekiel, that shall call to this great people, saying: 'O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord.' Mark you well, it is the word of the Lord, not of man—that word which is truth and justice, light for the mind and nourishment for the heart; that living word which, after it was made to be heard by the patriarchs and by the prophets, was incarnate in Jesus Christ and carried into the whole world by the twelve, to the healing of all nations by diffusing in their hearts the aroma of immortality!"

Thus is expressed the conviction and faith of one of the most clear-seeing and great-souled Christians, and one of the bishops who know and suffer most. And thus over against official truth is opposed the true truth, as it is uttered, in undertones, by word and letter, in the Roman Church.—Independent.

The Religious Statistics of England.

Since the preparation of our article of last week on the religious statistics of England, we have received a more complete exhibit of the totals in the eighty-four towns and boroughs canvassed. The population of these towns is 5,913,919; they contain 4,843 places of worship, with 2,344,523 sittings. Of the whole number of places of worship, the State church provides 1,508, and 1,040,672 sittings; the Nonconformist churches provide 3,335 places of worship, and 1,303,851 sittings. The difference in favor of the Nonconformists is therefore 1,827 places of worship, and 563,179 sittings; or, as we stated last week, the Establishment provides two-fifths of the whole number of sittings, and the Dissenters provide three-fifths.

The aggregate of sittings provided by the religious bodies, taken severally in the entire eighty-four towns and boroughs, is as follows: Church of England, 1,040,672; Wesleyans, 333,131 (not 316,101, as given last week;) Congregationalists, 311,061; Baptists, 223,977; Roman Catholics, 132,015; Primitive Methodists, 131,788; United Methodists, 103,844; Presbyterians, 73,511; New Connection Methodists, 71,330; Unitarians, 37,895; Calvinistic Methodists, 27,732; Society of Friends, 26,451; Plymouth Brethren, 16,418; Bible Christians, 7,720. Analyzing these totals, it will be seen that the Methodists of every name provide more than 670,000 of the whole number of sittings, or more than one-fourth. As to the relative increase since 1851, the Nonconformist gives the following facts:

"The Wesleyans, though still standing second in point of religious accommodation to the Church of England, have not increased in these towns so fast as some other bodies, owing to the secession which took place many years ago, and resulted in the union of the Wesleyan Association and Wesleyan Reformers under the name of the United Methodist Free Churches. It will be observed that the several branches of the Wesleyan family together provide 674,822 sittings, or about one-fourth of the whole. The rapid growth of the Primitive Methodists, who appeal almost exclusively to the working classes, is a remarkable fact, that body having increased 108.8 per cent. since 1851. Twenty years ago the Presbyterians were comparatively weak in England, and have in the interval trebled their means of public worship. They are here included in one body, though consisting of three—the Church of Scotland, English Presbyterians and the United Presbyterians—the latter two verging upon amalgamation. Congregationalists and Baptists stand nearly in the same relative position as in 1851, though the increase of the former has been somewhat more rapid. As to the Roman Catholics, we can only repeat that their considerable increase is mainly owing to continuous Irish immigration, and that the accommodation of their places of worship represent a larger constituency in proportion to other denominations, in consequence of its being more utilized."

If these figures are to be trusted, it is fair to infer that the Primitive Methodists have, since 1851, had a more rapid ratio of increase than any other Methodist body in the world. Our own increase in the United States from 1850 to 1870 was nearly 100 per cent., but the increase of the Primitive Methodists in the eighty-four towns of England examined has been 108.8 per cent. from 1851 to 1872. A body that increases at such rate is worthy of study; it will be found, we suspect, that the Primitives owe their prosperity to their close attention to the poor, from whom the Wesleyans have, of late years, turned aside. There is a lesson in these facts for us here in the New World.—Methodist.

Poor Aaron.

Bishop Seabury once heard an amateur choir perpetrate a fugue of this verse:

True love is like that precious oil
Which, purified on Aaron's head,
Ran down his beard, and o'er his robes
Its costly moisture shed.

Here is the fugue, as sung with great violence:

Ran down his beard, and o'er his head——
Ran down his beard——
——his robes
And o'er his robes
Ran down his beard—ran down his
——o'er his robes
His robes, his robes, ran down his beard—— Ran down his
——o'er his robes,
Ran down his beard——
——his beard
Its costly moist——
Ran down his beard——
——ris—beard—his—beard—his—shed.
Ran down his beard—his—down
His robes—its costly moist—his beard
——ure shed—his—cost—his robes—ure shed
Its c-o-s-t-l-i-e moisture——shed!

The bishop, being asked his opinion of this performance, replied that he had paid no attention to the music, but that his sympathies were so much excited for poor Aaron that he was afraid he would not have a hair left.

THE LADY in Millais' famous picture would fain save her lover's life from the massacre of Bartholomew by binding the popish badge around his arm; he kisses her for her love, but firmly removes the badge. So when the dearest friends we have, out of mistaken tenderness, would persuade us to avoid persecution by relinquishing principle, and doing as others do, we should thank them for their love, but with unbending decision refuse to be numbered with the world.—Spurgeon.

MANY WILLS have the somewhat startling heading, "In the name of God, amen," which may mean as much as "know all men by these presents," and may not. But what a hideous comment on such a divine invocation to give not one dollar in the course of that will to bless and educate the race!—Springfield Republican.

HE THAT will work for others' good
Must be himself renewed;
So, before all things, thou must cry
Thyself to purify.

Thelwick.

Religious Intelligence.

THE daughter of the ecclesiastical pianist, the Abbe Liszt, has seceded from Rome, turned Protestant, and married a German composer.

THERE are in the United States [illegible] membership east of the Alleghanies has decreased 7,722, while in the West they have increased 8,477.

THE Episcopal church in Salt Lake City is finished, and has been occupied for a year. The cost of the edifice was $50,000, on which there is a debt remaining of $8,000.

THE Baptists average 80 communicants to a church; the Methodist Episcopal Church 90; the Presbyterians 98; the Reformed (Dutch) 132, and the United Brethren 31.

REV. P. HERMUCK, the Reformed pastor of the German congregation, Canton, Ohio, has, during his pastorate of nearly forty years, baptized 4,272 persons, married 1,671 couples, buried 1,457 bodies and preached 7,000 sermons.

THE Wesleyan and the New Connection Methodists of Canada are about uniting their forces. The Bible Christians and the Primitive Methodists have voted against union, and the Episcopal Methodists of that country have also decided to stay out in the cold.

KODAMA, the Japanese, who was baptized by Dr. Newman, at Washington city, several months ago, has abandoned his intention of making law his profession, and proposes to study for the ministry, and return to Japan and establish a Methodist Episcopal Church.

THEODORE PARKER'S CHURCH.—Mr. Conner is preaching to the remnant of Theodore Parker's congregation in Boston. The service is very unique. There is neither prayer, song nor benediction. Divine service consists in reading funny things from Tennyson and the English humorists.

IN INDIA the Sunday school work begins to show signs of good results. According to Rev. T. Craven, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission (American,) the Methodists have 800 Sunday scholars in Lucknow, in Moradabad 350, in Cawnpore 200, and in Roy Bareilly 150, making 1,500 in all; and this same progress, which characterizes other stations as well, is only stayed for lack of teachers.

W. C. DEPAUW, Esq., of New Albany, has made a donation of $500 to the Sunday School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to be expended in circulating the Sunday School Journal among teachers in the destitute Methodist Episcopal Sunday schools of the South. Schools aided are to pay one-third of the cost of all such grants, the other two-thirds coming from the "DePauw fund."

REV. S. R. RIGGS, missionary to the Dakota Indians, in a letter to the Evangelist, after giving a brief history of his life-work among the Indians, adds: "We are therefore prepared to write evangelization before civilization. Evangelize in order to civilize. Christianize that you may have the basis and the motive power for the highest civilization. And Christianize, too, that they may become citizens of the city of God. God is wiser than men in most things, and in nothing more than in this."

THE presbytery of Rio Janeiro consists of seven ordained ministers, and has under its care eight churches, with a total membership of 382. There were eighty-one additions to these churches on profession of faith during the past year, and two new churches were organized—one at Petropolis and one at Bahia. This presbytery is now aiming to establish a training school at San Paulo, for the education of candidates for the ministry, teachers and others, in order to advance more efficiently the cause of Christ in Brazil.

IN THE fourth General Assembly of the Free Italian Church, held in Rome, last month, twenty-eight churches were represented, whose total ordinary income during the year has been 104,644 francs—somewhat more than $30,000; and an equal sum has been contributed by Christians of various lands for the purchase of a building in Rome for the Free Italian Church. An undergraduate and a theological seminary were also resolved upon, and much interesting discussion held on the subject of Italian evangelization.

MORE than 1,000 converts have been received on probation by the American Methodist Episcopal missionaries in Sweden, and nearly as many in full connection with the church. Where persecution has occurred—as in the case of several preachers, who have been either imprisoned, fined or mobbed—opposition has only seemed to strengthen their cause. The mission has built eight chapels during the past year and eight more are now building, and has established two day schools. Over 2,000 children are in the Sunday schools.

THE Lafayette avenue Presbyterian church of Brooklyn (Rev. T. L. Cuyler's) has attained a high degree of prosperity. At their late annual meeting their membership was reported at 1,575, the largest number yet reached by any church of that denomination. They erected last year a beautiful chapel, and are about sending off a colony of over one hundred members to form a new and independent church, under the name of "Calvary Church." The chapel will be presented as a free gift to the young organization. This is the second colony sent out by this prosperous church. The whole number of members received during Dr. Cuyler's ministry of twelve years has been two thousand two hundred and thirty.

AFRICA.—The United Brethren have a very prosperous mission in South Africa, which is largely self-supporting. Rev. H. Grasse, writing to the Periodical Accounts, from Enon, speaks of several kinds of business done in connection with the mission, and says: "The blessing of the Lord attends us, and our income will cover the expenditure at our station. Our lemon-trees are beading with fruit, the sale of which will realize as much as our garden costs; and our people, having been blessed with a good harvest, were able to celebrate a joyful thanksgiving festival. Our congregation is increasing in spirituality, and I can rejoice over the greater part of the members. The word of God [illegible] its power in many hearts."

THE Lutheran thus estimates the number of Lutherans in the world: "There are 3,000,000 of Lutheran population in Sweden, 1,500,000 in Norway, 2,000,000 in Denmark, the Faroe Islands and Jutland, 1,000,000 in France, 25,000,000 in the various Germanic States and principalities, 5,000,000 in Prussia, though by State enactment mostly conjoined in one national church with the Reformed, 1,500,000 in Austria, Hungary, Bohemia and Moravia, 1,000,000 or more in Poland and Russia, 1,500,000 in the United States and Canada, 1,000,000 in the West India Islands and Australasia, 500,000 in Brazil and South America, besides large Lutheran populations and churches in other regions and localities. These would run up to some 40,0000,000 or 50,000,000."

MR. M. A. SHERRING, of Benares, Northern India, gives in the English Independent various missionary statistics, prepared by the committee of the Calcutta Missionary Conference, from which we learn that the native Christian population of India has increased during the past ten years as much as 61 per cent., while the number of communicants has more than doubled. This increase has been mainly among the aboriginal and inferior races. The Church, Propagation and London Missionary Societies lead all others laboring in India in the number of native converts. The variation in their numbers during the past ten years has been as follows: The Church Missionary Society in 1861 numbered of Christians, 50,925; of missionaries, 103; scholars, 22,608. In 1871 the same society numbered 69,114 Christians, 102 missionaries, 36,830 scholars. The Propagation Society in 1861 numbered 29,549 churches, 13 missionaries, 8,797 scholars; in 1871, 15,083 Christians, 40 missionaries, 13,358 scholars. London Missionary Society in 1861, 27,218 Christians, 49 missionaries, 13,979 scholars; in 1871, 39,879 Christians, 44 missionaries, 13,690 scholars. From this it may be seen that there has been a diminution of the missionary force in each of these societies, and an increase of scholars, except in the case of the London Missionary Society. In Bengal Christians have multiplied during the past decade more than 100 per cent., owing to the progress among the German missions in Chota Nagpore; but the continental societies pay almost no attention to the education of the natives, except as they instruct orally in the streets or the houses of the natives. The increase of scholars throughout all the stations has been from 75,995 pupils in 1861 to 122,372 in 1871, of whom 26,611 were young women and girls. The Baptist (English) Missionary Society's record reads: In 1861, 6,472 Christians, 36 missionaries; in 1871, 6,535 Christians, 25 missionaries. The American Baptist Missionary Union reports during the ten years the remarkable increase of from 143 to 6,840. The first American Methodist missionary entered India in 1857; in 1871 they numbered 1,835 adherents. The American Reformed Church advanced during the ten years from 795 to 2,478, the American Lutheran from 367 to 2,470, and the Leipsic Lutherans from 5,192 to 9,255. The English societies have diminished to an alarming extent the number of their agents in India, a fact which Mr. Sherring greatly deplores; but there has been no falling off in the aggregate, because of the large influx of American missionaries, especially from the Presbyterian Board. If the decrease of British laborers in India denotes a diminution of interest in the work, or any feeling of discouragement as to its results, it might be well to refer to the facts stated by Rev. Archibald Boyd, in his recent letter to the Earl of Chichester, on the progress and results of missions, that the missionary societies in India do not receive less than £50,000 annually from European residents there, who, living in the midst of the missionary operations among the heathen, can judge better than any others whether these labors are worth continuing, and who less than all others would be likely to throw away money upon a hopeless cause; that men of such ability and discretion as Sir Robert Montgomery and Mr. McLeod, with fifty-five others, holding civil or military offices, have petitioned the Church Missionary Society to advance its work into Cashmere, and have themselves contributed toward the work; as well as to the report of the Bishop of Madras for this same decade, who during the time ordained 11 deacons and 14 priests (in each case 8 being natives,) confirmed 4,806, of whom 4,219 were natives, and in one year in Travancore reported 734 baptisms. The number of ordained native ministers has more than doubled, being 226 in 1871, while ten years before it was less than 100. As to higher educational results, the Scotch societies—the Free Church and the Scotch Kirk—bear off the palm, having accomplished as much as all the other societies together. One thousand six hundred and twenty-one students trained in mission schools have been matriculated in the universities of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay. Five hundred and thirteen have passed the first arts examination, 154 have taken the degree of bachelor of arts, 18 the degree of master of arts, and 6 the degree of bachelor of laws, and fully one-half of these students were from the schools of the Scotch societies. In the three countries of India, Ceylon and Burmah 24 mission presses have printed during the ten years 3,410 different works, 12,317,172 different books, in 31 different languages, 2,375,940 of the books being school works. According to Dr. Butler's statistics, in 1872 there were 9 American, 13 British and 5 German societies laboring in India, having a total of 58 missions, 858 missionaries, male and female, 70,857 communicants, 273,178 Christians, and 137,32[illegible] scholars in mission schools.—Independent.

Every-day Trials and Tests.

The ordinary tests of character are often overlooked while we dwell upon those which are remarkable and exceptional. The probation of Moses reached its highest point when he renounced the court life of Egypt, and possibly a throne of unsurpassed power and splendor, "choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." The test of Abraham's faith attained a sublime climax in the command to offer Isaac on Moriah. It rose above all that he had hitherto met in the path of obedience, and was something so lofty and exhaustive that we can scarcely notice anything in the ordinary life-experiences which follow. There is unmistakable heroism in the independence and decision of Joshua when he challenges Israel to make their choice at once, and, intent upon his own duty, declares: "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." There is a certain dignity and grandeur in the course of the primitive disciples who left their nets to rot on the shore, and forsook all to follow Christ. The highest qualities of manhood were in the act of self-renunciation which brought poverty, disgrace and death to those who made it. Whether they were right or wrong, their enemies could not refuse to respect and admire the bravery and honesty of their conduct. We look at the martyrs of uninspired history, such as Polycarp, Huss and Ridley, as lifted out of the usual order of trial, because the consequences which their faithfulness brought upon them were more serious than Christians habitually encounter.

We applaud these illustrations of faith and courage, and are comforted and strengthened by these wonderful exhibitions of grace in the fiery ordeal. Doubtless the thought is that we should have chosen the stake too under similar conditions, and it may be true that we would die rather than make a public and formal renunciation of our religion. But, as we think of these supreme and sharp tests of Christian fidelity, we are apt to forget that trials, quite as effectual to reveal our fortitude and fidelity, are lying all about us. While we are looking to those mountain-peaks which stand out in their singular eminence, we are unconscious of the defiles, the bowlders, the foot-hills and spurs which surround our toilsome path. As the traveler in the plains of India may see the Himalayas towering hundreds of miles away from where he stands, so do we gaze at the historical eminences of denial and of faith, which have gained the victory over death in its most appalling forms. It is in every-day life and in every generation that we are to realize the tests of character. The trials of truth and honesty are as well defined as they could have been in the times of Moses and Abraham. The Christian profession is brought to as decided a test in these days as in those wherein the Savior declared: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me."

The alternative may not be death at the stake, but prospective gains, tempting pleasures and the approval of the world have to be sacrificed. There are poor men who might have been rich if they had no conscience about bribes or unlawful modes of trade; and there are rich men whose wealth and luxury have been procured at the cost of honor and integrity. The test of character, in the loose sense of obligation which exists, was never more unequivocal than at the present time. An honest man in these times is the rarest as well as the noblest work of God. The pleasures of sin are as formidable and as enticing as they were in the days of Moses, and to refuse their enjoyment, in the common walks of life, is as singular and illustrious in God's sight as was the self-denying faith of the great law-giver of Israel. This matter of worldly amusements, by the very specious doubts and sophistries with which it is invested, is one of the clearest tests of religious character. It is the more certain and discriminating because it is often the finest and most delicate line which separates the Christian from the world. We confess to a respect and admiration for young people especially who, against the social drift and the clamor of unbelief, keep themselves in this respect unspotted from the world. To avoid all appearance of evil in these days requires a saintly hardihood, and a moral courage not inferior to the daring of the three Hebrews who encountered the flames of Nebuchadnezzar's furnace rather than worship the golden image which he had set up.

In the case of women professing godliness there are trials which can be successfully met only by the highest qualities of faith and courage. It is for them to resist the humiliating servility to the follies, extravagances and wickedness of fashion, and to brand the impurity and licentiousness which the world overlooks and sometimes rewards. The serfdom of professedly Christian women to worldliness is one of the saddest aspects of unfaithfulness to Christ and his cause. To face this evil, to resist it and to break away from its bondage requires something like the spirit which animated those women of the first centuries who died for their faith. Apart from these more general views, and from occasions of trial which are unusual, there are tests in the routine of every life—trials of cruel mockings, if not of scourgings, bonds and imprisonment—trials which touch the self-esteem, the pride, the love of gain and honor. These tests spring up in some form at almost every step, and bring out the moral and religious character. The manner in which they are met, the tempers revealed, the principles manifested, the heart-depths thrown to the surface, the passions awakened, are all significant. Faithfulness in the humblest Christian life, as subjected to the common ordeals of business and society, is something hardly less precious and sublime than the testimony which others have rendered amidst the flames and smoke of martyrdom. If the palm does not belong to this fidelity under common-place and life-long trials, it is at least entitled to equal honor and reward.

Help the Editors.

We commend to many of our friends who can write, and will not, the following from "Occasional," in the Raleigh Christian Advocate. Dr. Johnson, as reported by Boswell, says that any man can write who sets doggedly about it. We have hitherto invited contributions to this paper, and still ask our brethren to give us the results of their best studies and observations, in short and carefully-prepared articles. One man, with nothing else to do, cannot make a first-rate paper. The time required for editing leaves but little for writing; and if, in addition, he has regular ministerial work, it is impossible to do anything like justice to the position. Nearly all the leading religious weeklies, North and West, have an editorial staff of from two or three to half a dozen men, besides paid contributors and correspondents. What sort of show would the New York Observer, the Christian Intelligencer, the New York Christian Advocate or the Methodist make with one editor single-handed to do the entire labor? A newspaper, to be really first-rate, must have the freshness, versatility and variety which can be secured only by able and abundant assistance. If one editor could furnish the quantity of original matter desired, the quality must of necessity become very tedious and common-place. Our Southern Methodist journals, as a class, are exceedingly good—astonishingly so when we consider the limited help which the editors have. That the best of them do not compare with the leading religious journals in the North and West is largely owing to the lack of help in the editorial department, and to the want of able and reliable contributors. There are hardly any of our Advocates that do not need the entire time and strength of two or three men; but, instead of this, scarcely any of them can afford the entire services of one. A religious journal ought to be something more than a denominational bulletin board; but vigorous thought and literary merit are not to be expected until the requisite time and talent can be secured. Will our brethren and our gifted sisters consider these things, and stir up the gift that is in them? Our papers are too poor to pay for contributions and correspondence. For ourselves we offer a large audience, and space for fitting words. We do not wish careless writing, personal controversy or dubious poetry; but, beyond this, we give margin for opinions and tastes. But to the extract from our Raleigh cotemporary. "Occasional" says:

Why do not all of our best preachers write for the church papers? Some of our ablest men contribute no little to the interest and profit of weeklies by their pen, but more of them do not. Many of them avail themselves of this opportunity to do good, and verily they do us good. But why are the pens of hundreds of others idle? The weekly paper might afford as valuable means of doing good as their pulpits do. Mr. Wesley appreciated this thing, and used the press extensively, accomplishing great results by it. Have our preachers grown wiser than he? Nay, verily, they are only lazier, and less zealous. They generally do not half the preaching he did, yet say they have no time to write! If each would do his duty in this line we might have our Advocate filled every week with first-class articles, original and fresh, to the exclusion of much borrowed matter, and also of many of our feebler contributions. Let our abler pens turn in and push aside some of us smaller fry. The assumed "dignified silence" of any man who can write, and whose soul runs over with wisdom and soul-food, is inexcusable, and becomes selfishness and pride rather than dignity. Come, brethren, help our noble editors, and feed the flock through the papers. You would write if paid for it. Then, if you do not write anyhow, you are lovers of filthy lucre.

Nashville Methodism.

Rev. Dr. R. A. Young, of Nashville, is writing some first-rate letters to the Western Methodist. We take an extract from the last one:

Have you received the "Annual Exhibit of McKendree Station, Nashville?" It is a large pamphlet of twenty-eight pages. It gives the names of the present presiding elder and stationed preacher, the names of the official board and eight hundred and sixty-eight communicants. It states what they pay, and what they pay it for. All told, they paid the last Conference year $27,412,75. The Presbyterians boast of the liberality of Dr. Palmer's church in New Orleans, and Mr. Hoyt's in Nashville. These are both noble congregations, but the McKendree congregation pays more than either of them. If you have an official board in Memphis in search of a good financial plan, let them write to Dr. D. C. Kelley, and he will send them a copy of the annual exhibit of his church. We have six or seven self-supporting Methodist congregations in this city and Edgefield, but they are neither so large nor so wealthy as McKendree. My church paid into the treasury of the Lord last year about $8,000, and this amount does not include subscriptions to the new Publishing House. Perhaps Tulip Street church in Edgefield paid about the same amount. Spurgeon says that Christ's kingdom demands money, and a great deal of it. We Methodists have been a long time learning it. To get "shouting happy," my brother, is a very desirable thing. I should not be surprised if you find Scripture for it; but if such a spiritual warming up does not thaw out your silver and gold, I reckon your religion is vain. "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."

Our Bishops' Support.

We deem it proper to invite the attention of those to whom is intrusted the support of our Bishops, to the importance of giving early attention to this duty. The amounts necessary for this purpose were duly apportioned by the General Conference among the several Annual Conferences, and by the Annual Conferences have been divided among the districts, and by the presiding elders among the several charges, so that each preacher is advised of the amount necessary to be collected in his field of labor. A proper and timely effort on the part of the preachers would in every instance secure the amount necessary to be collected by them. Too frequently, however, this duty is deferred until near the close of the year, when with other collections, required by the Discipline, it is neglected, if not altogether, at least so as to fall beneath the assessment.

The Bishops hold their annual meeting in Nashville, in May, soon after which they begin their tour of District Conferences. In every instance the money to be collected for the support of the Bishops should be paid over at the District Conferences; and if the entire assessment on the district is not paid at that time, means should then be devised for securing the balance. The traveling expenses of the Bishops must be paid by the District Conferences they attend. They are not included in the amounts collected on account of their salaries.

We have not yet received the reports from some of the Annual Conferences, and hence do not know what deficiency there is on the current year. But, so far as advised, large deficits exist in several Conferences. A timely and earnest effort on the part of presiding elders will prevent a recurrence of this evil.

We take this opportunity of requesting the chairman of the Board of Finance of any Annual Conference who has not forwarded to us the receipt of the Bishop to do so at once, and any brethren who hold receipts from Bishops will please send us the original, and not a copy.

A. H. REDFORD, Agent.
NASHVILLE, TENN., March 1, 1873.

IF you feel angry, beware lest you become revengeful.

Death of Dr. Guthrie.

The intelligence of the death of Rev. Thomas Guthrie, D. D., of the Free Church of Scotland, will be read throughout the Christian world with the deepest sorrow. No divine in Scotland, since the death of Dr. Chalmers, has occupied a higher position in public estimation, or enjoyed more warmly the affection of his countrymen and of the Christian people of all lands. Learned, able, eloquent and thoroughly evangelical, he has for many years been a burning and a shining light, guiding souls in the way of truth and of salvation. For several years past he has been in feeble health, much of the time laid aside from public labor; but his pen has never rested, and his warm heart has been ever at work in the cause of evangelical religion. Three years ago he was on his way to this country, which he had an earnest desire to visit, but he suffered so much from the disease with which he was affected that he was compelled to go ashore at Queenstown and return home. He had been appointed to preach in the chapel at Rome a part of the present winter, and only the last week we received a note from a correspondent in London, saying: "Dr. Guthrie is expected in London next week. He is decidedly better." But we learned by telegraph, on Monday last, that he had just died.

Dr. Guthrie was born at Brechin, Forfarshire, in 1803. He completed the prescribed course of study for the ministry in the University of Edinburg, and devoted two additional winters to the study of chemistry, natural philosophy and anatomy, and subsequently spent six months in pursuing the same studies in Paris. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Brechin, and in 1830 became the minister of the church of Arbirlot in his native country. In 1837 he was appointed one of the ministers of the Old Grayfriars parish in Edinburg, where he devoted himself ardently to the evangelization and elevation of the degraded population of the city, while his pulpit eloquence attracted all classes of hearers.

At the disruption in 1843 he united heartily in the organization of the Free Church, and to him almost exclusively was due the success of the effort to provide manses for all its ministers. He traveled over Scotland, and by his eloquence succeeded in moving the whole church to carry out the plan in the course of about two years. He was equally successful in advocating the system of ragged schools for the poor, and was untiring in his efforts to oppose the tide of intemperance and other vices which abounded in the metropolis and other parts of the land. When addressing the people on these subjects he was always successful in winning attention, and in producing a deep impression by his eloquence and his marvelous power of illustration. Among his published works are "The Gospel in Ezekiel," "Christ and the Inheritance of the Saints," "The Way to Life," "The City, its Sins and Sorrows," etc. He retired from the regular service of the pulpit some years ago on account of the failure of health, and has been since editor of the Sunday Magazine. He took a deep interest in the Evangelical Alliance, attended its last General Conference in Amsterdam, and was expected here at the Conference in October next.—New York Observer.

Revivals.

The Independent, of New York, gives the following summary of recent conversions in the North:

The revival list lengthens. Here are a few of the Methodist churches which report conversions: Sparta, O., 30; Highland, Wis., 40; Bimerburg, Pa., 50; Hartstown, Pa., 30; Jamaica, N. Y., 25; Spencerburg, Pa., 80; Somerton, Pa., 75; Centerville, Pa., 100; Allen Grove, Wis., 45; Clayton, Del., 15; Brewster, N. Y., 50; Huntington, L. I., 25; Carpenter's station, Pa., 45; Lexington Avenue, New York city, 120; Jane Street church, 69; Winchester, Va., 250.

Baptist churches report baptisms as follows: Plainfield, Ind., 12; Columbus, O., 19; Louisville, Ky., 45; Elyria, O., 14; Greenfield, O., 14; Union, O., 10; Amelia, O., 27; Indianapolis, Ind., 11; Lowell, Mass., 12; Greensburg, Ind., 16; Lancaster, Ky., 16; Roan county, W. Va., 28; Calhoun county, W. Va., 15; Whiteeyes Plain, O., 10; Sunbury, Pa., 22; Somerville, N. J., 22; Duckstown, Tenn., 42. The churches of Dr. Lorimer, Dr. Fulton and Mr. Pentecost, and the Bowdoin Square church in Boston are enjoying revivals.

Among the Congregational churches the one at Columbus, Ohio, of which the Rev. R. G. Hutchins lately became pastor, expects soon to receive 20 or 30 members; in Oberlin and the towns adjoining much interest prevails, and the second church in Oberlin received 31 at its last communion. Dubuque, Iowa, is still in the fervor of the awakening, and the influence of the work there is extending to the towns round about. Clay, in the same State, records 20 conversions. From the church in Lancaster, Wis., comes the good news of 125 conversions.

The Presbyterian church at Plainfield, N. J., received 62 members Sunday before last. In Bloomington, Ill., a great revival is in progress, under Mr. Hammond's ministry. Union meetings are held, in which Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist churches participate. Over 1,000 conversions were reported within the first ten days, among whom were many business men.

REV. J. F. RIGGS, editor of the Tyler Reporter, formerly member of the East Texas Conference, gave us a call this week. He represents Texas as advancing in all the elements of prosperity and as an empire in itself. The political condition in several of the Southern States will probably give a new impetus to the already immense immigration to that land of promise.

Books and Periodicals.

HOMES AND HOSPITALS, or Two Phases of Woman's Work, as Exhibited in the Labors of Amy Dutton and Agnes E. Jones. American Tract Society, Boston, 1873.

Two examples of usefulness are related in the pages of this book—the example of two devoted women giving themselves up to those charitable ministries among the sick and poor, where women are always pre-eminent. The methods, qualifications and means of doing good illustrated in the work are all worth studying. The perusal will, we think, stimulate Christian people to increased activity and self-denial in endeavors to relieve the suffering and misery around them. For sale by Kain & Co., New Orleans.

HISTORY OF PLYMOUTH CHURCH. By Noyes L. Thompson. New York: G. W. Carleton & Co., publishers.

The church is that over which Mr. Beecher has presided for the last twenty-five years. The book gives a full history of the pastorate of the notorious Brooklyn preacher, and a detailed account of the operations of the church, the house, organ, finances, mission schools and list of the membership. Plymouth church and Mr. Beecher, as we think, have been and are still a great evil—a curse rather than a blessing to this country and the world; but something may be learned from this volume in reference to the management of church affairs. For sale by Kain & Co., New Orleans.

WE HAVE RECEIVED a little volume, paper cover, entitled The Elocutionist's Annual, by J. W. Shoemaker, A. M. Philadelphia: J. W. Daughaday & Co., publishers, 1873. The work consists of a selection of pieces, in prose and verse, for school declamation. Price, twenty-five cents.

AMERICAN HOMES is an illustrated monthly. Charles H. Taylor & Co., publishers, New York. Morton's Monthly Home and School, published in Louisville, Kentucky, is a first-rate periodical. Scribner's Monthly for March, besides copious illustrations and the usual able editorial matter, contains several articles of remarkable ability and interest. Old and New for March is distinguished, as heretofore, for vigor, originality and talent. It has an article by James Martineau on God in History, and one on Theism and Atheism, by Orville Dewey. Good Health and Mental Bliss for March has been received. The Household for February reaches us late, but welcome. The Southern Cultivator for March is filled with articles suited to the season and to our climate. Published at Athens, Georgia, at $2 per annum.

THE TOBACCO WAR.—The correspondents of one of our Northern exchanges have filled several columns every week for several weeks in settling the important question whether candidates for the ministry, receiving aid from the church, ought to use tobacco. We suggest that after they have settled this question they debate another question, whether our domestic missionaries ought to drink tea or coffee. All the arguments that have been advanced on the one question will answer for the other. It is said that tobacco is unwholesome, and the same is said of tea. It is argued that the pennies given by the self-denial of poor widows should not be spent in unnecessary indulgences. Tea is not a necessity of life, for the Western nations did very well without it for ages. It is argued that the use of tobacco is the parent of drunkenness and other vices. Might it not as truthfully be said that tea-drinking is the parent of gossip and slander? It is said that tobacco is offensive; so is a close room filled with the fumes of tea. We do not recommend the use of tobacco, and we do not condemn the use of tea. But to single out one failing, as the omission to pay tithes on garden herbs, and make it the object of continual animadversion, cannot but be injurious to all that practice it.—Christian Observer.

CONCERNING the author of the beautiful hymn, "Watchman, Tell us of the Night," who died last November, in his eighty-first year, the Central Baptist has the following: Sir John Bowring, LL. D., F. R. S., born in Exeter, England, in 1792, was a man of extraordinary attainments and usefulness. His linguistic knowledge is seen in his numerous translations from the Russian, Servian, Polish, Magyar, Danish, German, Swedish, Dutch, Spanish, Portuguese and other languages. His versatility is attested by original hymns, and by works upon labor, morals, finance and commerce. But that glorious hymn, which will be sung as long as the world stands, is worth all of his other works put together.

THE Wesleyan University, at Florence, Alabama, has been turned over to the State for a normal college, which will open next fall. The State Board of Education have appropriated $5,000 for the first year, and promises $10,000 next year, to pay the faculty. Well, Methodism is truly contributing munificently to State education—Auburn and Florence both handed over to the State. We forbear comment—except this, that Alabama Methodists ought to rally with renewed interest around their only remaining institution, the Southern University. Those who know our views in regard to church education can divine our feelings.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE wonderful revival of religion in Winchester, Virginia, under the labors of the Rev. L. Rosser, of the Virginia Conference, continues without abatement of interest. According to latest accounts, three hundred and forty persons have professed faith in Christ.

A LADY who refused to give, after hearing a charity sermon, had her pocket picked as she was leaving church. On making the discovery she said: "The parson could not find the way to my pocket, but the devil did!"

Shut Your Mouth.

A curious contribution has recently been made to the literature of sleep, by Mr. George Catlin, well known as a writer on the North American Indians. This gentleman is of opinion that a large number of the ills to which civilized flesh is subject arises from the fact that people, when they cease to be savages, foolishly persist in the baleful practice of sleeping with their mouths open! That Mr. Catlin is in dead earnest, and not poking fun at us, is evident from the whole tone of his book. Divested of its rhetorical wrappings, Mr. Catlin's main argument may be stated as follows: Among his friends, the Indians, he has proved that such things as premature deaths from disease, as well as mental and physical deformities, are almost unknown. Among civilized peoples, on the other hand, these things are only too well known. The only difference in the habits of savages and civilized people capable of accounting for this state of matters is that, while the former sleep with their mouths shut, the latter not unfrequently sleep with their mouths open. The Indian mother presses together the lips of her sleeping babe, till the habit of shutting the mouth is irrevocably formed. The English mother places her child in a close, stifling atmosphere, in which it is obliged to gasp for breath. The consequence is that the savage inhales through his nostrils an atmosphere heated and purified by a special apparatus, while the other inspires through his mouth an atmosphere too cold and impure for the delicate respiratory organs. Hence the prevalence in civilized countries of bronchial and pulmonary diseases, and especially of that fell scourge, consumption. Mr. Catlin buttresses his main argument by others of various sorts, not the least convincing of them being contained in his amusing illustrative sketches. No doubt he rides his hobby too hard and too far, but what he says is not devoid of a good deal of truth. In another of its aspects, the habit referred to is equally reprehensible. Every one who has seen and heard paterfamilias take his post-prandial nap in certain positions in his easy chair, must admit that sleeping open-mouthed is a practice not conducive to beauty, either facial or sonorous. But on sanitary and æsthetic grounds, therefore, we cannot do better than advise the reader to practice in sleep the laconic injunction which forms the title of Mr. Catlin's book—Shut your mouth.—Chambers' Journal.

PALESTINE EXPLORATION.—The English are thoroughly exploring and mapping out all of Palestine west of the Jordan. The understanding is that the trans-Jordanic country shall be left to the American Exploration Society, which was organized two years ago. This expedition is now ready to start. Lieutenant Steever, of the Third United States Cavalry, who commands the expedition, and whose name, we have good reason to hope, may be as well known by-and-by as that of Lieutenant Lynch, is now in Beyrout, getting ready to take the field early in March, or as soon as the rainy season is over. Prof. Paine, formerly of Robert College, in Constantinople, is with him, and will have charge of the archæological department. Nicoll, the artist, who is now taking lessons in photography, will join them shortly. Edward A. Van Dyck, son of the veteran Arabic scholar, will accompany the party as interpreter. The cost of the expedition, which, of course, can make only a reconnoissance survey, will not be much short of $15,000. It is also proposed to send out two assistant engineers to begin the construction of the map, which will raise the expense to nearly $20,000.

WE DEEPLY REGRET, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, to learn that Mount Zion church, on Louisa circuit, was destroyed by fire on Sunday, the twenty-third of February. The regular service was held on that day by the pastor, Rev. James O. Moss, and the congregation had dispersed and returned to their homes, and before sunset their commodious house of worship was in ruins. It is supposed that the fire was communicated from the stove or stove-pipe.

THE Dutch endeavored to extirpate the nutmeg from all the islands of the Moluccas except Banda, and they had all the trees removed thither for better inspection; but this attempted monopoly was completely frustrated by the mace-feeding wood pigeons. These birds conveyed and dropped the fruit beyond the assigned limits, spreading it over the whole of the islands of the Mindanao archipelago, from the Moluccas to New Guinea.

J. E. CARNES, formerly a preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and at one time editor of the Christian Advocate published at Galveston, died at Houston, Texas, February 26. He was suddenly struck with an apoplectic fit, and died in a few hours. He was deprived of his reason from the beginning of the attack until death. Mr. Carnes was a man of rare gifts and of great infirmities of character. For several years past he has been connected with the New Jerusalem or Swedenborgian Church.

IN OUR obituary column this week is a notice of the death of two noble boys, the sons of our brother, Rev. S. S. Scott, presiding elder of the Homer district, Louisiana Conference. The parents have our sympathy in this heavy affliction.

THE General Conference of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America will meet in the city of Augusta, Georgia, March 19, 1873.

AN EVIL MIND will be sure to put the worst construction on another's actions; who can stand before envy?

As we go to press, says the Central Christian Advocate, a letter from our Washington correspondent informs us that Bishops Janes, Ames, Simpson, Harris and Foster have been in Washington city consulting with Rev. Dr. Newman concerning the establishment of a Methodist university at the capital. A gentleman of wealth and benevolence has made a proposition which is under consideration, and may result in a university under the patronage of our church. The letter will be given next week.

You may have seen the children of some family walking to church, all clothed in a different color. Yet are they all children of one parent, all brothers and sisters. So the various denominations of God's believing people.—Toplady.

MARRIED.

LYNCH—DANIELS.—At the residence of Felix Barne, Esq., Algiers, on the sixth of March, 1873, by the Rev. Lewis A. Reed, Mr. John P. Lynch, of the parish of St. Mary, to Miss Ada A. Daniels, of Algiers, Louisiana.

CHESHIRE—ALDRIDGE.—At the residence of the bride's father, February 6, 1873, by the Rev. J. L. Wright, Miss Sue Cheshire to Mr. Oliver C. Aldridge, all of Morehouse parish, Louisiana.

TAYLOR—TURPIN.—By the same, at the residence of the bride's father, February 18, 1873, Miss Emma C. Taylor to Mr. Frank W. Turpin, all of Morehouse parish, Louisiana.

PHILLIPS—PITTS.—By the same, in Bayville, Louisiana, February 27, Miss Katie E. Phillips to Mr. J. Newton Pitts, all of Richland parish, Louisiana.

Do You Get Your Paper?—Subscribers will oblige us by giving prompt notice when their papers do not come regularly. Everything in our power will be done to correct irregularities. We have had very few complaints, and those mostly from offices which are reached by cities where we have reason to believe irregularity prevails in the transmission of the mails. This we may not be able to remedy, but will if we can.

Life Insurance.—The attention of our readers is directed to the advertisement of the Southern Life Insurance Company, which will be found in our columns this issue. The very clear and able report of Mr. J. H. Miller, president of the New Orleans Branch, for the year ending February 22, 1873, is before us, in neat pamphlet form, from which it appears that the year has been one of great prosperity, increasing the net assets of the company during the year 1872 from $1,133,288 to $1,334,483, a gain of over $400,000. Branch offices have been established at Shreveport, Louisiana, and Montgomery, Alabama, which have been prosperous, and flourishing auxiliary offices are in operation at Jackson, Vicksburg, Canton and Natchez, Mississippi; Galveston, Houston, San Antonio, Austin, Jefferson, Dallas, Sherman, Palestine and Tyler, Texas; and Thibodaux, Shreveport, Natchitoches, Baton Rouge, Monroe, Plaquemine, Hendersonville, Houma, Franklin and New Iberia, Louisiana.

The Babcock Fire Engine.—The Babcock Fire Engine, ordered for Shreveport, arrived yesterday by steamer Robert E. Lee, and will be on exhibition at Exposition building till Saturday. We congratulate the citizens of Shreveport in having such a reliable fire engine. Mr. C. K. Foote, president of the Planters' and Merchants' Insurance Company of Mobile, in a letter to A. M. Granger, agent of the Babcock company, says:

I esteem it a pleasure to give a testimonial of the great merit of the Babcock Fire Engine, the most efficient fire extinguisher now known. When exhibited in contrast with the property saved this engine is invaluable.

I have never known it fail to extinguish fire when applied, and indeed it cannot fail.

In my opinion no fire department can be complete and efficient without the Babcock Engine.

Very truly yours,

We call special attention to the Southern educational agency, established with a view to supply a want long felt by the leading educators of the South, viz.: to put those desiring the services of well-qualified teachers in communication with such, and to aid teachers in obtaining suitable situations and salary; to sell, rent or exchange school properties, and to supply, at lowest cash prices, books, pianos, philosophical and chemical apparatus, and everything needful for educational purposes. We copy from a circular before us the following extracts:

Ex-Governor Thomas H. Watts, of Alabama, says:

I very cheerfully commend your educational agency to public patronage. I have signed my name as one of your references. I wish you much success.

Rev. B. M. Palmer, D. D., of New Orleans, says:

The object proposed in your circular is altogether praiseworthy, and I see no reason for withholding from you the use of my name, if you deem it of any service.

General G. T. Beauregard says:

Inclosed please find your circular in relation to your Southern educational agency, which I have signed with pleasure, as one of your references. I consider its object highly praiseworthy and of great future advantage to the South.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society.—We copy from the New York Chevalier the following just remarks on the annual statement of the above-mentioned society, which appeared in our paper two weeks since:

We desire to call particular attention to the annual report of the Equitable Life Insurance Company for the year ending December 31, 1872. The books of the company were closed to make the statement January 22, 1873. The progress of this imperial society is little less than marvelous. In 1872, as in each of the three years preceding, it leads all the other life companies in the volume of business done, writing during the past year of trials, uncertainties and storms in the life insurance world no less than twelve thousand, four hundred and ninety-one policies, by which $41,911,979 was insured. In the amount of insurance written this exceeds the business of any year of any company in the world. In the number of policies written it was never but once excelled in the history of life insurance, and then by the Equitable itself in the harvest year of 1869. The assets of the Equitable have reached the sum of $20,000,000 (February 1,) and are increasing by an annual income of nearly $8,500,000. * * * Of the management of the Equitable it is unnecessary to speak. Their record is written in imperishable characters in the history of its success. Every agent of the company knows their sterling qualities of head and heart; and every agent ought to be proud of his connection with them. But the statement is their best encomium. Read that and see what energy, hopefulness and heartiness can do.

A Bargain.—The Septoline Oil Company, at No. 82 Camp and 15 Dauphine street, have bought cheap, for cash, a large invoice of A or No. 1 sun hinge chimneys and B sun hinge chimneys, which they offer for sale to retail grocers and other dealers at remarkably low prices.

Purchasers will do well to examine the elegant assortment of glassware, lamps, lamp trimmings, oils and burning fluids to be found at the establishment of Mr. W. A. Kuwalski, No. 183 Tchoupitoulas street.

Wood and Coal.—We call attention to the advertisement of William Velden, corner of Jackson and Prytania streets, dealer in wood and coal.

Anderson's Art Studio, No. 181 Canal street.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

Undisputed Facts.—It has been truly and significantly said that domestic happiness is more dependent on good digestion than virtuous creeds or moral codes. If the dogma holds, the oracle can be consulted by a prompt application to Price, the Delphic author of the Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Wherever, within the length and breadth of the land, Price's Bitters have penetrated, every household has been illumined by the sunshine of an unclouded joy, and every family revels in the sweets of health and contentment. The sparkling eye, the ruddy cheek, the cheerful smile and happy glance, no less than the elastic step and the unfaltering tread, what are they but the eloquent telltales of some vitalizing elixir? No secret botany holds the charm, no scientific alchemy creates the spell. The days of miracles are gone; the magic, mysteriously-working wonders have passed away, and the age—a plain, practical one—gives us a simple tonic that, by a happy amalgamation, restores to energy and strength the enervated system. Take Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters, and you bid an eternal farewell to such unwelcome guests as dyspepsia, indigestion, nervousness, neuralgia, flatulency and debility.

An Important Consideration.—Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills are Purely Vegetable, and are adapted to young and old, male and female, and may be taken at all times, without restraint of occupation, without change of living, without diet, and without the fear of taking cold, during all kinds of weather and in all climates.

A Beautiful Complexion.—When the blood is impure the skin presents an unclean, rough and sallow appearance, often accompanied by blotches, pimples, etc. It is a foul corruption generated in the blood which nature strives to throw off. Dr. Tutt's Sarsaparilla and Queen's Delight act directly on the depurating organs, of which the skin is one. By its use the skin is rendered soft, smooth and rosente, and the whole system is renovated. mh13 1t

Remove from the blood those wastes arising from the action of the system which, if allowed to remain in the circulation, give rise to diseases which speedily destroy life. Nature has appointed the kidneys and liver as her agents, by whose action impurities shall be eliminated from the system; and when these agents are torpid or debilitated, or disabled from any cause for their business, Hamilton's Buchu and Dandelion imparts fresh life and vigor to them, and makes at least the best blood purifiers one can have. WOMAN'S FRIEND AND STEAM WASHER

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND SOLD.

WILL CLEANSE YOUR CLOTHES WITHOUT RUBBING.

EVERY ONE SOLD IS FULLY WARRANTED.

NO FLUIDS OR EXTRA SOAP USED.

It consumes less soap, less time and less fuel than the usual method. It saves Labor, Wear and Tear, and the Annoyance of Wash-day. It requires no attention while the process of cleansing goes on. It will do the Washing of the Family while you are eating breakfast and doing up dishes.

Steam has long been known as the most powerful agent in removing dirt, grease and stains from clothing, and bleaching them white. Papermakers have for many years used steam in cleaning and bleaching their rags, and they succeed in making, by its agency, the whitest packing from the gutter perfectly pure and white. Until the invention of the STEAM WASHER or WOMAN'S FRIEND, although often attempted, no method had been discovered of applying Steam directly to the clothing, which could be used in a portable manner for domestic purposes. The WOMAN'S FRIEND washes without labor. It will do the washing of an ordinary family in from thirty minutes to an hour. The STEAM WASHER is superior to all other devices for the following reasons:

1. It does its own work, thereby saving a large portion of the time usually taken in a family.
2. It uses much less soap than is required by any other method.
3. It requires no attention whatever while the process of cleaning is going on. A lady can do her washing while she is eating her breakfast and doing up the breakfast dishes.
4. Clothing wears double the time, washed in this Washer, that it will washed by a machine, or by hand-labor or a washboard.
5. Lace Curtains and all fine fabrics are washed in a superior manner. For Flannels this Washer is most desirable, as it will not full them, as a machine or hand-rubbing does. All fabrics, from the finest lace to a bed-blanket, can be washed perfectly and with ease without the rubbing-board.

IT IS TRULY A LABOR AND CLOTHES-SAVING INVENTION.

The Child's Corner.

WHO SPOKE THAT WICKED WORD?

Who spoke that wicked word
Which fell upon my ear?
Was it the little golden bird
That sung so sweetly here?

Was it the lamb at play,
Amid the flowery mead,
The lovely children every day
Come out to pet and feed?

Was it the gentle dog,
By all the boys caressed,
Or breathed it from the croaking frog—
That wicked word expressed?

Was it the stately ox
That labors with the plow,
Or, coiled among the roots and rocks,
Is there a serpent now?

"Not I," replied the bird,
And flashed his golden wing;
"I never speak a wicked word—
I only praise and sing."

"Not I," the gentle lamb;
"I would not be so mean."
"Not I," the frog; "low as I am,
I speak no word unclean."

"If I could speak I'd praise,"
The noble ox replied;
"Only to love my voice I'd raise."
"So I," poor Carlo cried.

Thus said they all; but who—
Who spoke that wicked word?
My little prattler, was it you,
And not the beast or bird?

But no reply is made—
'Tis silence all around;
My gentle one, I am afraid
You will be guilty found.

"Father, forgive, I pray,"
As to his bed he crept,
I heard my little darling say,
And then he sweetly slept.

My child will never dare
To speak a wicked word;
His contrite heart and earnest prayer
His father saw and heard.

The Wrong Change.

John West and Felix Grover came out of a store in which they had been buying some pears. John had given his money to Felix and asked him to pay for both.

As Felix was looking over his money he exclaimed: "This is cpital! The old fellow has given us back too much change. Come, we will go somewhere else and buy some candy. What an old goose he is to cheat himself! But that is his lookout."

"I think it is our lookout, for we know it and he don't," answered John West.

"Catch me carrying back money! It is his own work. He cheated himself. I gave him money enough. He asks too much for his pears anyhow."

"He told us his price, Felix, and we agreed to give it to him by saying we would take his pears. No matter if he asked $50 a dozen, we are bound to pay him now."

"I'll be whipped if I pay him a cent back."

"We shall both deserve to be whipped if we don't pay him back. Come, let us go right in before he finds out his mistake himself and comes after us."

"Yes, he would be after us for a quarter of a cent. He is a real skinflint, and that is one reason I like to get something out of him."

"What he does is nothing to us. Because he is mean, shall we be dishonest?"

"I don't call it dishonest to let such a mistake go—a mistake a man made himself."

"Do you call it honest?"

"Well, not exactly."

"I have an ambition to be exactly honest. So give me my five cents and I will go in and pay my part. You can do as you please."

"That will just blow me up. If you pay five cents he will know I ought to. I should not think you would want to get me into a scrape. I should think you would rather cheat old Gripes than disgrace a cousin."

"I shall do neither. I have more money in my purse. I shall pay him ten cents and tell him of his mistake, so that will settle it nicely."

And before Felix could reply John West darted round the corner and in at the store.

"You made a mistake, sir, in giving us change."

"I guess not, young man. I seldom do that."

"Yes, sir, you made a mistake of ten cents."

"What! do you say I ought to pay you ten cents?"

"Oh, no, sir; you gave us ten cents too much."

"Bless me! oh! uh! you owe me ten cents? That is quite a different thing."

"Here is the money, sir," and John handed it to the shopman, who could not help being mortified that he had showed so clearly that if the mistake had been against himself he would have been slow to make it right.

"Well," he said, "you are an uncommonly honest boy."

"I should not call it more than common honesty, sir, to return these ten cents to you."

"Ah, well! to be sure, a boy of common honesty would, of course, do it. Still many boys would not—that is, some boys I know."

John West thought to himself that the shopman's standard of morals was about up to that of his Cousin Felix. They were not exactly honest themselves, and so they suspected others were not, and a clear case of simple honesty surprised them.

When John returned to Felix, who had begun to feel quite ashamed of himself, the latter said, "You shall not pay for my meanness, John," and took out five cents.

"No, no, Felix; it is a trifle. I have paid it. Let it pass now."

"John," said Felix, as they walked on, "I wouldn't steal half a cent, any more than you would, but somehow I—I am not up to you in clear, sheer, right up-and-down honesty. Now what is the reason? I like noble, generous deeds, and yet I was going to do something neither noble nor generous."

"My father and mother always made me exact in regard to the property of others, even in the smallest thing, and I suppose the habit is now strong, so that my first thought is to—to—to be honest, I suppose. I cannot think of any other word, though I did not mean to set myself up for so very good."

"John, I am heartily ashamed of myself, and the way in which you feel and act has given me a clearer idea of honesty and dishonesty than I ever had before. I used, of course, to think outright stealing dishonesty, but any little advantage one could take of another, such as we might have taken to-day about the ten cents, I called good luck, and did not think of its real character."

"Did you ever read the 'Little Merchants?'"

"No. What is it about?"

"It is a book my father gave me years ago. The nobleness of honesty and the meanness of dishonesty, as acted out in boys, took strong hold of me at an early age. There were two boys who set up for merchants on a small scale. At first they sold fruit in the market-place at Naples. Pedro would turn up the fair side of a melon and sell an unsound one on any one who could be imposed on, such as a child or a customer who was not very sharp."

"Ah, yes! He thought that was a lucky hit."

"But Francisco would frankly say so if he had a melon with any defect, and offer it for a lower price. Then they changed their business and offered sugar-plums for sale. They provided themselves with the standard measure, the price of which was a certain small coin. They were largely patronized by little folks of small means, and for awhile they had a flourishing business; but the firm was soon dissolved.

"While Francisco gave full and fair measure, and Pedro seemed to do the same, it was found out by the children that when poured out Pedro's plums were less than Francisco's. It seems that Pedro had put a false bottom to his measure, thus cheating the children who bought of him every time he made a sale."

"How did the business turn out?"

"As you might suppose. When Francisco was well known he was respected and trusted; when Pedro was well known his bench was broken to pieces by his indignant customers, and he was hooted from the market."

"I must say, John, that I feel a new ambition rising in my heart—the ambition to be exactly honest. Let us go home and read that story."

Sunday School Visitor.

Saved by a Nut.

Some years ago there was an old German count, who was a good Christian man, and who was saved from death, by the kindness of God, in a very marked manner. You know we read in the Bible how Daniel, who was such a good man, had a great many enemies, who hated him just because he was so good. This has often been the case since Daniel's time. And this was the case with the good German count of whom I am now speaking. There were a number of people in the place where he lived who hated him for his religion; and they carried their hatred so far that they resolved to kill him. And in order to do this without being found out they hired a wicked man to go into his castle one night and kill him while asleep in his bed.

The arrangements were all made, and the night was fixed on which this dreadful deed was to be done. The good count had no idea of the danger that was hanging over him. It so happened that on the evening of the very night on which his enemies had agreed to murder him he had a company of young people at his castle. He was very fond of children, but having none of his own he had invited his nephews and nieces to spend the evening with him. They had a merry time together, and the evening passed off very pleasantly. The count told them interesting stories, and got up amusing games, and had a good supply of apples and pears and grapes and nuts; and they enjoyed themselves very much. After they were gone the count went quietly to bed, as usual.

About midnight the murderer, who had managed to creep into the castle during the day, and hidden himself away, came silently into the chamber of the count. The old man was fast asleep, and a night-lamp was burning on the table. The murderer was armed with a long, sharp dagger, which glittered in his right hand as he gradually drew near the bed with a soft and careful step. But suddenly, when he was only a few feet from the bed, a loud cracking noise was heard sounding through the still chamber. It awoke the count. He sat up in bed. He saw the murderer approaching him. He seized a pistol, which he always kept on his pillow, and, pointing it to the man, he said: "If you move another step I'll shoot you!" Then with his other hand he rung the bell violently. Pretty soon his servants rushed into the room. The murderer was taken prisoner, and the wicked men who had hired him to do that dreadful deed were found out and punished.

But what made the noise which woke the count? It was a nut lying on the floor. It happened that one of the boys of the company the count had had there the evening before had dropped a nut on the floor in going through his uncle's room. And God, that God "who telleth the number of the stars," and rules them in all their greatness, had caused that nut to fall just where the murderer's foot would tread upon it, that the noise of the crushing would wake the count in time to save his life.—Dr. Newton.

PASCAL'S CONFESSION.—"I love poverty because Jesus Christ loved it. I love wealth because it gives me the means of assisting the wretched. I keep faith with all men. I do not render evil to those who do it to me; but I desire a state for them like unto my own, in which I receive neither good nor evil from the hand of man. I endeavor to be just, truthful, sincere to all men, and I have a tenderness of heart for those to whom God has united me more closely; and, whether I am alone or in the sight of men, in all my actions I have in sight God, who must judge them, and to whom I have consecrated them all.

"These are my sentiments, and all the days of my life I bless my Redeemer, who has put them into me, and who, from a man full of misery, concupiscence, pride and ambition, has, by the strength of his grace, made a man exempt from all evils. And to this grace all the glory is due, since I have in myself nothing but misery and error."

Farm, Garden and Household.

Hints for March.

The spring seems to be opening unusually early, so much so that a majority of our agriculturists find themselves behind time with their operations. Corn-planting, however, has in many instances already occupied the attention of farmers, and should now be pushed to completion with all the force and energy at command. As a rule, early corn does best, and the sooner it is off of hand the more attention will the planter be able to bestow upon the other crops. On hill or worn lands it is bad economy to cultivate corn without liberal applications of manure of some kind. The best and most reliable manure for this crop is cotton-seed in some form, and these should be husbanded and applied with more care than is usually practiced. There is less labor and more satisfaction in producing one hundred bushels on five acres than on ten, besides the increased intrinsic value of the land thus improved.

Preparations for cotton-planting should not be lost sight of during this month, and, if the weather is propitious, a portion of the crop should be planted toward the close. By planting early of varieties that mature early, and by using superphosphates liberally, a fair return is secured, even should the worms destroy the foliage at the usual period of their coming. In any event, the farmer will reap a liberal reward for his labor and investment, given in the way of thorough preparation; early planting, liberal manuring and careful, intelligent cultivation.

If sweet potatoes have not already been bedded out, this matter should be attended to without delay. And in the meantime the plat designed for this crop should be deeply and thoroughly pulverized. There is no more valuable crop for home use known to our Southern country than the sweet potato, especially in the piny-woods region, and we trust it will not be neglected.

The spring comes to us with most flattering promise, and we trust that our farmers will neglect nothing on their part to secure a full and complete fruition of the hopes inspired by this pleasing, buoyant, blooming opening of the season.—Rural Southland.

STARTING EARLY POTATOES.—A correspondent of the Cottage Gardener says: "To have a few early potatoes I have found the following system answer well: I plant my potato-sets in pots, say about five or six inches in diameter; the soil I use is a pure turfy maiden loam and charred earth, with a little soot. Being in pots, they can be started wherever there is a little heat. While they are coming on in the pots, leaves and a little manure are put up in a bit or frame; after the bed is in a fit condition of heat the surface is covered eight inches deep with half-rotten leaves. When the heat is up the pots may be plunged in this material, and the plants kept in the same pots till the young tubers are the size of large peas or small marbles. This can easily be ascertained by turning them out of the pots.

"I consider the chief advantage derivable from this system is that, as they are confined in the pots, only a limited supply of nutriment is afforded, which causes the plants to tuber much sooner than would otherwise be the case.

"Whenever I find that the young potatoes are as large as I have stated I immediately [illegible] off the top soil the pots were plunged in. If I find the heat is deficient I add a little new warm manure to the inside of the bed, and turn it over. Then, having had some good dry, turfy soil and charred or burned earth, with the mixture of a little soot, the bed is covered over to the depth of fourteen or fifteen inches; the potato-plants are next turned carefully out of their pots, and planted in a furrow in rows in the new soil after it has attained the natural warmth of the bed.

"I never use any manure, but a little soil is put on drills after the plants are established. By keeping them near the glass, and well aired at every favorable opportunity, a good crop of fine, naturally-flavored potatoes will be obtained."

SALT AS A FERTILIZER.—Some of the New York nurserymen have found very great advantage from the application of salt to their nursery-grounds, as well as to farm crops. Twenty bushels to the acre is the usual quantity. Facility of access to some of the salt-works in that State gives them a chance for a full supply at a low rate—about twenty-five cents per bushel, at which they consider it a cheap manure. It has also proved a very valuable application to pear-trees, at the rate of about four handfuls to each tree, spread about. It seems to give a vigorous and healthy growth, and they are very rarely troubled with blight. Scoring the trunk of the tree with a pen-knife, from the ground to the forks of the branches, is also practiced with good success. Where the growth is rapid both these processes are highly recommended.—Practical Farmer.

REMOVING TAR-SPOTS.—The old remedy for removing tar is butter; tar is soluble in fat, and especially in butter; when this is left on the tar-spot for some time, both butter and tar are easily washed out by a sponge, with soap and water. It is the same with resinous wagon grease. Recently Dr. Brikerd announced that he had discovered that a creamy mixture of powdered extract of liquorice, with oil of aniseed, will easily dissolve tar, resin, pitch, Venice turpentine, etc. It is afterward washed out with soap and warm water.—Manufacturer and Builder.

CRISP MUFFINS.—To make crisp muffins use one pint sifted Indian meal, one pint of milk or cream, two eggs, a teaspoonful of salt, a spoonful of butter or lard; drop the batter in a hot, greased pan or oven, by spoonful, taking care that your muffins do not touch. Let them bake till crisp and brown.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder to larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

WANTED—MEN WHO WANT TO MAKE Money.—Here is an opportunity for making money rarely presented in a lifetime. We have got the best and surest-selling article ever invented, that every housekeeper buys on sight. It is a sad Earnest, weighing only six pounds, that can be used with or without a stove. It will do all the duties of any sized stove or range, and will do as much work with one quart of fuel—charcoal, chips, coke, corncobs, wood or soft coal—as can be done on any stove with one-half bushel. It will boil, broil, roast, toast, bake and stew. It is the best flat-iron heater in the world. Its economy in saving fuel is marvelous. You have no smoke, gas or heat in the room. It sells the year round. Retail price only $2. Thousands are sold every week. Any man with a small capital can clear from $20 to $40 per day by owning the right of any good county, and a whole State is of incalculable worth to a man of enterprise. We will send a sample Furnace to any part of the United States on receipt of $2. Address, for circular,

A CHALLENGE
Is extended to the world to place before the public a better Cough or Lung remedy than
ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.

IT HAS NO EQUAL. Read what well-known Druggists of Tennessee say about Allen's Lung Balsam:

SPRINGFIELD, TENN., Sept. 13, 1872.

GENTLEMEN: Please ship us six dozen Allen's Lung Balsam. We have not a bottle in the store. It has more reputation than any Cough Medicine we have ever sold. Have been in the drug business twenty-seven years. We mean just what we say.

Very truly yours, HURT & TANNER.

What the Doctors Say.

Drs. Wilson & Ward, physicians and druggists, write from Centerville, Tennessee: "We purchased Allen's Lung Balsam, and it sells rapidly. We are practicing physicians, as well as druggists, and take pleasure in recommending a great remedy, such as we know this to be."

Physicians do not recommend a medicine which has no merit. What they say about Allen's Lung Balsam can be taken as a fact. Let all afflicted test it at once, and be convinced of its real merits.

It is harmless to the most delicate child. It contains no Opium in any form.

Directions accompany each bottle.

is creating extraordinary interest wherever known. The following is a sample of the evidence that is pouring in from all directions:

(COPY.)
NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 21, 1873.

Two years ago my wife was pronounced by physicians to be fast going into consumption, and I was constrained by a friend to use Smith's Pulmonic Syrup, and since the use of it her recovery has been remarkable; in fact almost entirely cured. The medicine we consider INVALUABLE.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The weather has been clear and pleasant. The recent falling off in the receipts of cotton at all the ports seems to have had but little influence in popular estimates, which range from less than 3,600,000 bales up to 3,800,000 and 3,900,000 bales.

The river is 3 feet 4 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the seventh instant:

|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... 16,744 |
| Lake | 65 |
| Arkansas | 2,595 |
| Mobile | 994 |
| Florida | 24 |
| Texas | 190 |
| Total | 20,612 |

On Saturday the market opened with a good inquiry, but mostly on the part of buyers, who claimed concessions of ⅛@⅛c. Factors at the same time evinced a disposition to meet the demand freely, and a fair business was done during the morning at easier prices for the general run of the offerings, but with little or no falling off in clean white cottons and the higher grades. Later in the day the advantage appeared to be still more in favor of buyers, and offers were accepted, even for the better qualities, which would have been previously refused, while the business in good ordinary and low middling was at a decline of fully ⅛c., some transactions showing a falling off of ⅛c. The sales summed up 4,450 bales. On Monday, under limited competition among buyers, scarcity of freight-room and high freights checking the demand, as well as unfavorable dispatches from Liverpool and New York, the market ruled still lower, the prices paid indicating a further decline of ⅛c. In low middling, and ⅛@⅛c. In the lower grades, good ordinary closing at 17@17⅛c., low middling at 18⅛@18⅜c., and middling at 19⅛c. The sales embraced 4,300 bales, including 800 late in the day. On Tuesday the scarcity of freight-room and discouraging telegrams from Liverpool and New York had a still more unfavorable influence, and the market was unusually demoralized, prices ruling lower but showing great irregularity, and making quotations to a great extent nominal. Middling sold as low as 19c., low middling down to 17⅜c., and even less, and the poorer qualities at our inside figures for those grades. The reported decline was ⅛@⅛c., but in many cases the lower grades showed a still greater falling off. The sales were confined to 3,800 bales. The unsettled condition of the market and great irregularity of prices compel us to give an unusually wide range to our quotations.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 12,550 bales, against 18,850 for the corresponding time last week and 14,350 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 935,418 bales, against 809,071 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 514,518 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 147,548 to Great Britain, of 49,200 to France, and of 121,208 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

|---|---|
| Low ordinary | 13¾ @ 14¼ |
| Ordinary | 14¾ @ 15¾ |
| Good ordinary | 16⅜ @ 17⅛ |
| Low middling | 17¼ @ 18⅛ |

CORN.—The supplies have been in excess of the demand, and prices have declined. On Saturday 1,600 sacks sold at 80c. ₱ bushel for white, while on Monday 5,600 sacks sold at 72c. for yellow mixed, and 73@75c. for white.

OATS.—On Saturday 2,000 sacks sold at 48@50c., while on Monday 300 sacks sold at 48c. ₱ bushel.

PORK.—On Tuesday holders were asking $17.25 ₱ bbl. for mess, and 50 bbls. sold at $17.25, and 175 bbls. extra heavy at $17.37½ ₱ bbl; 250 bbls. old mess sold at $16.75 ₱ bbl. New mess is retailing at $17.50@17.75 ₱ bbl.

BACON—Has continued very firm, with a light supply and good demand. On Monday 175 casks sold at 7½@7⅞c. for shoulders, 9¼c. for clear rib sides, and 9¾@9⅞c. ₱ lb. for clear sides.

HAMS.—On Tuesday, with a reduced stock, 50 tierces sugar-cured sold, to arrive, at 13¾c., 50 do. at 13¼c., 25 do. at 14c., and 50 do. at 14½c. ₱ lb. Choice was retailing at 14½c. ₱ lb.

LARD.—On Tuesday 675 tierces sold at 8c. for kettle-rendered, 8½@8⅝c. for refined, and 600 kegs at 9¼c. for kettle-rendered, and 9¾c. ₱ lb. for refined.

DRY SALT MEAT—Has continued in light supply, with a good demand. On Saturday 100 casks and boxes were sold at 7½c. for rib sides, 7¾c. for clear rib sides, 8¼c. for clear sides, and 8¾c. for hams, and 5 casks and 11 boxes shoulders at 6¾c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 114¾@115 (against 115¼ at New York,) and, after a fair business, closed at the opening rates (against 115¼ at New York.)

The sales of silver have been confined to limited retail transactions. American half dollars are quoted at 110@111, and Mexican dollars at 1¼ ₱ cent. premium in gold for new, and 2¼ ₱ cent. for old.

UNENDING.

I see that all these things come to an end,
The things we glory in, the things we fear;
Annihilation's shadow still doth lend
Its gloom to every pleasant thing and dear.
Each heavy burden under which we bend
Will some day from our wearied shoulders move;
One thing alone there is which hath no end—
There is no end to love.

There is an end to kisses and to sighs,
There is an end to laughter and to tears;
An end to fair things that delight our eyes,
An end to pleasant sounds that charm our ears;
An end to enmity's foul libelling,
And to the gracious praise of tender friend;
There is an end to all but one sweet thing—
To love there is no end.

That warrior carved an empire with his sword,
The empire now is but like him—a name;
That statesman spoke, and by a burning word
Kindled a nation's heart into a flame;
Now naught is left but ashes, and we bring
Our homage to new men—to them we bend;
There is an end to all but one sweet thing—
To love there is no end.

All beauty fades away, or else, alas!
Men's eyes grow dim, and they no beauty see;
The glorious shows of Nature pass and pass,
Quickly they come, as quickly do they flee;
And he who hears the voice of welcoming
Hears next the slow, sad farewell of his friend;
There is an end to all but one sweet thing—
To love there is no end.

And for ourselves—our father, where is he?
Gone, and a memory alone remains;
There is no refuge on a mother's knee
For us, grown old and sad with cares and pains;
Brotherless, sisterless, our way we wend
To Death's dark house, from which we shall not rove;
And so we cease; yet one thing hath no end—
There is no end to love.

All the Year Round.

New York Statistically Considered.

The secretary of the New York Tract Society, the Rev. Lewis R. Jackson, publishes each year what may be termed the moral statistics of our city. Those of 1873 have just appeared, and tell a story which may well excite thinking. The population of New York is 942,292, divided into 175,400 families, and living in 64,029 houses. This makes an average of more than two families and a half, or over fourteen persons, to each dwelling. Of the whole number of inhabitants, 523,198 are natives of the United States, and 419,094 are from foreign countries. Of the natives a considerable proportion are children of foreigners. The valuation of city property is $1,104,098,087, and the city taxes are $30,000,000 a year. We spend $3,000,000 per year on public education, and the same sum on our police, and $7,000,000 (estimated) on amusements. This latter sum must be charged very largely to the strangers who fill the city in the fall and winter. Upward of 200,000 immigrants land at Castle Garden every year.

For the moral culture of this mixed population we have 470 churches and chapels of all kinds, with accommodations for 350,000 persons, or over one-third of the total population. There are 250 Protestant churches, with accommodations for 250,000 worshipers. The Catholic churches, it must be remembered, have each several congregations on the Sabbath day. The number of children in the city between the ages of five and fifteen is estimated at 200,000. We wish the number could be ascertained by an exact census. In the schools under the control of the Board of Education there is an average attendance of 103,481 pupils; in the schools of all other kinds there are supposed to be 35,000 more. This gives 138,481 school-going children for the city. Mr. Brace estimates the number of children in the city who go to no school at 40,000, Mr. Jackson at 10,000, which shows a very considerable disagreement between these two gentlemen. Not until we have compulsory education can we have an exact census of the children of the city capable of going to school. We think it will be found that the number who either do not go to school, or go so irregularly as to derive no benefit from attendance, is far beyond the estimate of Mr. Jackson.

There are 7,670 drinking-places in the city. The money spent in these is variously estimated. It is probably over $30,000,000, or ten times the sum expended for public education. The number of crimes of violence is a little more than one for each drinking-place yearly, or, altogether, 7,860. As to church-membership, the total of Protestant communicants in the city is 72,000. Catholics are church-members by baptism. When it is considered that New York is more a foreign than an American city, the odds against which earnest Protestant Christians contend are tremendous; yet in no city of the world are there to be found more laborious and devoted Christians. With its magnificent resources, New York ought to be one of the most attractive of the great centers of the world. But drink and ignorance and overcrowding make it a city of sharp contrasts and most startling contradictions.—Methodist.

SCIENTIFIC.

AT PRESENT the whole number of marine telegraphic cables laid is two hundred and thirteen, having a total length of forty-three thousand seven hundred and eighty-three miles.

THE MANUFACTURE OF CARBON.—A few years ago, says the Manufacturer and Builder, a party of gentlemen started what they intended to be an oil-well, near Cumberland, Maryland. They soon, however, were disappointed in their expectation, for instead of striking oil they came upon a gas chamber and penetrated it. A short time afterward the emitting gas was accidentally set on fire, and it continued to burn for a period of two years. About a year ago Mr. Haworth, a gentleman from Boston, having heard of the burning well, went to Cumberland, tested the quality of the gas, and was satisfied that he could put into operation a scheme or plan of his own for the manufacture of carbon from the gas. Accordingly the well was leased or purchased by Mr. Haworth and others, known as Lamb & Co., and a patent obtained for the manufacture of carbon, according to the plan of Mr. Haworth. A building was constructed, and the manufacture of carbon commenced about six months ago. There are now in operation six hundred and sixty burners, each burner consuming eight cubic feet per hour. The gas is allowed to burn against soapstone plates, on which the carbon is deposited in the form of soot. By a very neat mechanical arrangement the soot is scraped off and deposited in large tin boxes about three feet long, and a foot and a half wide, and a foot and a half deep; scrapers are passed along the soapstone plates every twenty minutes, and the boxes are filled on their fourth passage. A large building is now in course of construction, twice the size of the present one, and will have in use thirteen hundred and twenty-eight feet of gas burners. The present consumption of gas amounts to about one-twelfth of the whole quantity escaping from the well. When the new building is completed, and the burners put in operation, the total consumption of gas, by the burners of both buildings, will be one-fourth of the whole.

The carbon is used for the manufacture of ink, and these works, we believe, are the only ones of the kind in the country; and, as far as the knowledge of the owners extends, they are the only ones of the kind in the world.

STAR-DRIFTING.—Dr. Huggins has published the result of his spectroscopic observations on the nebula of Orion, and on various stars. In the nebula-spectrum he finds four lines, one of which he is inclined to regard as probably due to nitrogen, while another agrees nearly in position with a strong line of iron, and the third and fourth seem to be two of the hydrogen lines. With regard to the stars he gives two tables, indicating stars which are apparently moving toward and from the sun respectively. In the former class are included Arcturus and Vega; in the latter Sirius, Betelgeux, Rigel, Castor and possibly Aldebaran.—Three are but a few of those in the tables, which include eleven stars approaching and nineteen receding from the sun. The apparent rate of motion varies from twenty-six to fifty miles per second, or (correction being made for the earth's motion) twelve to sixty miles per second. But these figures must not be taken as those of the actual motion of the fixed stars in space, since a certain part of these observed velocities must be due to solar motion. Dr. Huggins says: "It will be observed that, speaking generally, the stars which the spectroscope shows to be moving from the earth (Sirius, etc.) are situated in a part of the heavens opposite to Hercules, toward which the sun is advancing, while the stars in the neighborhood of this region (Arcturus, etc.) show a motion of approach. There are in the stars already observed exceptions to this general statement; and there are some other considerations which appear to show that the sun's motion in space is not the only or even, in all cases, the chief cause of the observed proper motions of the stars. There can be little doubt that in the observed stellar movements we have to do with two other independent movements, namely, a movement common to certain groups of stars, and also a motion peculiar to each star." These observations confirm, to some extent, the theory of Mr. Proctor, already stated in our columns, of the drift of stars in groups. But it will doubtless be admitted that, in view of the complex nature of the problem, further confirmation is desirable. Certainly the complete analysis of stellar motions cannot yet be made.

NO MAN, when he violates truth, can tell of what sin he is guilty, where his falsehood will penetrate, and what misery it will create. It may calumniate, it may kill, it may embitter, it may impoverish; what evil it may prove you cannot tell.—Sydney Smith.

PROF. TYNDALL'S SPOILS.—It was a pleasant story, but not exactly true, that Prof. Tyndall proposed to give all the money he made here for the foundation of something scientific. He has made a handsome sum, though not so much as is generally supposed. The agents and such have taken the lion's share. In Philadelphia he got at the rate of $500 out of $1,500 profit; in Washington, $2,000 out of $5,000; in Boston he cleared $3,000. But he made the most in New York and Brooklyn, where everything after the hare expenses went to him. In these two cities he has "cashed" about $13,000. After paying all expenses he will take home with him about $15,000, which, on the whole, is what printers call a "fat take" for three months' work. He expresses himself as delighted with everything and everybody in this broad Western expanse.—Harper's Bazar.

THE total Indian school population of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, is about ninety thousand, while the total number receiving any sort of education is less than twelve thousand, of whom quite one-half are provided for by the semi-civilized nation at Oklahoma. There are at least forty thousand within easy reach, yet so little is done.

THE citizens of Cordova, Argentine Republic, stoned the passengers of the Central railroad and tore up some of the rails, declaring that the locomotive is a creature of the devil. The mob were urged to violence by the clergy.

HE THAT CLOSES with religion only to serve a turn will close with no more of it than he imagines will serve that turn.—Edwards.

SOLO STOPS.

THE VOX HUMANA,

PATENTED SEPTEMBER 13, 1870, AND JANUARY 23, 1872,

producing a beautiful and sympathetic quality of tone, capable of the most exquisite modulation, and when used with the "Tremolo," which accompanies it, resembles more than any other organ stop the peculiar trill of the human voice.

THE VOX CELESTE,

possessing a peculiar and thrilling quality of tone, most pipe-like in its nature, and which can be used in many passages with charming effect.

The above Stops are in every case separate, and additional sets of reeds, are entirely distinct from the "Tremolo," which always accompanies them, and which is never perfect without them, and can all be brought at will into the full organ, adding greatly to its power and richness of tone.

They take pleasure in announcing to the musical public and the trade the valuable addition to their Organs of a most beautiful Solo Stop,

THE ÆOLINE.

It is an additional set of reeds, exquisitely voiced and ingeniously arranged in a separate wind-chest (patented September 13, 1870.) Its quality of tone is the most delicate and soft imaginable. It is capable of the greatest variety of effects in combination with their other stops, the improved VOX HUMANA in particular. It has elicited the warmest encomiums from all organists and musicians who have examined it. It is perfectly simple in its construction, and they predict for it the highest degree of success. Its charming effects, especially when used in connection with their improved styles of cases, can but be appreciated by every musician.

IMPROVED CASES, ETC.

By the construction of these Cases the quality of tone in their Instruments has been greatly improved, every facility for the comfort and convenience of the performer has been provided for, and the effect of their beautiful and graceful design is such as to entirely obviate the disagreeable boxy appearance which has been for so long a time an unpleasant characteristic of the Reed Organ.

In addition to the above improvements, attention is called to

PERFECT VALVES and WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.

The Factories of GEORGE WOODS & Co. are among the largest, and probably without exception the best-arranged in the country. Their machinery is of the latest and most improved pattern, and all the labor is performed under the eyes of the employers, who are mechanics with reputations second to none for knowledge of the business, ingenuity, faithfulness and ability. With every advantage that extensive capital can command, they are determined that the Organs of their manufacture

SHALL BE IN EVERY RESPECT THE FINEST AND BEST.

They endeavor to obtain and secure the confidence of their agents, and to assist and encourage them in every possible way.

A LESSON IN LATIN.

Amos, amas, amat.
Amy is teaching the children that,
While I sit aside with my head bent low,
And list to the voices that pleasantly go,
Amabam, amabas, amabat,
Thinking love thoughts is what I—amat;
And I say you? well I—amabo.

Amy, amas, amat.
My heart joins in with its pitapat;
If Amy don't love me, I'm blind—amabat,
For she looks with a look that says, Ah I me,
And never declined such a look from me,
While I still interpret the children's chant,
Amy, amamus, amatis, amant.

And when the Latin lessons are o'er,
I take Amy home to her cottage-door,
Humming the Latin of love as we go,
Amo, Amy, Amy amo.
But soon she'll be my own evermore:
Then no Latin lessons for my little wife;
I'll conjugate Amy myself for life.

Hearth and Home.

Quackery a Century and a Half Ago.

A brief article in the English magazine, Temple Bar, on the "Quacke of the Eighteenth Century," contains a number of amusing anecdotes. It begins with the statement, which it is not always easy to believe, that nnmerous as are the qnacks of the present day, and astonishing as their enccese muet appear to every thinking person, they pale into insignificance compared with their predecesepre of the eighteenth century. "When we concider their numbers, their ignorance and the impndence of their pretensions," it continues, "we find it almost impossible to understand the sncceee they met with, and the way they were epoken of and patronized by the highest in the land. Cobblere, tinkers, footmen and tailors (some not able to read their own advertisemente) assnmed the title of doctor, and pretended to be able to cure every known disease." Some of these adventurers were so lncky as to receive titlee from the King, and the honor of votee of thanks from the House of Commons. One, Sir William Read, wae originally a tailor, and could hardly read, yet impudence and the use of ecraps of Latin gave him a great reputation for learniug, enabled him to become oculist to Queen Anne and King George the First, and obtained the honor of knighthood from the former sovereign. In one of his advertisements he called upon the vice chancellor, nniversity and city of Oxford to vonch for hie cures.

Another, Dr. Grant, wae very illiterate; he started as a tinker, became a Baptiet preacher, and then tnrned doctor. He also received the appointment of ocnliet to Queen Anne. A writer in the Grub Street Journal said concerning him and Read:

"Her majesty, sure, was in a surprise,
Or else was very short-sighted,
When a tinker was sworn to look after her eyes
And the mountebank Read was knighted."

Dr. Grant had hie portrait engraved on a copper-plate, from which copies were printed for distribution. Of this portrait the same writer says:

"A tinker first his scene of life began;
That failing, he set up for cunning man;
But, wanting luck, puts on a new disguise;
And now pretends that he can mend your eyes.
But this expect, that like a tinker true,
Where he repairs one eye he puts out two."

Dr. Tom Saffold, who flonrished early in the eighteenth century, nsed to publish his bills in verse, thue:

"Here's Saffold's pills, much better than the rest,
Deservedly have gained the name of best;
A box of eighteen pills for eighteen pence,
Though 'tis too cheap in any man's own sense."

Specimens of hie poetical powers were also placed on hie doorpost. Dr. Case, who afterward lived in the same house, erased the vereee of hie predecessor and enbstituted two lines of his own:

"Within this place Lives Doctor Case."

He is said to have gained more by this couplet than Dryden did by all his works.

Dr. Ward was a footman, and while traveling with hie maeter on the continent he obtained from some monks those receipts by which he afterward made his "Friar's Balsam" and other nostrnms. He began to practice physic about 1733. A newspaper attacked his pill as poisonous, and adduced instances in which it had killed patients. Ward replied with depoeitione that the deathe had arieen from other canees, and with teetimoniale of wonderful enccess. The controversy continned some time. One of his assailants concluded an article against him with the conplet:

"Before you take his drop or pill, Take leave of friends and make your will."

He received the patronage of General Churchill and Lord Chief Justice Reynolds, and was called in to prescribe for George the Second. The King recovered, and he received a solemn vote of thanks from the House of Commons, and obtained the privilege of driving his carriage throngh St. James' park. When he died he left his statue to the Society of Arts.

One of the qnacks of this period advertised himself as the "Unborn Doctor." A writer of the times speaks of him as the "Stuttering Unborn Doctor," and relates that a gentleman having asked him to explain his title, he replied: "Why, you s—s—ee, eir, I w—w—as not b—born a d—d—doctor, and s—s—so I am an n—u—u—unborn doctor."

The patronage which ie almoet always given to quacks like theee is thns accounted for in one of the Spectator's pleasant papers:

"The desire of life is eo natural and strong a passion that I have long since ceased to wonder at the great encouragement which the practice of medicine finds among ns. Those who have little or no faith in the abilities of a quack will apply themselves to him, either because he is willing to sell health at a reasonable profit, or because the patient, like a drowning man, catches at every twig, and hopes for relief from the most ignorant, when the most able physicians give him none."—Methodist.

TRAVEL IN ANCIENT TIMES.

Owing to the abeence of roads, as well ae convenient means of carriage, there was no general spirit of travel in ancient times. Now and then eome adventurer, athiret for knowledge, made hie way into far conntriee, jonrneying on foot or horseback or by eea, and taking years for an expedition which can now be made with comfort and eafety in a few weeks. There was less travel in Europe than in the East, where the camel furnished a convenient means of transportation, and where the great treeless wastee of conntry offered fewer obstaclee than the foreet-grown regions of the West. But all over the earth eoldiers and merchants were the only claseee of men who eaw mnch of the world beyond their native villages and citiee. The great mass of people lived and died in the place where they were born. Beyond their native precincts the world wae an unknown region, whence now and then an adventurous man returned with marvelous storiee of the wonders he had seen and heard. People stayed at home becanse the meane of travel were confined to the very wealthy, outside of the two classes just mentioned. For many centuries there was very little improvement in modes of convcyance. Even the lnxnrione and eelf-indulgent "Rois Faineants," or lazy Kinge of France, who flonrished in the seventeenth centnry of onr era—those mere phantoms of royalty, who passed their livee in sensual pleasures while the affaire of State were adminietered by others—were accustomed to make their jonrneys from place to place in ox-carts of the rudest description, resembling a common conntry hay-wagon of our time. The place of epringe was eupplied by a liberal provision of cnshions, which saved the royal good-for-nothing's sides from bumpe and bruisee ae the huge wagon thumped and jolted over stones, stumps and mud-holes. Under any circnmstances it mnst have been a very uncomfortable method of traveling.

Up to the middle of the sixteenth century the most common mode of traveling wae on horseback, with carriere, and heavy goods were conveyed by means of pack-horees. In Shakespeare's Henry the Fourth, act 2, eccne 1, two carriers appear in the inn-yard at Rochester. One has a gammon of bacon and two razes of ginger to be delivered as far as Charing Cross; the turkeys in the pannier of the other are quite starved. We see that people traveled in companies, from one of the carriers eaying: "Come, neighbor Mugs, we'll call up the gentlemen; they will along with company, for they have great charge." And that they were on horseback is shown by Gadshill bidding the hostler bring his gelding out of the etable, and one of the travelers saying: "The boy ehall lead our horses down the hill; we'll walk afoot awhile, and ease our legs." Journeye on foot were rare, even at that time, owing to the insecurity of the roade, although in the middle ages pedestrians on religious pilgrimagee were protected by the eacrednees of their purpose.—Harper's Magazine.

ARIZONA CURIOSITIES.

J. W. Glase, an old Californian, a gentleman who has devoted much time to investigations in geology, mineralogy, botany and other natural eciences, recently returned to San Francisco from a ten months' sojourn in Arizona and Colorado. He has brought with him a collection of varied character, embracing two thoneand botanical epecimeus, eamples of oree, relics from ancient mounde, etc. Among the latter ie a box of hnman remains, the body having evidently becn burned, together with varions kinds of food, such as corn, beans, nuts and berries, the charred remaine of which Mr. Glass gathered. They were taken from the ruins in Chino valley. There are also several stone hatchets, remains of ancient pottery, cement and brick from the rnins, petrified and eilicified wood, obsidian, agates, jasper, chalcedony, etc.

Mr. Glass has also a small image—one of the sacred images of the peaceful Pimos—said to be made only by the virgins of the tribe, in accordance with a tradition which came down to them from some eminent medicine man, to the effect that if any virgin should succeed in molding a perfect image of a newborn infant, the great Spirit would accept it from the hands of one so pure, and would endow it with life; that then the infant would grow, and become God's hnman representative, the leader and savior of the tribe; that throngh him the Indiane would be preserved from want and sorrow; frnit, flowers and grain of all kinds would spring up spontanconsly, and no enemy wonld ever be able to overpower them. For hnndreds of years the virgins of the tribe have tried their ekill in fashioning incipient saviors from the yellow clay of their native valleys, until the custom has become fixed, and the habit etill continnee. Mr. Glass told them that the whites have already fonnd the true Savior, who lived nearly two thousand years ago, and that they might as well accept him, and get what consolation they can out of it; bnt the old Indiane said it wae impoesible; their eavior, when he came, would never die, but would alwaye live among them, an everlasting proof of hie divine mission.

It is true that it costs some men a much greater effort to be polite than others. It was said with bitter epleen of an English statesman: "Canning can never be a gentleman for more than three hours at a time." It ie trne, too, that there are timee in every man's life when to be even coldly courteous makes an exhaueting dranght on one's patience; but eilently to devour the many chagrine of life, and to maintain a respectful bearing toward othere, even under circumstances of vexation and trial, ie not only a Chrietian duty, bnt worldly policy. Dr. Valentine Mott eaid wisely to a graduating class: "Yonng gentlemen, have two pockets made—a large one to hold the insults, and a small one to hold the fees." Hundreds of men have owed their etart in life wholly to their winning addrees. "Thank you, my dear," said Lundy Foote to the little beggar girl who bought a pennyworth of snuff. "Thank you, my dear; please call again," made Lnndy Foote a millionaire. Some years ago a dry goods salesman in a London shop had acqnired snch a reputation for courtesy and exhanetless patience that it was said to be impossible to provoke from him any expression of irritability or the smallest symptom of vexation. A lady of rank, hearing of his wonderful equanimity, determined to put it to the test by all the annoyances with which a veteran shop-visitor knows how to tease a shopman. She failed in the attempt, and thereupon ect him up in business. He rose to eminence in the haberdashery trade, and the mainspring of hie latter as of his early career was politeness. It is related of the late Mr. Butler, of Providence, Rhode Island, that he was eo obliging as to reopen his store one night solely to supply a little girl with a spool of thread which she wanted. The incident took wind, brought him a large run of cnstom, and he died a millionaire, after subscribing $40,000 toward founding a hospital for the insane—a sum which he was persuaded to give by Miss Dix, whom he was too polite to shake off, though almost as penurious as she was persevering.—Prof. Matthews, in Getting on in the World.

SCHOOL BOOKS—SCHOOL BOOKS.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many the several Southern States, feel- of the most eminent citizens of ing the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virgiain. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

WE DESIRE TO CALL THE ATtention of our friends and the public generally to our large and well-assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

BOSTON, March 12.—Geo. S. Boutwell was elected United States senator to-day in the convention of the two houses of the Massachusetts Legislature. The whole number of votes cast was 275, of which Mr. Boutwell received 152, H. L. Dawes 115, George B. Loring 2, J. K. Larbon 2, William Whiting 2, C. G. Green 2. Mr. Boutwell was declared elected.

The House of Representatives today rejected a resolution providing for an amendment to the constitution giving women the right to vote.

BALTIMORE, March 12.—A short time since John Hopkins, a well-known millionaire of this city, deeded to trustees thirteen acres of land, bounded by Wolf, Monument, Broadway and Jefferson streets, for the erection of a hospital for the relief of indigent sick and orphans. At a meeting of the trustees last evening they were notified by Mr. Hopkins that he had further dedicated $2,000,000 worth of property for the support and maintenance of the hospital. The hospital will be on a grand scale, and will be commenced in the spring of 1874.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 12.—Captain Jack, of the Modocs, appears to have outgeneraled the peace commissioners and soldiers. It is thought that he has manuevered to get into the country east of the seat of war, where for hundreds of miles no cavalry could follow; and if he escapes to the Pitt river country he will find plenty of cattle.

The whole matter of treating with the Modocs is in the hands of General Canby. The peace commission is a failure. Everything indicates war.

NEW YORK, March 14.—The private secretary of Governor Dix announced to the sheriff to-day that the Governor had written a letter to the Rev. Dr. Tyng, saying that the public safety and justice demanded the execution of Foster. Deputy sheriffs are now guarding him in the Tombs.

CINCINNATI, March 14.—A private dispatch received here to-day announces the death of Bishop McIlvaine at Florence, Italy.

BALTIMORE, March 14.—The case of Dr. L. D. Huston, charged with gross immorality and licentiousness, which has excited such deep interest in this community and the entire Methodist Episcopal Church South for the past year or more, was concluded to-day in the session of the Baltimore Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Shortly after the meeting of the Conference this morning Bishop Doggett, presiding, inquired if the committee in the case of the Rev. Dr. Huston was ready to report. The chairman, Rev. Dr. Regester, responded that they were, and handed the following, which was read by the secretary:

"BALTIMORE, March 14, 1873.

"The committee to whom the case of the Rev. L. D. Huston was referred beg leave to report: We have come to the conclusion that the charge of immorality is unanimously sustained, and said L. D. Huston has been expelled from the Methodist Episcopal Church South."

Bishop Doggett asked if any representative of Dr. Huston appealed from the decision.

Dr. Regester said that Dr. Rozelle, as counsel for Dr. Huston, had intimated the purpose to appeal to the next General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

All papers in the case were then handed over to the secretary of the Conference.

Bishop Doggett then remarked that, according to the report of the committee, L. D. Huston is expelled from the Methodist Episcopal Church South, upon the charges as reported.

CINCINNATI, March 16.—The standing committee of the Protestant Episcopal Church of this city has resolved, on behalf of the churches of this city, to offer to conduct the funeral of the late Bishop McIlvaine, and to bring the body home from Italy for interment. The family of the deceased have not yet returned an answer to the proposition.

NEW YORK, March 17.—Dr. Deems authorizes the announcement that Commodore Vanderbilt has given $500,000 to Bishop McTyeire, of the Southern Methodist Church, to establish a university in Tennessee.

GALVESTON, March 18.—J. Durand, the superintendent, announces that the Houston and Texas Central railroad is now completed to Red River City, and connected with the Missouri, Kansas and Texas railroad, and that through trains will be run between Galveston, Houston and St. Louis on and after the twenty-fourth instant.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, March 2.—The Indians who are in rebellion under General Lozada made a raid on Asilieró, robbing everybody and everything and killing cattle.

A revolutionary outbreak is imminent in the State of Oaxaca. Affairs have become so threatening that the government recently removed the old officials and appointed new ones. Federal troops are now asked for.

Le Trait de Union says that sacrilegious troubles are apparently reviving. A short time ago a priest, clad in the garb of his order, appeared in the streets and protested against the enforcement of the liberalizing law in regard to religious worship. The government has, however, issued an order that the law must be fully observed. Under its operation Protestantism is making rapid progress throughout the republic. This spread of Protestantism gives great offense to the Catholic priesthood, who are using every means to prevent its growth and circumscribe its influence. The consequence of their efforts has been the occurrence of several deplorable scenes lately.

Very recently a crowd of fanatics, excited to frenzy by the sermons of some priests, attacked a congregation of Protestants in church in San Luis; so far as known no one was killed, but several were injured. The police finally dispersed the rioters. Serious misfortune will be the result in the future, unless the authorities interpose at once and re-establish law and order.

MATAMORAS, Mar. 11.—Telegrams from the City of Mexico state that General Portirio Diaz has been elected chief justice of the Supreme Court of Mexico, which position secures him the presidency of the republic in the case of a vacancy from any cause.

LONDON, March 12.—The scene in the House of Commons last night, when the defeat of the ministry on the Irish university bill was announced, is indescribable.

The excitement in the gallery and on the floor was intense, while the opponents of the measure indulged in tumultuous cheers over its rejection. Among the distinguished personages in the strangers' gallery, which was crowded during the debate, were the Prince of Wales, the Princess Louise and Christian.

The Scotch and Welsh members supported the bill, while the Catholics were unanimous in their opposition to it. After the announcement of the result Mr. Gladstone arose and said: "The vote just given is certainly of a grave character. As the House never wishes to continue its deliberations when the existence of the government is in doubt, I move adjournment until Thursday." The motion was carried. In consequence of the late hour at which a result was reached, the editorial comments of the London morning journals are meager and restrained.

The Irish university bill did not receive the vote of a single Conservative member of the House of Commons.

Forty-seven Liberals, of whom thirty-six were Irishmen, voted against the bill; fifteen Irish members voted for it.

Seventeen members of the House, including Dr. Isaac Butt, member for Limerick, were absent. Forty members participated in the debate.

The Right Hon. John H. Bright, his brother, Jacob Bright, and the Marquis of Lorne supported the government.

LONDON, March 12.—A prospectus of the company which has organized to lay a cable from Plymouth, England, to Rye Beach, New Hampshire, is published to-day. All the money necessary for carrying on the project has been secured, and contracts for the construction of the cable have been concluded. The company is forbidden, by its articles of agreement, from amalgamation with any like enterprise.

Mr. Gladstone waited on her majesty Queen Victoria, at Buckingham Palace, at noon to-day, to tender his resignation. It is probable that Mr. Disraeli will be summoned to form a new ministry.

MADRID, March 12.—The Assembly yesterday definitely sanctioned the bill introduced by the government suspending its sittings and convoking the Constituent Cortes on the first of May.

LONDON, March 13.—Mr. Gladstone, in the House of Commons, and Earl Granville, in the House of Lords, this afternoon announced that the ministers had tendered their resignations to the Queen, which her majesty had accepted. Both houses adjourned until Monday.

Disraeli to-day received a summons from the Queen, and immediately proceeded to Buckingham Palace.

PARIS, March 16.—The new treaty between France and Germany, providing for the evacuation of the French provinces, was signed at Berlin yesterday, and the text is published.

The German forces are to evacuate all the places they now hold in France by the first of July, with the exception of Verdun and vicinity, from which they withdraw on the fifth of September.

Troops have been sent to the Spanish frontier to assist the local authorities in the execution of the order requiring all Carlists crossing into France to be interned.

It is announced that Rios will succeed Olozaga as minister from Spain to France.

Pere Hyacinthe has begun to preach in Geneva with marked effect. His congregations are very large, and he is fast gaining adherents.

LONDON, March 18.—Three shabbily-dressed men with an American accent, who deposited £12,000 in the Cork Bank, have been arrested on suspicion of complicity in the recent swindle of the Bank of England.

DEATH OF THE REV. W. H. MORRISON.—We are sorry to announce, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, the death of the Rev. W. H. Morrison, an excellent minister of the Louisville Conference, which he joined in 1847. For the last three years he sustained a superannuated relation. The Rev. J. W. Emerson writes us, March 7: "He died on last Tuesday morning, March 4, in great peace. He said that in his palmiest days, when in health, he had never imagined that when death should come he could meet it with such composure. He was greatly beloved by his brethren, and many will sorrow when they read this announcement. An extended notice will be furnished by some one."

The Late Rev. Thos. Guthrie, D. D.

BY JOHN FRASER.

Few ministers ever attained so wide and affectionate a popularity in Scotland as the Rev. Thomas Guthrie, D. D., whose sudden but not unexpected death occurred a few days since. Born in 1803, in the little town of Brechin, in Forfarshire, Scotland, Dr. Guthrie lived to pass through and take a leading part in almost every important social and religious crisis by which his country has been agitated for the last fifty years. The Guthries from time immemorial have been associated with Brechin, and for more than a century the family has supplied that town with provosts, magistrates and leading public men. Dr. Guthrie's father, like so many of his countrymen in rural districts, united the two trades of merchant and banker, and, by the aid of industry, energy and business talent, contrived to acquire a considerable fortune. He was a man of more than average ability; gifted with great natural shrewdness, and a fund of genuinity and humor, which formed so marked an element in the mental legacy inherited from him by his distinguished son. As a youth Thomas Guthrie did not promise brilliantly. In appearance he was a long, lanky, straggling-looking lad, with great awkward bones, prominent, homely features, a large nose, uncouth hair, and clothes that seemed as if they had been thrown on with a pitchfork. After studying, with no marked success, at a local grammar school, he matriculated at the University of Edinburg; and, after going through the usual curriculum, was licensed as a preacher by the Presbytery of Brechin in 1825. At college Mr. Guthrie was diligent rather than brilliant, and displayed remarkable earnestness in the pursuit of his theological studies. Not satisfied with the conventional theological course prescribed by the Church of Scotland, and believing that some little medical knowledge would be of advantage to one whose life would probably be spent in a thinly populated country district, among poor parishioners, the young licentiate crossed to Paris, in the university of which city he spent a short time in the study of comparative anatomy and chemistry. On his return to Scotland Mr. Guthrie served for nearly two years in his father's banking house, which he did not finally leave till 1830, when he was appointed to take charge of the parish of Arbirlot, in his native county. Here he labored for some years, and with so much success that his fame as an earnest preacher and pulpit orator soon found its way to Edinburg, procuring him a call to the collegiate church of Old Greyfriars, which he accepted. This was in 1837, and three years later his popularity had increased to such an extent that a new parish was formed and a new church was built especially for him, namely, St. John's, whither he removed in 1840. Up to this time Mr. Guthrie had devoted himself mainly to his parochial duties, including incessant labors to reform and better the degraded masses of the Scotch metropolis. But the time was fast approaching when he was to engage in more arduous and exciting, though not more noble work. Already keen observers were sensible of a coming storm; and it required no great prescience to detect on the theological horizon the cloud, as of a man's hand, which was soon to overspread the entire sky, and break in that tempestuous storm which shook the Church of Scotland to its center.

It is not necessary to enter into the particulars of the great schism which resulted in the formation of what is called the Free Church, in 1843. It is enough for our present purpose to know that among the originators of that secession Mr. Guthrie was one of the most energetic and powerful, and did more, perhaps, than any clergyman, except Drs. Chalmers, Candlish and Cunningham, to precipitate the crisis. But although he left the Established Church, he did not leave his old field of labor, but continued to minister to a large and influential congregation in Edinburg, until he set out on his memorable mission through the length and breadth of Scotland, in 1845-46, when his powerful oratorical appeals and splendid energy were mainly instrumental in establishing the sustentation fund, for the efficient support and housing of ministers of the Free Church. Not content with his success in this field, and as if to refute the charge that his charity began and ended at home, the indefatigable preacher next turned his attention to destitute and homeless children, and started the movement which resulted in the establishment of ragged or Industrial schools, first in Edinburg, and finally all over Great Britain. In addition to his advocacy of these two schemes, Dr. Guthrie was a constant and eloquent supporter of the temperance cause, and, indeed, of every movement that had for its end the amelioration of society and the suppression of vice.

In 1860 Good Words was started by Messrs. A. Strahan & Co., London, under the editorship of the late Dr. Norman Macleod—an intimate friend of Dr. Guthrie, by the way—and, after a short time, the extraordinary success of that journal, and the growing secularity of its tone, led to the establishment of the Sunday Magazine by the same firm, under the management of Dr. Guthrie. In 1862 Dr. Guthrie was made moderator of the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland, and some time later failing health and threatened heart disease compelled him to retire from active ministerial duties. But he never quite gave up preaching, and only a few months ago delivered, in Glasgow, one of his most stirring addresses. Perhaps the last philanthropic scheme with which he was publicly identified was the Industrial Training Ships, for the education and reformation of houseless and destitute children; and some even on this side the Atlantic may remember the almost savagely scathing and eloquent philippic which he delivered in the March of 1872, on the proposed union of the Free and the United Presbyterian denominations. We need hardly add that the old man eloquent was in favor of the union; and his speech on the occasion referred to fell like a veritable bombshell amid the ranks of its opponents.

In appearance Dr. Guthrie was very tall, striking and venerable. It is now nearly two years since the writer of this paper last saw him standing on a step of the main entrance to the Duke of Argyle's castle at Inverary. The occasion was the home-coming of the Marquis and Princess-Marchioness of Lorne after their marriage; and we can see as distinctly as if it were yesterday the tall, thin, loosely-clothed figure of the venerable doctor, his long white hair gently stirred by the breeze, his pale, full, genial face wreathed with smiles, as he stood immediately behind the royal pair, by the side of the Duke of Argyle and the Earl of Granville. In private no man could be more simple, natural, enjoyable and hearty. He was full of humor and stories and fun; a great favorite with dogs and children; and one of the very best friends and guides a young man could seek counsel from. In public he was (after Dr. Chalmers and, latterly, Dr. Caird) the most eloquent Scotchman of his times, blending solemnity and pathos, a quaint provincial accent and delivery, with a surpassing earnestness and power to move the hearts of an audience to a degree rarely attained in any pulpit. One great feature of his oratory was the aptness and profuseness of his illustrations and similes. Of these, quite two-thirds were taken from the clouds and sea. The ocean seemed always to be sounding in the preacher's ears; and his descriptions of storms and shipwrecks were surpassingly vivid. As a writer Dr. Guthrie was not voluminous. He was emphatically a preacher, not an author; yet his "City, its Sins and Sorrows," issued in 1857, his "Plea for Ragged Schools," and his "Way to Life," published in 1862, must be familiar to many American readers. It is not, however, by his published works that Dr. Guthrie will be remembered by posterity, but in connection with those great religious and philanthropic agitations of his age in which he took a leading part. Not as the accomplished writer, the keen debater or the successful editor will he live in the hearts of the future, but as the friend and spokesman of the poor, the homeless and the destitute; the powerful advocate of those who were powerless to speak on their own behalf; and as one of the four leaders of the great theological revolt of 1843, when, by his eloquence and energy, he linked his name imperishably with the history of that church of which he was for thirty years so conspicuously an ornament.—Christian Union.

Dedication of St. James, Baltimore.

The interest of this occasion, which transpired last Sabbath (March 2,) was greatly heightened by the presence and valuable services of our esteemed Bishop Pierce. His sermon in the morning, based upon Acts xi, 23, was a clear, practical and forcible exposition of the doctrine of the text, setting forth the "grace of God," in its nature and development, as the only true source of the church's spirituality, power and joy; and a fixed "purpose of heart to cleave unto the Lord," as the only test of genuine conversion and of ultimate salvation. The Bishop's remarks on revivals were most timely and happy, showing them to be apostolic in their origin, and essential to vital Christianity, and that, therefore, a church without revivals scarcely deserves to be called a Christian church. We were disappointed in not seeing the house crowded. We had thought that there were enough of Southern Methodists in Baltimore who, on an occasion like this, would face the falling snow, and fill the house themselves.

The financial exhibit of this infant church, as read by their pastor, Bro. Zimmerman, is highly creditable to his charge, while the result of the morning collection ($2,000) was most gratifying to all present, and to none more so, we presume, than to Bro. Magruder, of Trinity, who excelled all in urging upon the audience the necessity of being liberal, and was second to none in the amount of his own contributions.

At night Bishop Pierce preached from St. Luke xxiv, 36: "And as they thus spake, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and said unto them: Peace be unto you." The sermon was of a high order, and was listened to with great interest. The collection at night was sufficient to pay off the debt incurred in completing the church.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

FATHER BOEHM, now aged ninety-eight, preached a short and very affecting discourse in the Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church, Wilmington, Delaware, on a recent Monday evening, in which he referred to his preaching in that city in the year 1800.

Baltimore Conference.

We condense from the Episcopal Methodist the proceedings, embracing the sixth day. The disposal of Dr. Huston's case will be found in our news columns. We are not yet informed when the Conference closed.

The annual session of the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South was commenced at Trinity church, corner of Preston street and Madison avenue (Rev. John Hannon, pastor,) on Wednesday, March 5, Bishop George F. Pierce presiding.

The Baltimore Conference has in its bounds nine districts, in which there are one hundred and sixty-seven ministers, who were, according to the statement presented at the Conference in March, 1872, paid the preceding year salaries amounting in the aggregate to $64,902.19. In the nine districts that comprise the territory there are over twenty-three thousand adult white and one hundred and three adult colored members.

Bishop Doggett was in attendance at the opening of Conference.

Bishop Pierce addressed the Conference, explaining the absence of Bishop Paine, who, by appointment, was to preside at this session, but who was detained at home by sickness. He asked the prayers of all present for his recovery.

The committee in the case of Dr. L. D. Huston, consisting of three members, of which Rev. E. F. Busey was chairman, submitted their report to the Conference, to the effect that, after careful examination of all the testimony, they deem it necessary to present a charge of immorality against said Rev. L. D. Huston, and recommend the appointment of a committee of trial, as required by the Discipline of the church.

The Bishop announced the following as the committee: Rev. Samuel Regester, D. D., Rev. I. R. Finley, D. D., Rev. Thomas B. Sargent, D. D., Rev. J. C. Dice, Rev. A. B. Dolly, Rev. L. R. Jones, Rev. P. B. Smith, Rev. F. C. Tebbs, Rev. J. L. Shipley, Rev. D. Ball, Rev. George D. Brooke, Rev. J. M. Grandin, Rev. J. Higgins and Rev. S. Townsend.

The committee in the case of J. F. Clark, of which Rev. N. Head was chairman, reported that the charge of immorality was sustained, and he was expelled from the church.

Permission was granted the committee in the case of Rev. Dr. Huston to sit during the Conference sessions.

The annual report of the Wesleyan Female Institute was presented and referred to the Committee on Education. The report stated that there were now one hundred and ten boarding scholars in the institution. From some lack of interest in the Baltimore Conference this institution under its charge gets as many pupils from Texas as from its own Conference. If the Baltimore Conference would do as much for the school as Texas does there would now be three hundred pupils in it.

In this connection several of the brethren spoke of the remarkable revival of religion that has been going on in Staunton and Winchester. Sixty of the pupils of the Wesleyan Female Institute experienced religion. Up to Monday, March 3, there had been three hundred and seventy-nine conversions.

A communication was received from the principal of the West Virginia Female Seminary, and was referred to the Committee on Education.

The following were admitted on trial: Baltimore district, G. Meyer, John G. Knight; East Baltimore district, J. W. Steele; Washington district, James T. Williams, William T. Carothers; Winchester district, Alfred H. Way; Lewisburg district, Lewis Henly, Vincent W. Wheeler; Lexington district, William H. Henerand, Washington Varner.

The second question was then called—Who remain on trial?

J. Timothy Smith, Lewis L. Lloyd, James W. Compton, John C. Sedgwick, F. A. Strother, Henry C. Pitzer, Lafayette Fox were passed, and they were continued on trial.

The regular Conference business was then suspended to hear a report of Rev. Dr. Duncan on the condition and wants of Randolph Macon College, located at Ashland, Virginia, of which he is president. There are at this institute of learning two hundred and thirty-two students, forty-three of whom are studying divinity; seventeen of these are preparing for service in the Baltimore Conference. There are fifty of the students from within the bounds of this Conference. The president regretted on the part of the college a lack of sufficient buildings to accommodate their constantly increasing patronage. He endeavored to stimulate the Conference to renewed efforts in order to insure continued prosperity to the institution. "We delude ourselves and injure our cause," said the doctor, "if we remain inactive in the fond hope that some man of noble heart and magnificent resources will substitute our gifts and toil." The report was in every respect worthy the cause the doctor so ably represents.

THE trustees of the Texas University, says the Galveston Christian Advocate of March 12, have been in session this week. We are pleased to be able to state that, though the location is not yet agreed upon, the financial outlook in reference to moneyed and landed endowment is brighter than ever. Dr. Mood, the regent, reports most encouraging progress in securing landed donations. Our readers will have in our next issue some items of interest, too late to present in this.

Sunday School Libraries.

There is a great deal of trash in the Sunday school literature of the day. We have been disposed to doubt the expediency of putting any book in the Sunday school library that is not decidedly religious. Many of our libraries have books on almost all subjects, and in most of them are works unfit to be read on Sunday. We copy some suggestive paragraphs from the Christian Intelligencer on the subject. The Intelligencer says:

"Our esteemed contributor, G. L. V., in a recent considerate article, exposed the wretched character of a popular class of Sunday school hymns. A similar service might well be rendered in regard to some of the latter-day books which are being pushed into circulation through the Sunday school libraries over the whole country. Considerable discussion and much just indignation have been elicited in Boston by the publication of a "one-thousand-dollar prize story," which the authoress has sprinkled rather too thick with the slang and profanity of some of her characters. And even where such inexcusable coarseness is avoided, it is difficult to see in what respect much of the Sunday school fiction is better than any other secular fiction, which ministers only to unhealthy mental excitement, conveys no great salutary truth, and produces spiritual dissipation. Private publishers are far more to blame in this matter than the publication boards and Sunday school unions, whose safeguards are so much greater. These latter institutions also sometimes err in giving their high sanction to books that are weak and trashy, but, as a rule, their mistakes come from inadvertence and honest misjudgment, not from mere mercantile prospects of large sales and quick returns from inferior books, which are of little earthly and no possible heavenly use.

There is a strong tendency to introduce secular books of a popular character, literary and scientific, history, adventures, travels and tales or romances, like the Oliver Optic and similar series, based upon a few facts. The plea, of course, is that the Sunday school library is the only resource for many readers who are poor, intelligent and inquiring. But, on the same reasoning, why should not the teaching be secularized as well?

We have no wish to be unjust nor indiscriminating. There is ample verge and scope enough for selecting the most instructive, entertaining and purifying literature for all classes in our American Sunday schools. Their libraries should be made just as good, varied and large as practicable. They are the fountains from whence flow millions of streamlets, every one of which should be like "the river of the water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding from under the throne of God and the Lamb." Over every Sabbath school library case we would gladly see written: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report." These are the New Testament safeguards. The library should reflect the nature and objects of the school. Its literature should be pre-eminently religious, biblical, attractive, instructive, practically adapted and benevolent, aiming primarily at the salvation of the pupils, and the development of Christian character for "the life that now is and for that which is to come.

WITHIN the past week (February 26, 1873) the American Church Missionary Society, through its executive committee, has assumed the care of certain mission work in Mexico. A reforming movement has been going on, for some time, in the City of Mexico and the vicinity, under the auspices of the Rev. Dr. Riley. Some fifteen or twenty congregations have already been organized under the name of the "Church of Jesus in Mexico." The ancient and splendid Church of San Francisco, with its capacious chapel and other buildings, which could not be erected for less than a million of dollars, has been purchased for the sum of $35,000, and is now held for this work. There is also another church in the city, that of St. Joseph, which has been placed at the service of the American Church Missionary Society. "The Church of Jesus," in Mexico, is desirous of becoming a Mexican Protestant Episcopal Church, in accordance with the doctrines and usages of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States. They have already a liturgical service in Spanish, and had a Bishop elect, for whom they had hoped to obtain consecration, in the person of their great preacher, Manual Aguas, who has recently died. The history of this infant church is most touching, and we look to its future development with the deepest interest.—Church and State.

SOME PEOPLE, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, think we slander the papists when we say that they hold to the damnation of unbaptized infants. Look into their standards and see if they do not—e. g., the catechism of the Council of Trent. The Catholic Review, in referring to the Tientsin massacre, alleges it to have been brought on by the zeal of the Catholics exciting the ire of his infernal majesty, since they picked up abandoned infants and baptized them, and adds: "Unbaptized, these little ones go into darkness; but baptized, they rejoice forever in the presence of God!"

GOD'S LOVE.

There's a wideness in God's mercy,
Like the wideness of the sea;
There's a kindness in his justice,
Which is more than liberty.

There is no place where earth's sorrows
Are more felt than up in heaven;
There is no place where earth's failings
Have such kindly judgment given.

There is grace enough for thousands
Of new worlds as great as this;
There is room for fresh creations
In that upper world of bliss.

For the love of God is broader
Than the measure of man's mind;
And the heart of the Eternal
Is most wonderfully kind.

But we make this love too narrow
By false limits of our own;
And we magnify his strictness
With a zeal he will not own.

If our love were but more simple
We should take him at his word;
And our lives would be all sunshine
In the sweetness of our Lord. Faber.

Worldly Conformity.

MR. EDITOR: In Romans xii, 2 we are commanded: "And be not conformed to this world." If the Holy Spirit means just what this language conveys to the mind, does it not become those who profess obedience to the Spirit's teachings earnestly to heed the instruction? Are we as Christians not bound to "come out" from the multitude in respect to their peculiar forms, both of style, socially viewed, as well as of sentiment and conversation? Every truly spiritual being will answer: Yea. "But then," say the mass of professers, "you know we are quite intimate with so and so; they are high in social position, and have so many noble qualities, and are extremely decorous in their views of the Bible, and equally polite in their expressions regarding personal piety. Now does this Scripture leave us no latitude with respect to this class of human beings? Must we conform in all our intercourse with these polite unbelievers to the strict rule of the King's law—never for one instant unbend from a holy walk and godly conversation?" In plain English, is the child of God never to fail to the plane of the world, in order that by becoming all things to all men some may be won to the Lord? The answer must be: Never. It were far better for the church to be shut up to the circle of the godly, and, through contact with holy men and women, grow in spiritual knowledge and heavenly character, than to break the line clearly marked out, and soil the garments of holiness with the filth of the world. Godliness is profitable, but worldliness takes from us not only our minimum of grace, but injects us full of poison to fill the void.

Solomon was wise, and no doubt full of true love to God before contact with luxury and worldly people fed his vanity up to the point of forgetfulness of his dependence. Then, like other human beings, he put this worldly glory above the heavenly and fell. What is the world? In the sense conveyed by Scripture it is the opposite of supreme good—malice, envy, evil-speaking, lewdness, luxury, a total disregard of the spirit of God's word. Now, when we throw ourselves into the mass which crawls in this foul slime, and breathe the tainted atmosphere exhaled therefrom, can we escape the bad influence? And does not the doing so practically say that we see no evil, and give our indorsement as evidence of the fact?

God says we cannot serve him and the world. But are we not, by trying to do the thing he pronounces folly? How many of us fall into low gossip, a laudiug of or apologizing for fashion, guiding our thoughts in the current of mere nothings, that we may please the empty head or dried-up heart of some lover of the world more than of God, even in our manners, dress, living and thought conforming our ways to the world's standard, and not as becometh "strangers and pilgrims." Our weakness will ever cling to us unless we draw in the bracing ailment found in the life hid with Christ in God.

INDAMORA.

Church-Buildings.

MR. EDITOR: We see much in our periodicals, at the present day, about costly and tasteful churches; but comparatively little of the divine influences experienced in those houses, as manifested in the unction of its ministers, and the awakening and conversion of sinners, etc.

I believe it to be often an evidence of zeal for God that interest is shown on this subject; but there is so evidently a tendency in Methodists to congratulate themselves on the costly, fashionable and elegant style of these outward paraphernalia that there is reason for alarm lest we should forget that the true worshipers are only those who worship the Father in spirit and in truth, and that he is not worshiped with temples made with men's hands, as though he needed anything.

My spirit was lately stirred within me while reading an account of the dedication of a Southern Methodist church in Somerset county, Pennsylvania. Approaching this edifice, the sign of the cross is presented to view—symbolic of the grandest and most sacred event which has transpired on earth, but which, as history affords sad testimony, does not increase our reverence for the divine Sufferer, or incline us more perfectly to endure the cross which he has left as a legacy to true believers; but, on the contrary, constant familiarity with the sign has had a tendency to lessen that reverence and to nurture the idolatrous tendencies of the human heart, and its use was justly set aside by true Protestants.

Entering the "audience chamber," our attention is called to "a doorway just back of the reading-desk, which will lead into the vestry." Whether the sacerdotal garments will be assumed, or the church wardens installed, we are not informed. Instead of the altar and pulpit we are next introduced to the chancel rail and rostrum.

It may be in good taste for college graduates to assume the nomenclature of the ancient Roman forum, or to quote in general from Greece and Rome; but methinks it better comports with the spirit of the gospel for Christians to use such language as is most scriptural, and best suited to induce reverence for the worship of God.

It is also desirable that our churches should be "attractive;" but I never knew much good result to congregations drawn to a church by its tasteful arrangements or scientific musical performances. When the awakening power of the Most High is the cause of attraction, we may expect the salvation of God to come out of Zion.

I very much fear that in churches of this class it may be forgotten that one of the proofs rendered by the Savior of his Messiahship was, "The poor have the gospel," and that many may have cause to speak in the following language of "THE OLD MAN IN THE STYLISH CHURCH.

"I had on these coarse clothes of mine, not much the worse for wear,
But then they knew I wasn't one they call a millionaire;
So they led the old man to a seat away back by the door;
'Twas bookless and uncushioned—a reserved seat for the poor.

"Pretty soon in came a stranger with gold ring and clothing fine;
They led him to a cushioned seat far in advance of mine;
I thought that wasn't exactly right to seat him up so near,
When he was young, and I was old and very hard to hear.

"I'm old—I may be childish—but I love simplicity;
I love to see it shining in a Christian's piety;
* * * * * * * *
When we reach the pearly gateways, and look in with joyful eyes,
We'll see no stylish worship in the temple of the skies."

May the Lord grant that his people may be "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets"—builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit, "Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone."

The Young of the Church.

MR. EDITOR: On the young hangs the destiny of the church in the coming generation; and therefore it is all-important that especial attention should be paid to the way in which they are educated and trained. Not only should they have knowledge, in the common appellation of the word, but they should have a thorough knowledge of God. By giving them this you build up the church of God in a greater degree than in any other way.

Another thing, I fear, is too much neglected by ministers as a general thing, and that is not paying enough attention to young converts. By but very little attention, when young persons are first converted, you save them from ever backsliding. But you say: "How is this to be accomplished?" It is by putting them to work. Call on them to pray in public, and by so doing you cut them off from all their evil companions and wicked influences. You throw barriers around them, and help them to withstand temptation. For if a person makes pretensions to piety he is obliged to meet them in every-day life. He cannot go to church and pray on Sunday and lead a wicked life. It is an impossibility. Let the young convert feel that you have an interest in him and his spiritual welfare. A minister is doing a great work who has active young persons in the church, as well as old ones. Pay special attention to the young of your church.

C. A. RICHARDSON.

Revision of the English Bible.

It is now two hundred and sixty-nine years since the famous Hampton Court Conference was held by order of James the First, who had then been only one year upon the throne of England. The best thing that happened there was done by Dr. John Reynolds, once a zealous papist, afterward a learned theological professor in the University of Oxford, a pillar of the Reformation, and the chief controversial antagonist of Cardinal Bellarmine. His proposal was "that a translation be made of the whole Bible, as consonant as can be to the original Hebrew and Greek, and this to be set out and printed without any marginal notes, and only to be used in all churches of England in time of divine service." Six months after the King selected fifty-four learned men to do this work. Seven years of thorough preparation were given to it by forty-seven of these scholars, and in 1611 the authorized version of the English Bible was first published. Substantially it is a revision of Tyndale's Bible of 1534, which was succeeded by those of Coverdale, 1535, Matthews, 1537, Cranmer, 1539, and the Bishop's, 1568. The grand characteristics of Tyndale's Bible and of the authorized version are their faithful rendering of the original tongues, and their thoroughly popular idiomatic English dress. Tyndale's memorable words to a popish divine were thus literally fulfilled: "I will cause a boy that driveth the plow to know more of the Scriptures than you do." It cost him his life to do it, but for these two hundred and sixty years it has been the people's Bible. Mr. Froude has eloquently said of it: "The peculiar genius—if such a term may be permitted—which breathes through it, the mingled tenderness and majesty, the Saxon simplicity, the preternatural grandeur, unequaled, unapproached in the attempted improvements of modern scholars—all are here, and the impress of the mind of one man—William Tyndale."—History of England, iii, page 84. And now, after almost nine generations of the human race have come and gone, this time-honored translation of the Holy Scriptures is again in process of revision by the most eminent biblical scholars of Great Britain and America.

The history and reasons of this movement are succinctly given in Dr. Schaff's introduction to the admirable volume lately published by the Harpers on the Revision of the English New Testament, and which contains the recent treatises of Archbishop Trench, Bishop Ellicott and Prof. Lightfoot, on the principles and methods of revision. It is a complete hand-book on this subject, and has also a permanent critical value to every ministerial student of the book.

The work of Archbishop Trench was published in 1859 as a tentative preparatory essay [illegible] revision. Yet he regarded it as almost indefinitely postponed, by the acknowledged sectarian differences between Churchmen and Dissenters, which would prevent even scholarly co-operation, and consequently the general acceptance by the English people of any revision that might be made by Churchmen alone. But that difficulty has been already overcome. Eleven years later, on May 6, 1870, the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, after long discussion, adopted the report of a committee consisting of eight bishops, and other eminent dignitaries, in favor of a revision of the authorized version, and appointed "a body of its own members to undertake the work of revision, who shall be at liberty to invite the co-operation of any eminent for scholarship, to whatever nation or religious body they may belong."

The Convocation of York did not, in its corporate capacity, unite in this movement. The eight bishops and eight presbyters, constituting the Canterbury Committee, soon met, and divided themselves into two companies—the one for the revision of the Old Testament, and the other for that of the New Testament. They also invited and secured the co-operation of the most capable biblical scholars of the Church of England, and of the Presbyterian, Independent, Baptist, Wesleyan and other Christian denominations.

Through Dr. Schaff, at the request of the English company, two companies of American revisers have also been chosen—men of the highest reputation for biblical scholarship, and representing the Episcopal, Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Reformed, Congregational and Lutheran churches.

Thus the best Christian scholarship of England and America is now unitedly and deliberately pursuing the most arduous and difficult work that has taxed the learning, the good sense, the unity and the piety of English Christianity for nearly three centuries.

The authorized version was seven years in preparation. This revision may require all of that time or more. It should not and will not be hastened. Every verse, phrase, idiom, word, letter and punctuation-mark must be carefully examined, compared with the original, and with standard English versions. Each of the revising companies meets together around a common table, after careful private studies by individuals and sub-committees, for the purpose of discussing readings, marginal references, textual criticisms, exegesis, and every other point of minutest attention—so finishing, on an average, about forty verses each day.

The principles adopted are substantially as follows: First of all, the companies are to follow the spirit of the old rules of the translators of 1611. Next they are to introduce as few alterations as possible in the text of the authorized version, consistently with faithfulness. They are to limit, as far as possible, the expression of such alterations to the language of the authorized and earlier English versions. Each company is to go twice over its work, deciding the first time upon proposed changes by majorities, and the second time by two-thirds of all present, for final action. A vote of one-third will carry any mooted point over to another meeting for more deliberate discussion. Headings of chapters, pages, paragraphs, italics and punctuation will also be revised. Each company will be in constant communication with the other, and both may ask the opinions of any eminent divines, scholars and literary men at home and abroad, whenever it is deemed desirable.

The American revisers receive from time to time, copies of the revised version from the English companies as they are finished, for examination and revision, and these are returned, with their notes and comments, for use in the final revision.

The two Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, in consideration of the copyright, have agreed to defray the cost of printing and other necessary expenses while the work is in progress. But no part of it will be published, except for the private use of the revisers, until the whole is completed. The wisdom of this precaution is self-evident.

After the work is done it will be left, like the Latin version of Jerome, and our authorized English version itself, to work its own way to public attention. There is no power upon earth that can force it upon the English-speaking race. It will be accepted or rejected upon its own merits. If it should be well received, perhaps two generations may pass away before it will become the people's Bible. It may never be other than a scholarly addition to our already great store of English versions of the word of God. The British and Foreign and the American Bible societies will undoubtedly continue to circulate their only authorized common version until the voice of the people becomes strong enough to compel the adoption of the new revision. Sects may have their versions, like those of some of the Baptists and the Unitarians. The most effectual antidote to the spread of sectarian versions, as we think, will be found in the greater success of the present work. And the best security for such a result lies in the fact that it is not to be a new translation, nor a new version, but a careful revision, adhering to the pure vernacular English, correcting only acknowledged errors of texts, translation and of printing, of changing obsolete expressions, and making it in all respects a faithful and popular rendering of the sacred originals. In this way only the present revisers will be able to carry out and complete the declared purpose of the translators in their preface of King James' Bible: "Truly, good Christian reader, we never thought from the beginning that we should need to make an entirely new translation; nor yet to make of a bad one a good one; but to make a good one better, or, out of many good ones, one principal good one, not justly to be excepted against—that hath been our endeavor, that our mark."

The objections which are made to the present work are fully discussed in the volume referred to, and with singular candor. They are substantially those which were encountered by the venerable translators of the authorized version. Dr. Lightfoot has a fine chapter in the opening of his work on Revision, in which he runs a striking parallel between the translation, difficulties, opposition and publication of Jerome's Latin Bible in the fourth century, and the English Bibles of Tyndale and King James. It is one of the most instructive lessons of biblical history, and especially is it significant in its bearings upon the work now in progress. But really the objections and difficulties are less formidable now. And if, as Dr. Schaff and other scholars declare, the learning now engaged upon it and the critical apparatus are equal to the task, it may be reasonably anticipated that the results will be seen in the noblest monument of modern Christian scholarship; a faithful, standard, revised and accepted English Bible.—Christian Intelligencer.

Are Missions a Failure?

The London Times having pronounced foreign missions a failure, Lord Lawrence, known as the "Savior of India," and whose long experience in India in almost every civil capacity, from the lowest to the highest, entitles his opinion to great weight, has written a reply, which we condense as follows:

"A mere enumeration of the countries in which missionaries are employed would suffice to show that there are no grounds for stating that they give up any race or region as inaccessible. But instead of referring to Africa, New Zealand, Northwestern America and other fields in which the Church of England is laboring, I will restrict myself to India, of which I have personal knowledge. Those who are disappointed at the results of missionary labors in this country must bear in mind that the Hindoos, who form the bulk of the population, have shown such tenacity to their faith that eight centuries of Mohammedan rule had left the masses as strongly wedded as ever to their system of caste and to their religious belief and rites. In almost all other countries the Mohammedans had succeeded in proselytizing the people whom they had subjugated, but in India they found a religious system which had so molded every thought and habit and custom of the people that the sword of persecution wielded by some of the Delhi emperors, and the temporal advantages offered by others, had no effect except upon an insignificant number of the Hindoos.

"Bearing in mind that general missionary effort in India dates from 1813, and that even now missionaries are sent forth in such inadequate numbers that, with few exceptions, only the large towns and centers have been occupied (some of them with a single missionary,) it was scarcely to be expected that in the course of sixty years the idols of India would be utterly abolished; the wonder rather is that already there are so many unmistakable indications that Hindooism is fast losing its hold upon the affections of the people.

"But you say there is no human enterprise of such organization as the missions of the Church of England which shows such poor results. Is this indeed the case? It is very difficult to estimate the effects of moral, and still less of spiritual work. Those of material operations are palpable to even superficial observation. Not so in the other case. One must look deeply, one must understand the people subject to such influences, before it is possible to estimate the effects which have been produced on their minds and characters. The number of actual converts to Christianity in India, including Burmah and Ceylon, is not insignificant. By the latest returns, which are trustworthy, their numbers do not fall much short of three hundred thousand. But these numbers do not by any means give an adequate estimate of the results of missionary labor. There are thousands of persons scattered over India, who, from the knowledge which they have acquired, either directly or indirectly, from the dissemination of Christian truth, of Christian principles, have lost all belief in Hindooism and Mohammedanism, and are in their conduct influenced by higher motives, who yet fear to make an open profession of the change in them, lest they should be looked on as outcasts and lepers by their own people. Such social circumstances must go on influencing converts until the time comes when their numbers are sufficiently large to enable them to stand forth and show their faith, without ruin to their position in life.

"You tell us again that there ought to be many returned missionaries, and even converts, who ought not to be ashamed of their position. Alas! but few of the former live to see their native land, or, at any rate, to pass the remnant of their lives in it after years of toil abroad. But those who know, or have known, such men as Lacroix, Dr. Duff, Dr. Wilson, C. B. Leupolt and Mr. Smith (both of Benares,) Edward Stuart, John Barton, Valpy French, Joseph Weiland and Robert Clark, and many others whose names for the moment escape my memory, within the last twenty years, cannot have a doubt that we have earnest and faithful Christian missionaries still in our ranks. It is only a month ago since we heard of the death of one of this class, Dr. William Elmslie, who for the last seven years devoted his life to the good cause in Kashmere, and whose death was caused by the privations and exposure incident to the discharge of the duties he had undertaken in that country.

"I will not deny that we do not see as many Christian converts among the natives of India as we would wish, but, nevertheless, there are such men to be found. The Maharajah Duleep Sing is, I believe, a true specimen of that class in England. Many of your readers will recall the sub-assistant surgeon at Delhi (formerly a Hindoo in religion,) who, at the outbreak of the mutiny, gave up his life rather than renounce the Christian faith which he professed. There are few Englishmen who have taken an interest in Indian missions who could not produce many other cases of the kind. Men like Lord Napier, of Merchistoun, Sir Bartle Frere and others, have borne testimony to the good fruits of missionary enterprise in India; and in such men as the late Bishop Heber, Bishop Cotton, and the present Bishop Milman and Bishop Gell, we have had and still have clergymen who, both by their example and devotion to their duties, have advanced the faith which they have preached."

TUNE OR NO TUNE.

BY H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

Brethren, it has been my misfortune to be a tuneless man here on earth; but when I get up there, and hear the angels strike up that grand song, I expect to fall in, tune or no tune.—Substance of a remark made by Bishop Kavanaugh, in a sermon at our Conference in Meridian, Mississippi, December, 1871.

When o'er Death's dark and chilly stream
My new-fledged soul has swept,
And heaven's glittering splendors gleam
Upon my vision rapt;

And when that song that never dies—
The loud trisagion—
Shall burst from those celestial choirs,
And roll in flood-tides on;

And when, o'er fields of glory wide,
The quivering symphonies roll,
Until the mighty tide-tide
Shall overwhelm my soul;

And when, thus overwhelmed, my soul
Shall all transported stand,
And gaze and list the mighty whole,
In mute amazement grand;

I'll join that vast adoring throng—
My tuneless voice I'll raise—
With "tune or no tune" sing that song,
And swell the tide of praise!

ROLLING FORK, Miss., Feb. 15, 1873.

SHORT TEMPERANCE SERMONS.—Every moderate drinker could abandon the intoxicating cup if he would; every inebriate would if he could.

Those men who destroy a healthful constitution of body by intemperance and an irregular life, do as manifestly kill themselves as those who hang or poison or drown themselves.

I challenge any man who understands the nature of ardent spirits, and yet for the sake of gain continues to be in the traffic, to show that he is not involved in the guilt of murder.

I am deeply convinced that the evils of intemperance can never cease till the virtuous in society shall unite in pronouncing the man who attempts to accumulate wealth by dealing out poison and death to his neighbor as infamous.

Some of the domestic evils of drunkenness are homes without windows, gardens without fences, fields without tillage, barns without roofs, children without clothing, principles, morals or manners.

Who has a stupid intellect, a broken memory and a blasted wit, and, which is worse than all, a blind and benighted conscience, but the Intemperate? So impossible is it for man to turn sot without making himself a block head too.

HEART DISEASE.—The London Lancet says: "The death returns show that during the last twenty years there has been a steadily progressive rise in the registered mortality from heart disease in England and Wales. In the year 1850 the recorded fatal cases numbered 11,356, in 1860 they amounted to 11,758, and in 1870 to 25,250. We get a more accurate measure of this increase when the growth of the population is taken into account. Thus in the quinquennium 1851–55 the average annual mortality from heart disease among males was 7.3 per 10,000 males living; in the next five years it was 8.4; in 1861–65 it was 9.9, and 10.9 in 1866–70. The fatality of the disease among females was slightly below the foregoing male ratios, but was marked by an equally rapid growth in the four groups of years. Fully one-third of the entire mortality of males, as well as of females, occurred between the ages of forty-five and sixty-five; in the first twenty years of life the fatality is comparatively slight—less than 2 per 10,000; from twenty to forty-five years, and over sixty years, the range is from 5 to 8 per 10,000."

OBITUARIES.

ON THE THIRD of January, 1873, the portals of heaven were opened to receive the rejoicing spirit of Mrs. CYNTHIA A. BEERS; and two days later her mortal remains were laid to rest in a beautiful and quiet spot, selected by herself in life as her last resting-place.

She had been a devoted and exemplary member of the Methodist Church for many years, and her greatest delight was to hear the word of God expounded by its faithful ministers. She loved to talk of the divine Savior, whom she loved, and from her faithful and Christian-like walk in life, and the blessed words uttered upon her dying bed, her friends have every reason to believe that she has passed from "death unto life."

What a consolation to the bereaved ones to know that she is "not lost, but gone before;" and now, in an over-sunny land, wears white robes and bears the palm-branch of victory, and with other guardian angels she is "watching and waiting" for the dear ones left behind.

YAZOO CITY, Miss., March 2, 1873.

MRS. REBECCA M. PENNINGTON, wife of J. D. Pennington, and daughter of the late Rev. Robert Adams, was born in South Carolina, whence she moved with her father, in childhood, to Macon county, Alabama, and afterward, in company with her first husband, to Louisiana, where she died, after a lingering illness of more than two years, at the home of her husband, near Arizona, in Claiborne parish, on the tenth of February, 1873.

Deceased was married early in life to William A. Barnett, with whom she lived happily a number of years, becoming the mother of several children. Hedying, she was again joined in wedlock, with J. D. Pennington, to whom she was a wife indeed.

Raised in the lap of religion, she early laid hold of its precious promises, and attached herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which she was a consistent and useful member till God said: "It is enough; come up higher." She bore the sufferings of her last illness, which were intense as well as protracted, with that resignation and fortitude that became her life-long profession. She often asserted that her trust was well founded and her sky clear. Among the last words she uttered in the agonies of death were: "His promises are being fulfilled." A FRIEND.

MY WIFE, MRS. MARTHA A. NICHOLSON, daughter of J. A. and D. Winn, was born in Jackson county, Georgia, December 10, 1832, and died of pneumonia, in Pickens county, Alabama, at five o'clock P. M., January 20, 1873.

She was baptized in infancy by Rev. Walker Glenn. When nine years of age she professed religion and joined the Methodist Church. Her conversion was so clear and powerful that there never was a doubt upon her mind as to the genuineness of the change of heart she had realized. When she arrived at a more mature age she became much interested in the doctrine of sanctification, or 'Christian' perfection, and availed herself of all the helps she could get to grasp that grand and glorious doctrine. Studiously and prayerfully did she read the Bible and the writings of Wesley and Fletcher on that subject, in which she was so much interested. Deeply did she feel the necessity and importance of sanctification. Earnestly did she seek and soon obtained the blessing. She was in a perfect ecstasy of joy. Tongue could not express the happiness she realized. It was full redemption in Christ Jesus. She possessed a strong, active, vigorous intellect, and her broad, comprehensive mind was well supplied with useful and religious knowledge, which she so often used to good account.

She delighted in reading, but I never knew her to spend as much as one hour's time in reading light literature. She was delighted and edified with the writings of Wesley, Fletcher and Watson. She was devotedly attached to the Bible, from which she obtained so much sound wisdom and sweet consolation. She was amiable in her disposition, chaste and prudent in conversation, modest and unassuming in her manners, and upright in deportment. She was always cheerful, but did not indulge in levity. She was a delightful singer, and many have been delighted and edified by her inimitable singing.

She had great power in prayer, and often, when she led in prayer, have I known Christians to rejoice and sinners to weep. In prayer she possessed so much fervor and earnestness, so much humility, such child-like simplicity, her confidence in the promises of the Bible was so firm and unshaken, her faith was so uncompromising, that she had audience with God, and would lead the congregation up to the mercy seat. She was a devoted wife and mother, and was always deeply interested in the mental and religious interest of her children, and was untiring in her efforts to make her family happy.

For about twenty years she enjoyed the blessing of sanctification. I have never known a more consecrated and self-denying Christian than she was, always living in the higher regions of our holy Christianity. Her experience was deep and rich and ripe. Her happiness was solid and constant, and her pathway was one of perpetual sunshine. For fifteen years she endured the privations of an itinerant life. Often the hand of affliction rested heavily upon her, but at all times she was resigned to the will of God. She possessed the true itinerant spirit, and when I became discouraged, and tempted to quit my work, she plead with me as none but a devoted wife could plead for me to continue in the work. Invariably would she pray in secret at least three times a day, and often would she rejoice for hours. I have never known one that prayed and rejoiced so much. For fifteen years she was my companion in joy, in affliction and in the work of the gospel. She was a helpmate indeed, and rendered efficient service in the Sabbath school, in the class meetings, in prayer meetings and in protracted meetings. In the altar she labored very successfully in leading penitents to the cross. At home, with her own family, she exerted a hallowed influence. Her counsels and admonitions were wise and judicious. Her example was ever worthy of imitation. In my absence from home she would always hold family prayer, and often when I was at home, at my request, she would conduct our family worship, and make it profitable and edifying.

During her last sickness she said to me: "That is to me the most delightful passage of Scripture—'Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled.'" A few hours before her death she said to me: "My dear, I am so happy; the Lord is so gracious to me. Bless the Lord, oh! my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name." For hours did she rejoice in the love of God. We were hopeful of her recovery until within five minutes of her death. The favorable symptoms appeared to be predominating; she was resting easy, breathing freely and naturally, sleeping quietly—sweetly as a babe—when an angel came and kissed her soul away. She went to sleep and woke up in glory, and she now realizes that the pure in heart shall see God. She dwells in realms of light and love; she rests upon the mount of glory. Our babe preceded her about twenty-four hours to the better land. The mortal remains of my dear Mattie were buried at Andrew chapel, with my precious babe in her arms; and there they will rest quietly until the resurrecting angel comes and bids them rise and put on a blissful immortality.

A MYSTERY.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

The river, hemmed with leaning trees,
Wound through its meadows green;
A low, blue line of mountains showed
The open pines between.

One sharp, tall peak above them all
Clear into sunlight sprang;
I saw the river of my dreams,
The mountains that I sang.

No skew of memory led me on,
But well the ways I knew;
A feeling of familiar things
With every footstep grew.

Not otherwise above its crag
Could lean the blasted pine;
Not otherwise the maple hold
Aloft its red ensign.

So up the long and shorn foot-hills
The mountain road should creep;
So, green and low, the meadow field
Its red-haired kine should sleep.

The river wound as it should wind;
Their place the mountains took.
The white, torn fringes of their clouds
Wore no unwonted look.

Yet never before that river's rim
Was pressed by feet of mine;
Never before mine eyes had crossed
That broken mountain line.

A presence, strange at once and known,
Walked with me as my guide;
The skirts of some forgotten life
Trailed noiseless at my side.

Was it a dim-remembered dream?
Or glimpse through scenes old?
The secret which the mountains kept,
The river never told.

But from the vision, ere it passed,
A tender hope I drew,
And, pleasant as a dawn of spring,
The thought within me grew.

That love would temper every change,
And soften all surprise,
And, misty with the dreams of earth,
The hills of heaven arise.

The Millerite Scare.

The year 1842 was marked by the sudden rise, and 1843 by the fall of the Millerites, a sect who had been deluded with the notion that the Lord Jesus Christ would come in visible person, on a certain day in the latter year, to receive his saints, to destroy his enemies, and establish his throne on the earth. They took their name from William Miller, a Baptist minister in the northern part of this State, who had studied the prophecies until he knew nothing about them, and by a process in arithmetic peculiar to himself had hit upon the year when the final catastrophe was to occur, to the confusion of the wicked and the glorification of all who were found waiting for the coming of the Lord. It was wonderful with what avidity this delusion was received. Its dupes numbered thousands. They were not of the more intelligent classes; indeed very few educated people were led astray; but of serious-minded and unlettered multitudes, who composed the great mass of the community at that time. The sudden converts to Millerism were many. One reason that operated rapidly upon this sort of people was the shortness of time allowed them to make up their minds. They were told that the end was at hand. First the year was fixed; then the month and the day. And, to make a sure thing of it, they thought the safest course was to believe, and if the crash came at the appointed time they would be all right, and if it did not they would be no worse off than before on account of their faith in the figures of Miller. And I am inclined to think that Miller's name, having an apparent analogy to millenarianism, helped to faith in his calculations. Thousands of excellent Christian men, scholars, divines—some of them men of wide repute for learning and religion—are millenarians; believing in the future personal reign of Jesus Christ upon the earth and in his speedy coming to set up his throne. But they do not set the time. Some writers of this school have found in the figures of the prophet Daniel a starting-point and a period, and have, therefore, ventured to fix the year when the King might be expected to appear in his glory; but in all such cases the march of time has compelled them to find errors in their calculations by which the great event was necessarily postponed.

But in the Millerite year the delusion took the form of an epidemic or panic. The leaders of the sect perambulated the country with immense tents in which to hold public meetings, and these were crowded for days and nights in succession by excited congregations, whose prayers and songs and cries bordered on the delirious. Many did become deranged. Lunatic asylums reported this delusion as the cause of insanity in many cases.

One night, very late, a man came to me with a message from God that I must believe in the speedy advent, and teach it to the people. He would not be put off with the excuse that it was nearly midnight, and I could not listen to his discourse at such an unseasonable hour. He said that nothing was so important as the revelation he had come to make, and that it was high time I heard it. Then he began with his figures. He added, subtracted and divided, piled up dates from history and prophecy, told of the "abomination of desolation" that was to be set up and that was set up, and started off from that date and calculated the downfall of the Roman empire and the death of Napoleon, and brought out 1843 as neatly as the most accurate mathematician could desire. Out of breath at the end of his computation, and triumphing in the result, he demanded my assent to his conclusion.

I looked up at him and quietly asked: "And what do you make of the two sticks?"

"Sticks—what sticks?" he said.

"Well, sir," I replied, "if you are an expositor of the prophecies and do not know the two sticks of which the prophet speaks, you must excuse me from receiving any messages from you as coming from heaven." He soon left me to my fate.

Some of the societies were so sure the end was at hand that they put their individual possessions, which were usually very slender, into joint stock, in imitation of the early Christians who had "all things common." In Oneida county, New York, a well-to-do farmer being converted to their doctrine came to join their church, and, on being told of this rule, said he would think of it awhile and pray over it. He went away sorrowful, for he was very rich. At the next meeting he appeared, and upon being called upon for his answer, he said he had received a message from heaven and was prepared to obey. "While engaged in prayer for divine direction," said he, "I have had one passage of the Bible so powerfully impressed upon my mind that I know it is from God, and I shall do as I am commanded."

The brethren and sisters were in breathless expectation of the tremendous sacrifice he was about to make. The elder bade him be of good courage, and declare the message. And the rich man said:

"The passage that came to my mind, and which I am resolved to obey, was in these words: 'Occupy till I come.'"

And when the appointed time arrived thousands of them were ready, as far as their white raiment could be regarded as readiness for such an event. So purely carnal and earthly were all their views of this great spiritual change that they made linen garments, called "ascension robes," with which they arrayed themselves. Some of them, in cities, took their seats upon the edge of the house-tops. Others, in the country, ascended hills, or climbed into trees and sat as patiently as possible, while their locks were wet with the dews of the night. They thought they would see the Lord descending from the sky, and that they would rise to meet him in the air. It was easy to believe that a mistake of a day, or even of a month had been made in reckoning thousands of years, and many, therefore, thought the advent was still at hand, though they had not hit upon the identical day. Others gave up to wild despair. Many were made faithless in Scripture when they found they had been duped by false teachers. I never heard that any were made more charitable, more patient, humble Christians. The prominent trait of character in the Millerites was their censorious and denunciatory spirit toward those who would not adopt their arithmetic. But their end came when they thought the world was coming to an end. The awful day came. The sun rose, shone as usual, and just as it was in the habit of doing. And then the moon made its quiet tour among the stars, and died away in the light of another day. And all things went on as from the beginning. Two or three other dates were fixed upon, and previous errors of calculation were explained, but the end would not come, any way they could fix it. Miller subsided into his farm, which it was reported he had vastly enlarged by cheap purchases of those who did not set a high price on lands they were soon to leave. Elder Himes, who had been the Judas Achates of Miller, and had blown the trumpets in advance of the coming King, blew on, but, as before, it was all wind, sound and fury, signifying nothing. And now, after the lapse of a quarter of a century, there is not a vestige remaining of a faith that took possession of thousands, and had its disciples in almost every city and village and rural parish of the Northern, Eastern and Middle States.

In the month of January, 1854, I found a miserable, half-starved colony of this sect in the Holy Land. Their delusion had received the additional article of faith that the Lord would set up his kingdom in Palestine, and reign again in the city of the Great King. They had gathered what earthly possessions they had, and finding their way across the ocean, and through the Mediterranean sea, had landed at the ancient Joppa, where dwelt, once on a time, that Simon the tanner, to whom Cornelius sent. Near this city they had bought a little land, which cost them but a trifle; they had reared little cots, and were there waiting. Poverty came, but the Lord did not. Loneliness, homesickness, disease, but no signs of the Healer and Savior. Some of them lived to be brought away by the hand of charity, and some of them died there, and their bodies do rest in the grave until the resurrection, when they shall be raised up, let us hope, in glory. But the Son of Man has not come, and is not likely to come soon. To each one of us he comes when our work is done, and it is the part of wisdom to be always ready.

Siam.

It is remarkable, but nevertheless is a fact, that the real name of this country is not Siam. The Siamese do not know it by that title, but call their country Thai, or Monang-Thai, which means "Free," or "The Kingdom of the Free." The population of Siam is about six millions, of whom about two millions are Chinese. The Siamese are rigid Buddhists, and the country abounds in splendid temples and monasteries. In Bangkok alone there are more than one hundred Buddhist monasteries, and, it is said, ten thousand monks and novices. Moreover, every male Siamese, some time during his life, and generally in the prime of it, takes orders as a monk, and retires for some months or years to practice abstinence and meditation in a monastery.

Polygamy prevails extensively in Siam. The King has as many wives as he pleases, and some of the nobles have thirty or forty. Notwithstanding this, there is a great deal of domestic happiness in Siam, and suicides and husband or wife murders are infrequent. In Siamese households one of the wives is recognized as the head wife, and to her belongs the supervision of the establishment, even to providing for the wants and comforts of her husband's other wives. It does not follow that the woman who was the first wife is the head wife—she may be one of the others; and hence there is no heir apparent to the throne, though custom has established that the eldest son of a Siamese sovereign by his queen or queen-consort is his probable successor, subject to the electing voice of the Senabawdee, or grand council of princes and nobles. A Siamese king may have two queens at the same time, in which case the more favored lady is styled "the right hand," and the other "the left hand" of the throne. There is also a subordinate kingship in Siam, the "second king" being elected by the grand council, from one of the royal family, the supreme king consenting. He is allowed a palace and retinue, and need not prostrate himself before the king, but is only required to salute him by raising his hands and joining them above his head. He must renew his oath of allegiance twice a year. His functions are indefinite and insignificant.

The fertility of the land is inexhaustible. The country is a vast plain, fringed by lofty mountains crowned with impenetrable forests. Grain and fruit of great variety grow spontaneously under the tropical heat, the staples being rice, sugar, indigo, cotton, tobacco, coffee and figs. Ivory, beeswax, honey, raw silk, and numerous aromatic gums and spices abound. The woods are palms yielding sugar, and forests of teak, ebony, satinwood and eagle-wood. The variety and beauty of the scenery, and the luxuriance of flowers, foliage and picturesque forests render it a very attractive country. There are also rich mines of iron, antimony, silver and gold. In the months of June, July and August the country is inundated by the waters of the great river Melkhoug and its tributaries, which unite with the Melnam and Phibsaluk, and overflow the entire plain, so that boats traverse it in every direction without injury to the young rice crop which is springing up underneath. The regulation of this inundation offers a fine field for engineering; and together with the introduction of gas, water, railways and the interchange of the products of the country, afford a grand opportunity for enterprising and competent Englishmen and Americans.

Siam is remarkable for its vast ruins and remains of temples, the origin of which is unknown, but which are of great antiquity. Among these ruins are two imposing stone bridges, five hundred feet long and eighty broad, carried on arches which rest firmly on their foundations. They are buttressed by fifty huge stone pillars, and support a road-bed composed of immense blocks of stones. The remains of the temples show that they were all built on the plan of a cross, called "phram," denoting the four cardinal points. This cross is also invariably found on all the religious monuments. One of these temples, at Naghkon Watt, is a wonderful structure, three miles in circumference, with walls from seventy to eighty feet high, and twenty feet thick. An adjunct of the temples, called the Pra-cha-di, resembles the small chambers of the Egyptian pyramids. They would seem to have been either sepulchral or commemorative of events in the life of Buddha, of whom they are supposed to contain relics. They are built on a series of terraces, which gradually diminish till one-half their height is attained, when they are succeeded by a handsome spire, fluted and ornamented, the whole reaching an altitude of two hundred and fifty feet.

At the present moment Siam offers singular attractions for foreigners, as their services are required in a vast variety of ways. Americans, Englishmen and Frenchmen are already there in numbers, superintending factories, constructing machinery, building steamships and locomotives, laying out telegraph and railway lines, organizing the military and marine services, teaching schools, practicing medicine and preaching the gospel.—Christian Intelligencer.

How the Work Goes On.—Rev. Thomas Craven sends to the Missionary Advocate a very cheering account of progress of Sunday schools among the people of India. He says: "One of the most encouraging features of our mission work in India is the prominence to which the Sunday school work has attained. Frequent attempts have been made to gather the children to tell them of Christ, but not until recently has any great success been realized. The opposition from both Hindoos and Mohammedans has been very strong, and their prejudices fixed. Now this opposition is giving way; their prejudices are being weakened by the spread of gospel light and truth. In Lucknow we have eight hundred Sunday school scholars, taught by converted teachers. In Moradabad there are three hundred and fifty. In Cawnpore, two hundred. In Roy-Bareilly, a small station, and noted for its antagonism toward the gospel, we have one hundred and fifty Sunday school scholars. In our other stations also the work is equally progressing. Had we more teachers we could have a much greater work. Every attempt that has been made to open a Sunday school, since this work commenced, has been successful. The children come gladly. Some walk long distances—two miles or more. At first we had to close our Sunday schools when the melas, or heathen festivals, conflicted with them; the boys ran off to the melas. We do not close them any more, for half the boys give the Sunday school the preference. Remember these boys in your prayers. Ask God to bless them with his converting grace, and make them useful in spreading this good work."

A Shakespearean was reading "A Midsummer Night's Dream" to the sailors of a ship on which he was crossing the Atlantic; and they listened with pleasure till he came to the passage which describes "a mermaid sitting on a dolphin's back," when an old salt burst out: "That's nonsense! A dolphin's back is as sharp as a razor, and no mermaid could ride one till she'd saddled him."

Alas! If the principles of contentment are not within us, the height of station and worldly grandeur will as soon add a cubit to a man's stature as to his happiness.

The Unanswerable Argument.

A converted infidel, who had resisted every other means, stood up in a crowded church and said: "I am a brand plucked out of the burning fire. The change in my views and feelings is astonishing to myself; and all brought about by the grace of God, and the unanswerable argument. It was a cold morning in January, and I had just began my labor at the anvil in my shop, when I looked out and saw Elder B. approaching. As he drew near I saw he was agitated; his look was full of earnestness. His eyes were bedimmed with tears. He took me by the hand. His breast heaved with emotion, and with indescribable tenderness he said: 'Mr. R., I am greatly concerned for your salvation;' and he burst into tears. He often essayed to speak, but not a word could he utter, and finding that he could say no more, he turned, went out of the shop, mounted his horse and rode slowly away.

"'Greatly concerned for my salvation;' said I audibly, and I stood and forgot to bring my hammer down! 'Greatly concerned for my salvation.' Here is a new argument, thought I, for religion, which I never heard before, and I know not how to answer it. Had the elder reasoned with me I could have confounded him; but here is no threadbare argument for the truth of religion. Religion must move the soul with benevolent, holy, mighty impulses, or this man would not feel as he does: 'Greatly concerned for my salvation.' It rung through my ears like a thunder-clap in a clear sky. 'Greatly concerned ought I to be for my own salvation,' said I. 'What shall I do to be saved?'

"I went into my house. My poor pious wife, whom I had so often ridiculed for her religion, exclaimed: 'Why, Mr. R., what is the matter with you?' 'Matter enough,' said I, filled with agony—'matter enough. Elder B. has rode two miles this cold morning to tell me he was greatly concerned for my salvation. What shall I do?' She advised me to go and see him. No sooner said than done. I mounted my horse and pursued after him. I found him alone in that same little room where he had spent the whole night in prayer for my soul. 'I am come,' said I to him, 'to tell you I am greatly concerned for my own salvation.'

"'Praised be God,' said the elder. 'It is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners, even the very chief,' and he began at the same Scripture, and preached unto me Jesus. On that same floor we knelt, and together we prayed, and we did not separate that day till God spoke peace to my soul."

The Spirit of Discontent.—The other day we stood by a cooper who was playing a merry tune with his adz round a cask.

"Ah!" said he, "mine is a hard lot—forever trotting like a dog—driving a hoop."

"Heigh-ho!" sighed the blacksmith on a hot summer day, as he wiped the perspiration from his brow, while the red iron glowed on the anvil; "this is life with a vengeance—melting and frying one's self over a hot fire."

"Oh! that I was a carpenter," ejaculated the shoemaker as he bent over his lapstone. "Here I am day after day, wearing my soul away, making soles for others—cooped up in this little seven-by-nine room. Hi-ho-hum!"

"I'm sick of this out-door work!" exclaimed the bricklayer; "boiling under the sweltering sun or exposed to the inclemency of the weather. I wish I were a tailor!"

"This is too bad!" pettishly cried the tailor, "to be compelled to sit perched up here plying the needle all the time. Would that mine were a more active life."

"Last day of grace!—banks won't discount—customer's won't pay—what shall I do?" grumbles the merchant. "I had rather be a truck-horse, a dog or anything else."

"Happy fellows!" groans the lawyer, as he scratches his head over some dry, musty records; "happy fellows! I had rather hammer stones all day than puzzle my head on these tedious, vexatious questions."

And through all the ramifications of society all are complaining of their condition, finding fault with their calling. "If it were only this, that or the other I should be content," is the universal cry; "anything but what I am." So wags the world; so has it wagged, and so it will wag.

The Mountains of Colorado.—The mountain ranges of Colorado cover an area of from 60,000 to 70,000 square miles. This excludes bodily the entire territory east of this point. All Switzerland covers but 16,000 square miles, or, to be accurate, 15,995. The fact is, Switzerland, compared to Colorado, is as one of the little wooden toy cows to a living buffalo. You can take up the whole little State and set it down in either the North, Middle or South Parks, without touching the rim of the mountains which wall in these grand and singular inclosures. These parks are each of them from 24,000 to 28,000 square miles in extent, and the San Luis is nearly as large as all three.

So far as to magnitude, which is certainly an element of mountain scenery. As to pure scenic beauty, of course the evidence cannot be reduced to figures; but it is reasonable to suppose that this vast expanse of gigantic ranges, endless canons, bottomless gulches, with its lake swung 12,000 feet in air, and its cascades and icy waterfalls still higher—with its eternal snows and preadamite stone forests of tropical effloresence—offers all of picturesque and wild effect that any other land or region can claim. Call Switzerland the "miniature Colorado of Europe," if you please, but let us have done forever with the other phrase, which has no meaning in itself, and is a detraction of our own land.

Live in an atmosphere of prayer, lifting up your heart momentarily to God, in varied expressions of devotion, as the various occasions of life may prompt.

Religious Intelligence.

The corner-stone of a new Anglo-vernacular school-house was laid at Tillur, India, on November 5, by the Rev. Dr. Johnson, of the American Methodist mission.

The Catholic Church in Great Britain has about 2,500 priests, 1,620 churches, eighty-two religious communities for men, 280 for women, and 4,500,000 lay members.

For European Turkey.—Rev. F. W. Flocken and Rev. Henry Buchtel are under appointment for Bulgaria, and expected to leave for their field of labor on or about February 8.

During the continuance of a revival which has been in progress at Staunton, Virginia, there were 250 conversions, 153 of which joined the Methodist Church, and the remainder connected themselves with other churches.

The Chinese Catholics have forwarded to the Pope an offering of 13,862 francs; in return for which his holiness has sent back by a Jesuit missionary a chalice to the cathedral of Pekin and a special benediction to all good Catholics in China.

If not an item of religious intelligence, the fact that the organist of All Saints' church, Hertford, England, has held his post for eighty-one years is certainly unparalleled in the history of any congregation. The veteran's name is Bridgeman, and he now retires in the full possession of all his faculties, although nearly a centenarian.

Each lady member of the Congregational churches in Iowa is asked to contribute one cent per day for five years, to make up an endowment fund of $20,000 for the female department of the State college—a novel scheme of "systematic benevolence," but perhaps the true one. We pray for "daily" bread; why not provide daily for the good of others?

La Roma Evangelica is to be published twice a month at Rome. The editor tells us that the title—"Evangelical Rome"—has been chosen because "we believe that from Rome ought now to spring every initiative of what is good, whether in religion or politics." Among the contributors are the names of Signori, Gavazzi, F. Svitts, F. Scinrelli, V. Ravi, etc.

The great revival in the Methodist Episcopal Church at Keyport, New Jersey, still continues. On Sunday, the twenty-second ultimo, 115 had united with the church. The Weekly says: "The like has not been seen in these parts since 1842, and the prayers of the Christian people are constantly ascending for a continuance of the work of the Spirit of God in the minds of the people of this community."

Christ Church, Boston, boasts the oldest Sunday school in New England. The church itself is the oldest now used for worship in that city. George the Second presented it with a communion service and books, which are now in use. It has a marble bust of Washington. Its chandeliers were taken by a British cruiser from a French vessel and presented to the church. This year it celebrated its one hundred and fiftieth anniversary.

The Church of Scotland in Nova Scotia undertook, last year, its foreign missionary enterprise with very considerable doubts as to the propriety of the scheme, because of the poverty of its resources. One missionary offered his services, and was set to work shortly afterward; a second missionary applied, and after more hesitation he too was sent to the South seas. On summing up receipts and expenditures at the close of the year, it has been found that the church in its poverty has not only so abounded in liberality as to meet the needs of the two missionaries, but that, without solicitation, funds were supplied so generously as to have amply sufficed three.

Progress in France.—We make the following extract from the correspondence of Pasteur Bersier, in the Journal de Geneve, December 1, 1872: "Protestantism is making at present marked progress in the departments of Marne, of Yonne and of Aube. Several communes have asked for pastors. In the environs of Tonnerre, where there was not a Protestant ten years ago, 700 leading men have just declared in a petition addressed to the minister of public worship that they are attached to the reformed faith; a petition of the same sort, accompanied by 200 signatures, has been sent from the environs of Troyes. I know from very good authority that in Yonne this movement is due in part to the influence of a certain number of soldiers in French Switzerland during the war, which awakened great sympathy for Protestantism."

Pere Hyacinthe, finding every other door shut to him, accepted an invitation to preach in M. de Pressense's church during the week of prayer. Of course he spoke as a Catholic in all frankness and liberty. The house was overflowing, and good judges said the audience was as great as that which used to hear him in Notre Dame. Of course the Catholics will now call him Protestant. Reinkens, in Germany, was also forced to accept the hospitality of Protestants. All the best Protestant churches are offered to Hyacinthe, and he will probably continue to speak, unless he goes to Geneva, where he is pressed to go by the Old Catholics, and where he would have a Catholic church. For a married priest to succeed an ultra bishop is carrying the reform into the bosom of the church. He is not yet decided to go. He prefers to speak in Paris; but Geneva is quite as important for the reform, and will teach a lesson to all the politico-ecclesiastical reforms of Germany.

From Cape Coast, Western Africa, a station of the Wesleyan missions, on the Gold Coast, Rev. C. Rose writes of pleasant prospects in his work. At Elmina, a station a few miles to the west, the society has doubled during the quarter—from thirty to sixty—and 130 scholars were in the day school. Mr. Rose had itinerated in the vicinity of Cape Coast, baptizing more than twenty adults and twenty school children, besides a number of infants, and had laid the foundation for a chapel in a village so notorious for its former wickedness and opposition to Christianity as to have gained the name of Satan's Seat. Its inhabitants now ask for religious instruction. From Abakrampa, about sixteen miles to the northwest of Cape Coast, a native minister, Rev. J. A. Solomon, reports advance, as well as in the villages around, seventy-one adults and twenty-one children having been baptized within the year; the total number of church-members in Abakrampa and vicinity being 401, besides thirty-two on trial, while sixty scholars are in the schools.

The progress of the missionary work of the Church Missionary Society of England is illustrated by comparing its present position with that which it occupied at the beginning, seventy-two years ago. Its income then was less than $2,500. Now it receives an annual income of more than $750,000. Then stations in Africa and the East were all that the society dared to think of, or was able to maintain; now it has stations in every quarter of the globe to the number of 153. In these stations there are 240 ordained missionaries, 129 ordained natives, and more than 2,000 native teachers. The communicants number 20,000, and there are at least 100,000 professing Christians in connection with the missions, including children and candidates for baptism. Besides this the society has transferred to settled native churches in Sierra Leone and the West Indies large congregations, containing many thousand communicants.

A New Phase of Ritualism.—The Court Journal says (whether in truth or irony we know not) certain aristocratic ladies of the West End of London, who are devotees of Ritualism, have for themselves a new employment, which has the recommendation of being healthful in its influence. They cannot brook the idea of their sacred edifice being cleaned out by the hands of hireling menials, and they have formed themselves into a society called "The Phœbes," the members of which are solemnly pledged to do this work of cleaning the church. Ladies of the highest rank take their turn at polishing the tiled floors, blackleading the stove, sweeping out the pews and beating the hassocks, and burnishing the brass candlesticks and other paraphernalia of Ritualism. Some of the ladies complain that the work is harder than they expected; and it is not thought that their devotion will sustain them long in their self-imposed labors.

The theater services in London on Sunday evenings, continued in several places for many years, have been attended by large crowds, and, as there is every reason to believe, with a manifest blessing from on high. Great numbers are reached by this method who would not otherwise hear the gospel. Clergymen of all denominations, including the Established Church, have taken part in them. On a recent occasion a member of Parliament addressed a congregation at the Victoria Theater, from the words, "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" and was heard with the deepest attention as he urged the claims of the gospel upon the promiscuous assembly. There are vast multitudes in our cities who never enter the churches, who would not seek out the mission chapel, but who might be reached by some such method as this. Clergymen and laymen have here a wide field before them for persuading men to be reconciled to God.

Mexican Catholics.—The Episcopal mission in Colorado is doing much good among the native Mexican population, who are wholly Roman Catholics. Rev. J. C. Fitman writes from Trinidad to the effect that there exists among the people there a widespread dissatisfaction with their church and schools, and a desire to know more of true religion than they are taught by the priest. "During the ten months I have been here," he says, "I have had thirty Mexican Romanist children in my school, all of whom are taught our church principles. I shall open school in a few days with at least twenty, if not more, all former pupils of the convent. I have baptized five Mexican children, married four couples, and performed the funeral services for three children, all Mexicans and Romanists. One child was brought seventy miles and another twenty miles to be baptized by me. One funeral service was read in Spanish, at Los Tejeras, eleven miles from Trinidad, in a Romish chapel, and a sermon preached to a Spanish congregation of about 200."

In Ruatan, one of the Bay Islands, north of Honduras, which were ceded by England twelve years ago to the republic of Honduras, with stipulations that religious rights and liberties should be protected, there has been an outrage committed recently, both upon the property of the Wesleyan mission and upon the person of agents in its employ. According to their last report the Wesleyans had in Ruatan five chapels, sixteen local preachers, 351 church-members and 291 scholars. In the name of the new provisional government of Honduras, which is said to be in the interest of the Roman Catholics, troops have been stationed at Ruatan, which, having first provoked the inhabitants to resistance, seized the Wesleyan chapel, built a battery around it, and turned it into a storehouse and a gambling room. The life of Mr. Sykes, the missionary, was threatened by them; as also that of Mr. Tennyson, the teacher, a British subject, of West Indian birth, who was imprisoned and afterward set out by the battery, with the threat that, if the Ruatan people fired another shot, he should be killed. Fortunately for Mr. Tennyson, the firing, which had continued at intervals till he landing of this order, ceased immediately afterward. Both Mr. Tennyson and a local preacher who had been arrested were forced to pay money for their release.

A niggardly spirit contracts the harvest by sparing the seed-corn.

Fruit in Old Age.

A sense of uselessness is one of the severest trials of old age. It is a common complaint of old people that they feel themselves to be a burden and in the way, and that they are no longer capable of active service in the cause of God. It is not for them to argue about the providence which still keeps them in the world. For themselves it may be that patience may have her perfect work, and that a rare and illustrious finish may be put upon their character. For others also that their large experience may be the heritage of the youth, and that the good of the past may be brought down and welded on to the present. The world needs the children, and God takes them and sets them in our midst to teach us, and to keep the beauty and sweetness of young life ever before us.

But do we not need old people as well, and are they not essentially helpful in the average of human wants? Conservative they generally are, and only enough so to put on the brakes very gently where they are needed. The old trees in a forest, even the fallen trunks, contribute to the grandeur and interest of the woodland view. We must have May and January to make the complete year—the verdure and the frost, the sweet odors of spring and the snowy robes of winter. An old person is a sermon to younger folks. Wherever met—on the street, in the home circle, in the public crowd—there is a sermon in every old man or woman who crosses our path. It is a reminder and a warning, at least a stage or two this side of the grave. It is simply what we are all coming to, unless, indeed, we should fall before the time of the almond blossoms.

And when old age is crowned with piety, how rich and manifold are the lessons which it brings to us! The grace, the providence, the divine mercies which are represented by three-score and ten years are something wonderful. Suppose the limbs are palsied, and much motion impossible—there is the quiet testimony and the wealth of prayer. God may detain some of his aged children from the heavenly rest for many weary years, that the church and the world may have the benefit of their prayers.

There are certain fruits of piety which are perhaps never exhibited, or at least never matured, until old age is reached. Every period of life has its mission—youth, middle age, and the last stage also. Old age does not release from responsibility, but imposes burdens which are peculiar to itself. To be useful in old age is the coveted blessing of the good. It is the promised and assured privilege of the consecrated soul. David declares of those that be planted in the house of the Lord, that "they shall still bring forth fruit in old age."

If it be given to us in declining years to be kept in the harness, and with unabated strength and undimmed eye to labor in the Master's vineyard, so much the more to be thankful for. But if compelled to retirement and comparative inaction, let there be no repining, but a grateful conception of the dignity and sweetness of giving these last years to Christ in the very way which he himself has appointed. Let us consider the rarity of the experience of old age, how few of those on earth or in heaven know anything about it, and that its fruit is bound to be the sweetest and most precious of all the different periods of life. It is a peculiar distinction to become old, and a boon, when old age is reached graciously and full of its own ripest and most mellow clusters. Fruit in old age is the privilege of the aged, but the manner of it is for God to say—in the shape of almost miraculously prolonged activity with some; others are tied down by infirmities, and some are shut up as prisoners. Submission is the prominent grace, and the Spirit is the Comforter.

Mexico.

THE CITY OF MEXICO.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 3, 1873.

MR. EDITOR: The train which brought me to this city was behind time, so that it was full twelve o'clock at night when I found myself upon its streets, passing a large public square. The streets are paved; houses built close together, all substantial, usually two-story, openings large. The streets are about as in the French part of New Orleans, laid off squarely, and lighted by a lamp swinging over the center. The carriage kept on and on. I was evidently in a large city. It brought up at the Iturbide Hotel. A carriage-way, a spacious square court-yard, and the rooms and porches, four or five stories high, built on the four sides of this square—the same style and character of house, as large and palatial, as those of Venice or Genoa. These houses are from two hundred to three hundred and fifty years old. Many of them are as fresh-looking and habitable as if built by the present generation. They are all stuccoed; the walls are immensely thick, made of tufa, a lava stone, light and strong. This, with lime, constitutes the very best building material for a region visited now and then by earthquakes. The city abounds in public structures of magnificent proportions—churches, theaters, art and school halls, a large but very plain palace, a grand cathedral. It is well watered, lighted, ventilated and paved. It is on a plain, surrounded by mountains at the distance of ten to fifteen miles, some of which are among the highest in the world. No site for picturesque beauty can surpass it. The city of Milan, on the great plain of Lombardy, with the distant ranges of the Alps in view, is somewhat like it. Monta Rosa, with its crest of snow, beautiful as it is, cannot compare with the hoary peak of Popocatapetl, rising more than twenty-one thousand feet, or the white, table-like top of Ixtaxahuatl, nearly as high, though from this point looking higher. Between these mountains and the city, about five miles distant, is a lake some twenty miles long and ten miles wide. This body of water completes a landscape which Humboldt pronounced to be the finest on earth, as seen from the top of Chapultepec. This place, so well known in our war with Mexico, is the summer residence of the princes of this beautiful land, and was the home of Montezuma. It is an island of rock rising out of the plain, covered with cedars, one of which is only less in diameter than the great redwoods of California. I suppose them the largest cedars in the world. On the top is a French chateau, built by Maximilian, and grounds laid off in plats, with statuary, all after the best European style. Such a view as bursts upon the eye from its porticoes and windows, in this pure atmosphere, cannot be imagined. The richly-domed City of Mexico, the eternal snow-capped summits of the greatest of the Cordilleras, their massive ranges, the silvery lake, and the villas and churches which dot the bases of their foot-hills around the entire circle, the fertile and cultivated plain, all contribute to the effect. One could "stay in such a frame as this," in silent adoration to the Creator, and in wonder at the glory of his power and the beauty of man's home.

You will recollect that this city is about eight thousand feet above the sea, or if here you would soon realize it. Ones breath is sensibly shorter and the pulse beats quicker. At first I was somewhat uneasy. Have now gotten a little used to it.

There is nothing in view to indicate the various revolutions and pronunciamientos which have gone over this country. There is wealth, taste, industry and luxury on every side. Much more taste is displayed in building than with us. The Indian part of the population, which constitutes seven-tenths of the whole, is the most valuable. They are a very quick-moving, docile, patient, ingenious people. They are natural musicians, and show remarkable taste in sculpture, painting, designing, in toy-making, in gardening, in horticulture, in putting up their wares. So many original, curious, useful and elegant things are offered for sale upon every side that one is bewildered by the multitude of objects he would like to have. The mixed class number about two more tenths, and the pure white Spanish about one-tenth of the people. These classes constitute the governing part—the lawyers, doctors, etc.—but are no more capable of high cultivation than is the Indian part. We are profoundly ignorant of this Mexican people, having obtained our notions from those miserable, lawless, semi-barbarians who hang along the Rio Grande. The City of Mexico is to an American visitor a more interesting place than Paris. Catholic churches are at every turn, some of them very gorgeous in gilding and paintings; in all their appointments they remind one of the wealth which for so long a period was here poured into the lap of Romish priests and nuns. Their towers are full of sweet-toned bells, and their organs in mellifluent tone far surpass the best we have. The cathedral is in size only less than St. Peter's at Rome, and on the occasion of a saint's day its ceremonies and renderings of great composers by its orchestra are fully equal to anything heard in the Cistine chapel. It has two lofty, well-proportioned towers, filled with very ancient, heavy, silvery bells. I suppose that nowhere in America is the ideal of Roman Catholic worship so fully realized as here on a great occasion.

At the base of one of its towers is a huge circular stone, covered with hieroglyphics, about twelve feet in diameter and two feet thick, standing on its edge. It is an astronomical calculation by the Aztecs. Not far off is the museum, and there is the most interesting collection of the monuments, art and history of the past on this continent,—relics of Cortez, Charles the Fifth and the Aztec period; the sacrificial stone, upon which for a dreadful period of time were sacrificed annually seventy thousand human beings. It is of granite, the shape of a cheese; three yards in diameter, one yard thick; covered with uncouth designs. In the center is a shallow basin, eighteen inches across, scooped out, and from it a groove to the edge of the stone. The victim was bent over backward until the heart pressed against his side, then a sharp knife, made of obsidian, was drawn over it; the heart, then protruding, was taken out and cut from its veins and arteries, and the blood flowed into this basin. Immediately in front of the stone is the heavy idol-monster, with one head and two faces, grinning as a skull, one before and one behind, each once covered with a mask of gold, having eyes of precious jewels. This stone is three yards and a half high and a yard and a half wide, not man-shaped, but a block without legs or arms; with six pairs of hands rudely cut in, and with talons in place of feet. Stone as it was, it seemed terrible to look on as one reflected how many beings, capable of hope or despair, and of immortal life, had been offered to this grim, insatiable war-god. Surely no such relic exists anywhere of the deep night through which humanity has felt after an "unknown God," or of those who inhabited the places of cruelty.

Every distinct dialect of Mexican Indians maintains some peculiarity of dress. The women carry their babies on the back. The little fellows are quite plump and pretty, and rarely cry. I attended a prize distribution at the public high school. The President of the republic, Mr. Lerdo, presented the prizes with his own hand to the fortunate youths, many of whom were of these Indian stocks. The theater in which it took place and the music were superior to anything I ever witnessed of the kind in New Orleans. I sat in company with the American minister and Bishop Haven, and we were all impressed with the good taste and elegance of the occasion, and its surroundings. The audience was large, well-dressed and exceedingly well-behaved.

The native drink is made of the juice of the aloe, and is called pulque. It makes a bad drunk. One entire train of cars, consisting of thirty or forty double-decked, is employed in bringing this fluid, put up in sacks and barrels, to this city every day. The freight amounts daily to $700. So at every corner, in some parts, can be seen pulque-shops crowded with men and women. This and lottery tickets are the two ulcers which drain these hard-working, poor people of their substance. The vendor of tickets meets you at the door of the church, and at every few steps along the streets men and women solicit you to buy "$50,000 by to-morrow morning."

THE EVANGELICAL MOVEMENT.

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 14, 1873.

In front of the great cathedral is the plaza, and in the center of this is a very neatly-arranged garden designed by Carlotta, in which are fountains, many varieties of plants, and already some tall trees, among which the Australian gum is prominent. It grows very rapidly, and is being introduced generally in California.

From the towers of the cathedral is one of the very finest views of the many this land affords. Here you take in the affluence of this city, or the poverty, in churches. They keep up an apology for service in very many to keep the government from condemning them, while in quite a number there are respectable congregations. Very large and ancient bells are in these towers; one, A. D. 1634, of very old Spanish pattern. Boys and girls were playing at "hide and seek" on the paved roof and in and about their belfries, and a family lives up in one of them—may be two or three—so as to be handy for ringing.

I called in at the Bibliotheque, at the chapel of the Church of the Augustines. In it were twenty thousand volumes on shelves, in fine condition—most valuable treasures of the works of the fathers, histories, voyages, etc., of the sixteenth century, many of them as well preserved as if never opened from the day they were bought; many polyglots and encyclopedias, with all of the Catholic doctors. O what a chance for Dr. Ditzler and the Baptists! Among other valuable modern works I saw, for the first time, Morrison's Chinese Dictionary. Besides these there are one hundred and sixty thousand volumes awaiting the completion of extensive changes and repairs going on for their reception in the church proper of the Augustines. This enormous library was collected by a succession of the richest bishops in the world—those of Mexico. The domes, cornices and arches of this building are exceedingly rich, and well preserved.

I passed by the house where Humboldt lived when getting up the materials for his great work on America. On the front is a tablet to his memory by the Prussian residents of this place.

On Sunday morning last I attended Spanish Protestant service at the chapel of the old Church of the San Franciscans, which was purchased by funds of the Protestant movement—a company of gentlemen in New York. In this church Mr. Riley preached. He is now in New York. There were two hundred and fifty present of the common people. Singing was hearty and the preaching earnest. The Rev. Mr. Canales, formerly a Roman priest, officiated, and two others, one of whom was pure Indian stock—Orta, also formerly a priest. The Scriptures were read, and the service was that of the Episcopal Church. The building was not suited to the preaching, but aided the singing. Two large domes in the ceiling admit the light. In this chapel Aguas, a converted priest of much eloquence and spirituality, preached. He is now dead. Alongside of this chapel is the main church—a vast shell, as if it had been gutted of all that could be torn out. There remain arches, gilded, and some few ornaments out of reach, which witness to its ancient grandeur. It can hold four thousand persons, but will require a large sum for repairs, being without floor or seats. On the Sabbath evening previous I was at Cinco del Mayo—a room well located, but rudely fixed up. There I found a congregation of two hundred. The services were conducted by Orta, Romales and Aquillar, all in white robes. This church is served by Palacios, and is an offshoot, now independent, from the church of Dr. Riley. Palacios was a priest, is a Spaniard and an active worker. On the wall hangs a tablet: "The Church of Jesus. Established 1872." Bishop Haven has just rented a room within a few doors of this place, where Dr. Rameres is to preach. The doctor is a venerable man and a very eloquent; was formerly the superintendent of missions in California for twenty-two years. He would be welcomed back by the Roman Church any day. Whether the Bishop proposes to support Dr. Rameres as an evangelical, or whether the doctor has joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, I am not at this moment informed. The Bishop intends to open a Methodist church. I was present at the first service in his room, which is a long upper chamber, formerly part of an old monastery—the hall of self-flagellation, in which the monks endeavored to reduce the flesh by the lash; I suspect with indifferent success, or else they must have had a great deal to reduce. I forgot to say that the Palacios congregation is being supported at present by the Presbyterian Missionary Board of the United States. There are now here two ministers who represent that body, neither of whom can as yet preach in Spanish—Mr. Phillips and Mr. Hutchinson.

Dr. Cooper, of Chicago, an Episcopalian, is also here—sent out by the American and Foreign Christian Union. He lived for some years in Spain, can preach fairly in Spanish, but at present is organizing an English Church out of the comparatively few Englishmen and Americans there are in this city. He has no Spanish congregation specially his own.

There is also a congregation at San Jose Garcia, where the son of Aguas (Rodriguez) has been preaching; but he has recently left for New York, and an exhorter (Agrida) supplies his place.

At Toluca, eighteen leagues from this city, there is a Protestant congregation of thirty persons; preacher, Pascon, supported by the Presbyterians. At Cuernavaca a congregation of two hundred; preacher, Vaga, supported by the Foreign Christian Union. At Puebla sixty; preacher, Dr. Guerrero. At Hocacinco, seventy-five miles distant, a congregation of two hundred; preacher not known—one supplied by the Foreign Christian Union. At Oaxaca, fifty Protestants; preacher, Pena, Foreign Christian Union. At San Luis Potosi a congregation; preacher, Mr. Pitkin, Presbyterian. At Zacatecas a congregation; Mr. Thompson, preacher, Presbyterian. At San Pietro Martin seventy, with native readers. At Cardina two hundred; Candelon, preacher. At Queratero a small congregation. At Zoyatringo one hundred in congregation, served by Jose B. Martinez. At Ville de t'os five congregations; the Presbyterians are assisting, and a small paper has just been started—La Antorcha Evangelica—edited by Juan Amadon; first number at hand.

The library here of the Masons I found to be a place of considerable interest. It consists of some thousands of books belonging to one of the old orders of the Romish Church, but at the confiscation assigned to the Ancient Order of York Masons. It is in a chapel of one of the old churches. The librarian is Sostenes Juarez, who was one of the first that here preached Protestantism. The "Sociedad Evangelica" was formed in November, 1865. He was chosen president of it in 1867—an honest, fearless man, who, with many godly men and women, has endured poverty and persecution in the maintenance of the faith. The congregation called him to be their leader and pastor. He looks like a full-blood Indian, of good features and of much intelligence. He has published several excellent tracts against Romanism. Often he has denied himself everything but food to pay for a place in which to keep up a congregation of people as poor as himself. I visited him at his room at dark, and found several young men there studying. Over his mantle was a tablet inscribed: "Augustin Jauregui, victim del Clero, 11th Abril, de 1859." This was a friend who had been killed merely because he was a Protestant—shot in cold blood. Latterly, for want of funds, this excellent man has had to discontinue renting a place of meeting. It is my purpose to strengthen his hands. Here, as elsewhere, the Catholics are bitter enemies of the Masons. But these latter are doing a fine work for the people of Mexico, the nature of which, for prudential reasons, I will not minutely define. I do not deem it expedient to go more fully into my plans in this letter. I wish I could have been here two months sooner. It would have saved me great delay and perplexity. These people move slowly at best. They have endless petty methods of procedure, and no little deportment. They are like some of the old French of Louisiana—you can never buy of them if they think you want to buy. With all the severe blows dealt Roman Catholicism by the Liberals and that great Indian, Benito Juarez, and the large number of persons determined to think for themselves, that system of worship still has great attraction for the multitude. The habits, the traditions and prestige of three hundred years are not easily displaced. No power but that of the Holy Spirit can arouse and quicken these sleepers. Thank God! that power has been displayed marvelously. The coals have been scattered and the light has been kindled in many places at once. Here a Catholic people has roused from the corruptions of a priesthood earthly and sensual, and from within, not from without, have begun a reformation! Can we do better than to aid these people?

SCHOOL OF ARTS—GUADALUPE—LA CAPILLA DE ST. ANDREA, ETC.

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 20, 1873.

A few days ago I visited the Academy of Arts. It consists of five or six large rooms filled with paintings, a room of engravings, and one of coins, some very ancient ones; also statuary and rooms for architectural plans. Every advantage is afforded for persons studying fine art—all gratis. The tables before the models are well worn, showing that the youth of the city have a high appreciation of the academy. In fact they excel in everything that belongs to art—music, painting and drawing especially. They attend all kinds of schools, are patient and quick. I am speaking now of Mexicans—that is, Indians, and every shade of Indian. Very many of the paintings are but the worn-out nonsense and babyism of Romish art—the Madonna and Joseph, and John the Baptist, with all imaginable variations to suit friars or priests, or the fair favorites of those ghostly notables. Four paintings, eight feet high, each of them evidently by the same hand, attracted my notice. They were beautiful in design, rich in color and sound in their rendering, representing the woman taken in adultery, the Savior in the position of one writing; the woman at the well; the Syrophenician woman; and the woman anointing the Savior's feet. These were all in the Murillo style, brilliant, easy and truthful, defaced by no extravagance. The countenance of the host, Simon, his half-concealed triumph at what he supposed Christ's ignorance of the woman's true character, cannot be forgotten. By the Syrophenician is a little dog jumping upon her dress; this very neatly tells the whole story, and is quite natural as the point of suggestion to the Savior's remark: "It is not meet to take the children's bread and give it to dogs." Besides these there are two very rich modern, native ones: Aaron and Hur supporting the arms of Moses, and the family in the ark—Noah, his sons and daughters. The drapery and coloring are of great merit, as well as the form and treatment. There is here a genuine Murillo—a boy drinking at a mountain spring—valued at $10,000. It will be long before New Orleans can boast of such a school of art.

Another look at the museum. The Aztec idol is of basalt, and not granite; also a patient examination of the picture missives which were sent to Montezuma from Vera Cruz, giving news of the landing of Cortez. Here too are bodies which were found in the old inquisition and convent buildings, taken out of chambers in which no one could long live, having narrow openings for handing in food.

A visit to Guadalupe, a church specially sacred to the Roman Catholics. Long, long ago the Virgin visited an Indian and left the imprint of her face on a vail; this was carried by the Indian to the bishop; and upon the very spot where she appeared now stands the famous cathedral of Guadalupe, with the identical vail, three hundred and fifty years old, in a glass case, having six candles burning before it ever. In front of this case, which is upon a high altar, is an elevated platform, surrounded with a massive railing of pure silver, the rails larger than those of the Carondelet Street altar, and two or three times as many. The universal reverence and profound respect for this fiction has so far preserved these rails from the rude touch of the robber and bandit, whether in times of peace or revolution. In the back part of the church are rude votive offerings, commemorating over one hundred miracles wrought upon various persons through the image or vail of the Virgin. And high up over the door is an inscription to Maria Deiparæ, which ascribes to her the care of the universe, the keeping our earth in its place, the saving Mexico from many evils, the painting the flowers of the field, the holding back the thunderbolts of heaven, and in fact most of the attributes of the Godhead.

There is an excellent Seltzer spring just back of the church; in another church, also ascribed to the Virgin, which is a really good thing. It is highly charged with carbonic acid gas, and greatly refreshed me.

On the railway to Guadalupe are high, square ornate monuments, marking the stations at which pilgrims could rest who annually made their way on their knees from the City of Mexico to this village, some three miles. They now go by the turnpike. I saw six workingmen, at sunset, ascending to the chapel back of the cathedral, high on a hill. They approached, hat in hand, and at the entrance crossed themselves. Poor creatures! they had asked for bread, but their teachers had given them a stone. They bent in evening worship. My very soul yearned over them. Oh! that they could but know that all-gracious High Priest who lives to make intercession for the ignorant and the sinful! These people will bring wood on their backs for five miles, and then of three parts give two of their scant earnings to the cure. When will they, all weary and burdened, come to him whose yoke is easy?

The condition of affairs here, though settled, does not prevent one from feeling a little uneasy after dark, if outside the walls. As I returned from Guadalupe at dusk, in an omnibus, I had a good opportunity for seeing the crowds of workmen returning home from the city to the rude adobe huts which are to be seen on every side just beyond the city limits, and which look like kilns of large, unburned brick. So too just on the inside of the city gates there were crowds at every corner taking their last dose of pulque for the day. The pulque-shops were full—much fuller than our grog-shops. Lottery vendors and these shops divide the strength of these people between them. There are hundreds of hard-working men who never taste a bit of meat for weeks together, who can afford only beans and corn-cakes (tortillas.) They carry enormous loads on their backs in a trot; then a step or two, then a trot. They are swift under chicken-coops filled, packages of vegetables and eggs, and bundles of hay which no negro could be induced to pack one hundred yards, but which they bring many miles.

The wages of a peon is three and a half reals (thirty-seven and a half cents) per day; of a mechanic, seven reals. Building material is cheap. Bricks one foot long, six inches wide, three thick, $10 a thousand. Lime, burnt alkaline sod, and cement of the best quality are abundant. They work slowly, but do capital work. They build for earthquakes. All the ceilings are of canvas, and the walls are enormously thick. The ceilings are so well stretched and evenly coated with glue and paint that one cannot see any mark of the edges of the cloth, nor suspect its being there. This brings me to our Capilla, which I have just bought as the beginning of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the City of Mexico. But as this letter is long enough, I will reserve particulars for next week.

Centenary College.

Reports from the college are very encouraging. We are informed that one hundred and fifteen students are in attendance. About repairs President Andrews writes: "You will rejoice to know that the scaffolding is at last down, and in a few days, after the slate now ordered arrives, we will have the center building and east wing leak-proof. Now for a roof on the west wing, and we will breathe more easily. This will cost over $2,000. Oh! for the amount."

REV. W. C. HAISLIP, writing from Paris, Texas, sends us the sad intelligence of the death of his little son, Joseph Leake. The parents have our sympathy in this sore bereavement. God will doubtless sanctify and sustain.

BISHOP KEENER.—Just as we are going to press Bishop Keener arrives from the City of Mexico, in his usual health and spirits.

MARRIED.

DO YOU GET YOUR PAPER?—Subscribers will oblige us by giving prompt notice when their papers do not come regularly. Everything in our power will be done to correct irregularities. We have had very few complaints, and those mostly from offices which are reached by routes where we have reason to believe irregularity prevails in the transmission of the mails. This we may not be able to remedy, but will if we can.

MEXICAN MISSION.—We notify the subscribers to the Mexican mission, who pledged themselves to pay on the first of March, that the full amount has been drawn for and paid by a friend who honored the draft of Bishop Keener, in full expectation that subscribers will remit at once. We need a large amount in addition to this to carry out plans necessary to immediately occupy the field.

ROBERT J. HARP.

PIEDMONT AND ARLINGTON INSURANCE COMPANY.—We have the pleasure of calling attention to the advertisement of the above excellent company, which, being a Southern institution, has special claims to patronage. Although its domicile is Richmond, Virginia, it has a prosperous and influential branch in New Orleans, under the efficient management of General G. T. Beauregard, A. M. Fortier, president of the Bank of America, Colonel William M. Randolph, Colonel D. H. Wilson, T. M. Simmons, of Penn, Pace, Simmons & Co., Louis Burnett, secretary of the Hope Fire Insurance Company, and others of our most influential citizens as trustees, and Captain G. W. Terrell, general agent for Louisiana, who came to our city in 1871, with the most satisfactory indorsement by some of the best and most influential citizens of Virginia, Alabama and other States. The president of the company, Colonel W. T. Carrington, of Richmond, Virginia, says, in a letter to the policyholders in Louisiana:

We are pleased to be able to introduce so worthy and accomplished a successor to General R. H. Maury as Captain G. W. Terrell, who will in future take charge of and manage our business and agencies as general agent for the State.

We know the solid merits of Captain Terrell, and vouch for his moral, social and mental worth, as entitling him to full confidence and courtesy, and we beg of policyholders, friends and agents the kindly confidence and aid which, under our late distinguished general agent, made our company so popular and successful in Louisiana.

In the list of policyholders for this State we find a large number of our own most prominent citizens and business men. This Old Virginia company loans its money in each State where earned, thereby making it a home company everywhere. We also call attention to a receipt for $1,855.65 recently paid by this popular company, and which is another evidence of the prompt manner in which it pays its losses.

AMERICAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.—We have before us the twenty-third annual statement of the above-named company, giving a condensed but clear exhibit of the result of their operations to December 31, 1872, which indicates a safe and successful administration of its officers, winning their way to the confidence of the people and securing the high standing of the company. We append the following extracts from Philadelphia papers:

Knowing the officers and trustees of the American Life Insurance Company, as we do, that they rank among Philadelphia's most substantial business men; knowing the uniform success of the company, as we do, and that it has always been regarded as one of our most reliable institutions, we most cordially commend it to the confidence and support of our readers and friends.—The Keystone.

It has had, for nearly twenty years, rapidly increasing business, and stood, without the slightest embarrassment, every financial crisis of that time. It has been distinguished for guarding its investments by the best securities.—Weekly Press.

We congratulate the officers, board of trustees and policyholders of the American upon the splendid condition of their company.—Daily Age.

We call attention to their advertisement elsewhere.

THE LIFE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA.—The friends and policyholders of the above-mentioned company are fortunate in securing the services of General R. B. Simms in the New Orleans office. The general is very extensively known throughout the State and the Southwest, is eminently qualified by experience and business talents, and is thoroughly devoted to this business, whose range and importance are continually growing. He brings to his new associates very great influence, added to the benefit of an extended business acquaintance, and experience in all the details of life insurance. It gives us pleasure to add that, in appreciation of his valued services, the board of directors of the Mound City company (Louisiana department) have testified to his energy, liberality and assiduity in the most emphatic terms. During the four years of the general's connection with the latter association he has won an enviable reputation for efficiency and success; and with such officers as Generals Hood and Simms we predict for the company a prosperous future in Louisiana and Texas.

FOR BELIZE, HONDURAS, Port Cabello, Omoa, Truxillo, Ruatan, Utilla and Jamaica.—One of the fast-sailing schooners of this line, represented in this city by Messrs. J. Machen & Co., 120 Old Levee street, and S. Otero, 27 Front street, will leave New Orleans for the above-mentioned ports once a week, taking freight and passengers for all points in Central America. This is the shortest and most desirable route for Central American ports, and the line deserves the patronage and support of our citizens.

FOR NEW YORK.—The Cromwell line of steamers leave New Orleans for New York every Saturday, at five P. M. Cabin passage, $50; steerage passage, $25. The promptness and safety of this line is well known. Mr. Alfred Moulton, one of our best citizens, has charge of business, at No. 41 Carondelet street.

FASHIONABLE DRESSMAKING.—Miss A. E. Barrett begs to inform her friends and the public that she has opened her dressmaking, cutting and fitting establishment at No. 131 Prytania street, between Polymnia and Felicity streets, where she guarantees entire satisfaction with all kinds of work intrusted to her.

BLACKMAR'S TEMPLE OF MUSIC.—At Blackmar's Temple of Music, No. 201 Canal street, will be found all the latest and best publications of sheet music. Dealers in the Bell Treble, Chickering and other first-class pianos, and all kinds of musical instruments.

LADIES' CURLS, braids, waterfalls and chignons, and a complete assortment of jets, fancy goods, etc., at James Heaney's, No. 226 Baronne street. Polite attendants will at all times be furnished for hair-dressing, either on the premises or at residence of patrons.

DRY GOODS.—By reference to their advertisement, in this issue, our readers will observe that Messrs. Braselman & Adams, Nos. 586 and 588 Magazine street, are offering a great variety of cotton and linen fabrics, dress goods, etc., at very low prices.

LADIES' HAIR STORE.—Mr. George T. Shilling, No. 381 Dryades street, requests the attention of purchasers to his stock of real hair chignons, puffs, braids, switches, curls, etc. He has also a large stock of perfumery and fancy goods.

VISITORS to the city must not fail to examine the prices at the cheap crockery and house-furnishing bazar of Nayra & Offner, 174 Canal street, opposite the Varieties Theater, before purchasing elsewhere.

PURCHASERS will find at the two stores of the Septoline Oil Company, No. 62 Camp and 15 Dauphine street, a complete assortment of lamps, trimmings, etc.; also Japan ware.

CLOSING-OUT SALE.—Mr. N. C. Folger, No. 71 Camp street, advertises a closing-out sale of his stock of clothing and furnishing goods, trunks, satchels, umbrellas, etc.

WE CALL ATTENTION to the advertisement of P. Dufurt, No. 249 Royal street, who will supply equipages for funerals, soirees, picnics, etc., etc.

TARPAULINS, for camp meetings, picnics, etc., hired on reasonable terms by Samuel Brook, 84 New Levee street.

AGENTS WANTED by the Gulf States Publishing Company, 112 Camp street, up stairs.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

UNDISPUTED FACTS.—It has been truly and significantly said that domestic happiness is more dependent on good digestion than virtuous creeds or moral codes. If the dogma holds, the oracle can be consulted by a prompt application to Price, the Delphic author of the Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Wherever, within the length and breadth of the land, Price's Bitters have penetrated, every household has been illumined by the sunshine of an unclouded joy, and every family reveled in the sweets of health and contentment. The sparkling eye, the ruddy cheek, the cheerful smile and happy glance, no less than the elastic step and the unfaltering tread, what are they but the eloquent telltales of some vitalizing elixir? No secret botany holds the charm, no scientific alchemy creates the spell. The days of miracles are gone; the magic, mysteriously-working wonders have passed away, and the age—a plain, practical one—gives us a simple tonic that, by a happy amalgamation, restores to energy and strength the enervated system. Take Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters, and you bid an eternal farewell to such unwelcome guests as dyspepsia, indigestion, nervousness, neuralgia, flatulency and debility.

AN ENEMY TO HEALTH AND HAPPINESS.—Dyspepsia not only destroys health, but banishes happiness from the family. A dyspeptic is not only unhappy himself, but he makes all around him unhappy. DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS are a certain remedy for it. They are a sure cure for costiveness.

"THE LIFE OF THE FLESH IS THE BLOOD."—This is an admitted fact. It is obvious that when the blood becomes corrupt the whole system is corrupt also, and those organs which are weaker from hereditary derangement will suffer most. The large majority of female diseases proceed from this cause. The true policy is to direct the remedy to the source of the disease. It is in this way that DR. TUTT'S SARSAPARILLA AND QUEEN'S DELIGHT acts. Its specific effect is on the blood. It purifies, vitalizes it, expelling all distemper from the system.

BEWARE OF CALOMEL and all mercurial compounds. Better, far better, endure disease than tamper with this mineral poison, no matter how carefully prepared. Its extensive use has already proven the cause of great and disgusting injury. DR. TUTT'S LIVER PILLS can be taken at all times with perfect safety and without diet. mh20 tf

CHILLS AND FEVERS, in all forms,

"Fold their tents like Arabs,
And as silently steal away."

under the magic influence of Kress Fever Tonic. A few doses will start the procession promptly, and leave in the place of their unwelcome guests sunshine, health, happiness and joy in the household. A box of pills, free of charge, is delivered in each wrapper, and when the chill returns, if taken according to the directions, it is bottle the proprietors warrant to cure. ## NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

J. C. TILTON, PITTSBURG, PA.

WOMAN'S FRIEND AND STEAM WASHER

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND SOLD.

WILL CLEANSE YOUR CLOTHES WITHOUT RUBBING.

EVERY ONE SOLD IS FULLY WARRANTED.

NO FLUIDS OR EXTRA SOAP USED.

IT CONSUMES LESS SOAP, LESS TIME AND LESS FUEL THAN THE USUAL method. It saves Labor, Wear and Tear, and the Annoyance of Wash-day. It requires no attention while the process of cleansing goes on. It will do the Washing of the Family while you are eating breakfast and doing up dishes.

Steam has long been known as the most powerful agent in removing dirt, grease and stains from clothing, and bleaching them white. Papermakers have for many years used steam in cleaning and bleaching their rags, and they succeed in making, by its agency, the filthiest picking from the gutter perfectly pure and white. Until the invention of the STEAM WASHER or WOMAN'S FRIEND, although often attempted, no method had been discovered of applying Steam directly to the clothing, which could be used in a portable manner for domestic purposes. The WOMAN'S FRIEND washes without labor. It will do the washing of an ordinary family in from thirty minutes to an hour. The STEAM WASHER is superior to all other devices for the following reasons:

1. It does its own work, thereby saving a large portion of the time usually taken in a family.
2. It uses much less soap than is required by any other method.
3. It requires no attention whatever while the process of cleaning is going on. A lady can do her washing while she is eating her breakfast and doing up the breakfast dishes.
4. Clothing wears double the time, washed in this Washer, that it will washed by a machine, or by hand-labor or a washboard.
5. Lace Curtains and all the fabrics are washed in a superior manner. For Flannels this Washer is most desirable, as it will not full them, as a machine or hand-rubbing does. All fabrics, from the finest lace to a bed-blanket, can be washed perfectly and with ease without the rubbing-board.

IT IS TRULY A LABOR AND CLOTHES-SAVING INVENTION.

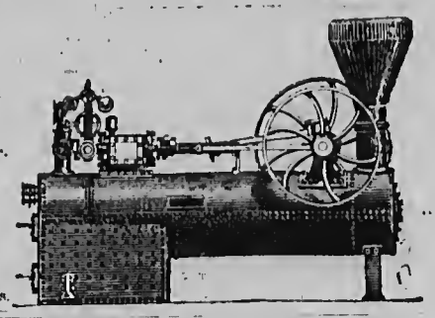
NEW ORLEANS, February 8, 1873.
MR. E. B. HAYES—Sir: The Washing Machine known as the Woman's Friend, or Steam Washer, purchased from you, has proven all you say of it. I cheerfully recommend it to all.
Yours truly, (Signed) MRS. S. BOUTLLETMET.

NEW ORLEANS, March 11, 1873.
MR. E. B. HAYES—Sir: I am delighted with your Washing Machine. It is indeed most happily called the Woman's Friend. I fully indorse every word of praise accorded by all who have given it a trial. Respectfully, (Signed) MRS. F. W. GESTIN.



NEW ORLEANS, March 10, 1873.
MR. E. B. HAYES, GENERAL AGENT—Sir: I have used your Steam Washer or Woman's Friend, and find that it performs satisfactorily all that you claim for it as a labor saving machine, saving time, fuel, soap and, more particularly, the clothes. I cheerfully recommend it to all my friends and all housekeepers. (Signed) MRS. R. J. MONROE, Widow of Ex-Mayor Monroe.

The Tiverly Ghost.

The next day, at the children's request, Mrs. Spencer paid another visit to the cabinet, and again extracted a packet from the drawer, which, as before, she laid upon the table.

"O, grandmamma, do begin," exclaimed Tom; "we are quite ready."

"The house where my mother lived after she became a widow was very prettily situated," said Mrs. Spencer. "Our nearest neighbor was Mr. Stormont, the clergyman of the parish, a young man who bore a high character as a clergyman. One of the first things he did was to begin and improve the state of the churchyard, which had long been in a most neglected condition.

"The villagers stared and wondered, and thought he might have left things as they were; but, as he undertook to do it at his own expense, no objections were raised, except by those who were in the habit of turning in their cattle there. They thought it hard to lose their privilege, and Bob Gresty, the sexton, whose cow had always grazed in peace, was highly indignant. All his grumbling, however, was of no avail. Mr. Stormont was firm, and Bob, having resisted as long as possible, at last with a very bad grace turned his cow on to the common, where, he declared, she would grow a poor, lean, half-starved creature, thanks to the parson.

"Bob dared not show his annoyance too plainly, for he was afraid he might lose his post as sexton; though he could not hide that he had no very friendly feeling toward the new vicar, and once or twice muttered something about 'doubling him yet.'

"'But suddenly a new subject arose to disturb the minds of the worthy people of Tiverly. It was whispered by somebody—and the whisper passed rapidly from one to another—that a ghost had been seen one night flitting about the churchyard. It first appeared to a woman who had been nursing a sick sister in the hamlet, and who had to cross the churchyard at three o'clock in the morning, on her way home to the village. She described it as being unlike anything she had ever seen; and said that, although it was not very near her, being at the other end of the churchyard, yet she had distinctly remarked it move slowly about the grave of one Timothy Skeggs, a man of noted bad character, who had died some years before. Further particulars she could not give; for she said that after one glance she took to her heels and ran till she reached her own door.

"A boy who had been sent in the middle of the night to fetch the doctor had, in spite of the woman's story, ventured across the churchyard, as being a short cut. But sorely he repented, he said, having done so; for there was the ghost just about the very place where Jenny Shaw had seen it, only it appeared to be coming toward him, he thought; and he had to fly like the wind lest it should catch him before he could get over the stile on to the common. 'He would rather,' he declared, 'have gone ten miles round than have seen what he saw, though it was only a moment's glimpse.'

"Bob Gresty was the next person to whom it appeared. His house being so close to the haunted spot made it a good place for observation; and Bob said he was resolved to watch one night.

"Of course all this terror and talk, in course of time, reached the ears of the vicar as well as ourselves.

"As I said before, the windows on one side of our house overlooked the church and churchyard, though at some little distance; and many a timid and curious peep was given in that direction by our domestics in the evenings after the ghost tale was all out.

"One night two of our maids took it into their heads to sit up in order to watch for a glimpse of the ghost. The next morning it came to my mother's ears, not only that the maids had sat up to watch, but that they had actually beheld the thing they had half hoped, half dreaded to see. It was a moonlight night, though rather cloudy. About two o'clock, on looking out, they protested that they distinctly saw a white figure standing among the graves. At first it was still, then it moved slowly along. The terrified girls also asserted that they saw a second ghost, only it was dark-colored instead of white, and taller and thinner. It was close to the side of the other, and likewise moved about. They dared not take a second look, but hastily drew down the blind and hurried away to bed, frightened out of their senses, and repenting the curiosity which had induced them to set up and watch. That they were really and truly terrified was certain, so much so that the housemaid gave warning that day; for she said that, 'though very sorry to leave her place, she could never again have a comfortable night's sleep now that she knew without any doubt that she was living so near to real, walking, stalking ghosts!' Sarah could not be more sorry to leave her situation than my mother was to lose her, for she was a good servant and a well-principled girl, though somewhat weak-minded.

"Jane, the cook, her fellow-watcher, had stronger nerves, and had no intention of leaving a good place because ghosts lived near; but she stoutly affirmed that 'they had actually seen them with their two pair of eyes, as plain as she ever saw one of her own joints of meat before she roasted it.'

"My mother found it was in vain to try and make them believe that it was all imagination. Indeed she [illegible] think it was time the affair was sifted. She went at once and called on the clergyman, and told him that her maids declared they had seen not one, but two ghosts!

"He listened attentively to the story, and told my mother that he was resolved to find out what all this meant, and thought that a second one having appeared on the scene would help him in his discoveries.

"That evening Mr. Stormont came, by his own request, to supper. Nobody but my mother and our faithful man-servant, Thomas, knew that he was going to do what the maids had done the previous night, viz.: sit up and watch the churchyard from the school-room window, while Thomas did likewise from his own room, which looked out in the same direction. Of what happened that night we children knew nothing till the next day, for we all slept as sound as tops. But this is what we afterward heard:

"Mr. Stormont, having put out his light, and so disposed the window-blind that no one could see him by the light of the moon, began his watch. Soon after the clock struck twelve he saw a white figure slowly come into view, and by its side a dark one, like that described by the maids. In an instant the clergyman sprang from his post of observation, and hurried softly down stairs, where he was met by Thomas, who had also espied the double ghost.

"The hall door had been purposely left unfastened, so not a moment was lost. Down the garden, over the low shrubbery fence, and through the shrubs they went, thus gaining the wall which bounded the churchyard by a very short cut, and within a few moments of their having first caught sight of the figures. The wall was not so high but that Mr. Stormont and Thomas could get over it easily. There, at a little distance from them, stood the white figure; but the dark one had left its side, and was moving in the direction of Bob Gresty's cottage. There was a door in the wall on that side, which had been put there in times gone by, for the convenience of the sexton probably, but had not been used for some years. It did not escape the clergyman's quick eye that this door stood open, and that the dark ghost seemed making toward it. One word to Thomas, and the man instantly ran to the door with such speed that he gained it before the dark figure, which ran also, evidently with the intention of escaping through that outlet. Perhaps Thomas was afraid of his slipping through the keyhole, for he slammed to the door, and placed himself exactly in front of the lock, and as Mr. Stormont had by this time come up behind, the ghost stood between them, with no other chance of escape than by vanishing into air.

"But instead of doing this it stood still, and in a gruff, angry voice asked why they came there at that hour of the night.

"'Rather let me ask why you are out here at such an hour, Bob Gresty?' asked Mr. Stormont; for it was the sexton who stood there, and no ghost.

"Bob muttered something that could not be understood, and Mr. Stormont could see that he was glancing uneasily behind him.

"'I can tell you why we are here, Bob,' said the clergyman. 'We are resolved to get to the bottom of this ghost affair, which is alarming the whole village. It has appeared to you, as well as to others, I hear. I wish to see it myself, and, if I mistake not, there it stands.'

"Bob laid his hand on Mr. Stormont's arm, as he was about to move toward it, and said: 'Better not go near it; better not, really.'

"But Mr. Stormont shook off his hand, saying: 'None of your nonsense with me, Bob,' as he walked off.

"Thomas followed him. Though no coward, he was, it must be confessed, a little startled at the strange white figure which they saw in the shadow under the trees, and he preferred keeping a pace or two behind the clergyman.

"'What on earth can it be, sir?' he whispered, as they drew close to a great white, shapeless, moving thing, with two horns and two great eyes at one end. 'It's like nothing earthly, I declare!' and almost unconsciously he drew back a pace or two farther still from his leader.

"'Earthly enough, and harmless enough,' said Mr. Stormont, going straight up and putting his hand valiantly on the so-called ghost. 'If we pull off his covering I think we shall find nothing to alarm us.' The next instant a great white sheet was on Mr. Stormont's arm, and in front of them stood a large, plump, warm, breathing, astonished cow!

"'Why, 'tis Bob Gresty's animal!' exclaimed Tom. 'What in the world has he been playing this trick for; just as if he were a young, mischievous lad, instead of getting to be almost an old man.'

"Bob was standing near the door, but he drew near when Mr. Stormont called him, and began to mutter some sort of apology for the cow being there, saying that he had wanted her to get a feed every night on the good grass in the churchyard, so he had turned her in from her shed about twelve o'clock every night, and taken her out again very early in the morning.

"'And why on earth did you go and dress her up in that outlandish fashion, to frighten honest people?' asked Thomas.

"'Because I knew folks would be frightened and keep away,' said Bob; 'and I was afeared of their poaching; so I says to my wife: "We'll put a sheet on her, and say there's a ghost about, and then we shall have it all our own way."'

"'And I coddo the parson after all, you thought, Bob,' said Mr. Stormont; 'but you see that the parson has outdone you and found out your unwo.thy end, I must call it, your wicked deception; for not only have you been the cause of real alarm to your neighbors, but you have told falsehoods in order to carry out your scheme.'

"Mr. Stormont turned away, and Bob followed, driving the poor, innocent cow before him; she had evidently grown accustomed to these [illegible] obeyed her owner's will. As they left the churchyard Mr. Stormont desired Bob to come to the vicarage after breakfast, as he wished to have some conversation with him. The result of that conversation was that Bob was told to look out for another cottage, for he would no longer be allowed to fill the office of sexton.

"Bob went away from the vicarage grumbling, and called the vicar a hard man; but he found that his displeasure was mild compared to that which awaited him from his neighbors. Thomas had taken care to make it known that the dreaded ghost had turned out to be Bob Gresty's cow in a white sheet. The news flew like lightning through the village, and the indignation was very great. Bob and his wife had never been favorites at best. And now to find how they had duped and frightened them, just that their cow might continue to feed in its old quarters, made the neighbors justly angry. Bob found his walk home through the village anything but a pleasant one that morning. First one had a word or two to say, then another and another; till he was glad to get to the shelter of his own house. There was no cottage in the village which exactly suited them; so they left and went to live elsewhere, feeling, perhaps, that Tiverly was too hot to hold them, as the saying is. And thus ended the affair of the Tiverly Ghost, cleared up in the way such marvels are sure to be sooner or later. It caused so much talk at the time that my eldest sister made a sketch of the cow, and hung it up in her room as a celebrated animal. Years after I seized upon it, when it was about to be thrown away with some useless rubbish, and placed it among my relic treasures, and here it is."

Then Mrs. Spencer displayed a little picture, done by a child's pencil in a very spirited manner. There stood a cow grazing in a churchyard, under a large tree. A white sheet was flung over her body, and underneath was written:

"The Tiverly Ghost."

The children looked at it with all the curiosity grandmamma could desire, and then it was restored to its old place in the cabinet.—Christian Weekly.

Farm, Garden and Household.

VEGETABLE GARDEN.—In this month a great deal is to be thought of and no small amount to be done. Those who failed to set out onions and potatoes before this must do so at once. Those planted early should be examined, lest from insufficient protection they be injured, and disappointment the result. Sow peas and continue sowing for succession. Sow parsley and any other hardy herb, such as thyme and sage, carrots, turnips, beets, cabbage, parsnips, about the end of the month. Sow beets in hot-beds for early transplanting, and tomatoes, peppers, radishes, vegetable egg; they must have sufficient heat in the bed to save them. Transplant fall-sown cabbage, cauliflower, lettuce and onions. Get a sufficient supply of seeds ready when the time comes, and take all opportunities of getting your ground ready. Many things may be done, and seed sown that may suit the taste and desire of each family, which I may not think of. S[illegible] however, is said to remind us that what is here neglected they can remind themselves of. Give plenty of air to all things already growing in hot-beds, and cover up well at nights. Stir the ground around anything that may be growing, such as peas, onions, potatoes, but do not expose them, rather give a coat of mulching to guard them against what may come.

HOW TO COOK HAM.—There is as much difference in the cooking of ham to make it good as in the preparation of any other meat for the table. My method is this: For a good-sized family take a medium-sized ham, put it into lukewarm water in a kettle, and place it on the stove, covered as tightly as possible; allow no more steam to escape than is necessary. A ham weighing sixteen pounds I allow to boil from four to five hours, then to stand in the water until cold. If taken from the stove at night I do not take it from the kettle till morning. I use the same plan when boiling beef or tongue, and believe therein lies the secret of having nice, tender and well-flavored meats.—Correspondent of Ohio Farmer.

PRESERVING CABBAGE.—We know of no better mode of preserving cabbage through the winter than the one we have pursued some twenty years—that is, to take up the cabbage and stand the stalks in bunches as they grew, letting the soil cover up to the heads. Stand them as closely together as possible in any convenient form, that they may be conveniently covered with a temporary roof of either boards, corn-stalks, bean-vines, etc. Cover the heads with leaves. Let the roof lean to carry off the water. Exclude the sun entirely, and when using take from the north side. We keep our cabbage to April and May.—Germantown Telegraph.

HOW TO TRAP MUSKRATS.—I use a steel trap; find a muddy spot near the rat's hole, make a pen of sticks driven down close together, leaving an opening in front just wide enough for the trap; put the bait, which should be sweet apples, in the pen far enough so that the animal will have to step over the trap in order to get at it.

CORN CAKE.—Take one quart of corn-meal, half a teaspoonful of salt and half a teacup of molasses; pour boiling water upon the meal until a thick batter is formed, then bake in a very hot oven.

NOWHERE are our corruptions so manifest, or our grace so shining, as under the rod.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin is lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold, during a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans, and has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other cotton gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth than they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gin of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in large-raised gins can be easily seen. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are getting an untried experiment, but will obtain a machine which is understood by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A trial of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on hand in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Parties should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.
IT HAS NO EQUAL. Read what well known Druggists of Tennessee say about Allen's Lung Balsam:
SPRINGFIELD, TENN., Sept. 13, 1872.
GENTLEMEN: Please ship us six dozen Allen's Lung Balsam. We have not a bottle in the store. It has more reputation than any Cough Medicine we have ever sold. Have been in the drug business twenty-seven years. We mean just what we say.
Very truly yours, HUNT & TANNER.
What the Doctors Say.
Drs. Wilson & Ward, physicians and druggists, write from Centerville, Tennessee: "We purchased Allen's Lung Balsam, and it sells rapidly. We are practicing physicians, as well as druggists, and take pleasure in recommending a great remedy, such as we know this to be."
Physicians do not recommend a medicine which has no merit. What they say about Allen's Lung Balsam can be taken as a fact. Let all afflicted test it at once, and be convinced of its real merits.
It is harmless to the most delicate child. It contains no Opium in any form.
Directions accompany each bottle.

MEDICAL.

PHŒNIX OIL.—PREPARED BY J. J. LINK, New Orleans.—This valuable Liniment has no equal, and can be depended on as one of the best offered to the public. The proprietor, therefore, leaves it to them to judge of its merits, feeling satisfied that its virtue will speak for itself. This Liniment will cure the following diseases if the directions are strictly followed, viz.: Piles or hemorrhoids; cases of twenty-five years standing have been cured with this Liniment. Who will suffer with this painful disease any longer, when so cheap and easy a remedy is offered? For burns or scalds the proprietor challenges the world to produce its equal; it will instantly give relief. For old indolent sores it has effected cures where the most scientific failed. For fresh cuts, sprains, bruises, tetterworm, ringworm, scald head, erysipelas, sting of a wasp, spider or snake-bite, chapped lips, chapped hands, sore mouth, sore throat, sore or caked breast, rheumatism, and pain in the side, breast or back. In cases of pneumonia it will give great relief, where there is much pain in the side or breast, by rubbing the patient with it. For warts and corns it is good, and will remove them if the directions are strictly followed. This Liniment will be found a certain cure for the following diseases in Stock: For foot-evil it is a sovereign remedy; fistula, poll-evil, galls, scratches, sprains, bruises, sweeny, and mange on dogs. In fact no plantation or family will be without this valuable preparation after it becomes generally known. Liberal discount to retailers. For sale by

W. C. HAMILTON & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

PILES CURED.
HAMILTON'S BUCHU AND DANDELION promotes digestion of the food by its influence on the stomach. It promotes the healthy action of the Kidneys. It secures activity of the Liver and regularity of the Bowels, and Prevents Constipation, which causes Piles. Try it.
W. C. HAMILTON & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

NINETY-NINE PER CENT.
L. W. Faulkner, of Champaign, Illinois, says "I have been selling KRESS FEVER TONIC two years under a warrant, and have had but one bottle returned as failing to cure. From what I use of its action I believe that it will cure Ninety-nine cases of Ague in every One Hundred."

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

Nothing of any importance has transpired with regard to the crops, excepting the recent heavy receipts, which, although expected from the tributaries pouring out their supplies, have led to a pretty general increase of crop estimates, which now range from less than 3,600,000 bales up to 3,800,000 and 4,000,000 bales.

The river is 3 feet 5 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the fourteenth instant:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... | 10,832 |
| Lake | | 156 |
| Arkansas | | 2,061 |
| Mobile | | 221 |
| Texas | | 296 |
| Total | | 20,466 |

On Saturday, under heavy receipts and a limited demand, with very little competition among buyers, and a decline of ¼d. at Liverpool and ⅛@¼c. in futures at New York, factors were unable to effect sales without giving way ⅛@⅜c., but even these concessions failed to impart any spirit to the movement, and the business was confined to 2,000 bales, the closing quotations showing a net falling off of ⅛@⅜c. On Monday the movement was checked at the opening by the depressing influence of a decline of 1-16d. at Liverpool, and of ⅛c. in spots and ⅛@9-16c. in futures at New York, and prices were still more depressed subsequently by a further reduction in quotations at New York of ⅛c. in spots and ⅜c. in futures. Factors were consequently compelled to make still greater concessions, and the figures paid indicated great irregularity, the closing quotations showing a net decline of ⅛@⅜c. In strict middling and good middling, and ⅛c. in middling and the lower grades, some sales showing a falling off of ⅜@½c. The sales embraced 5,050 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with a better feeling, inspired by an improvement in futures at New York and light receipts, and, the demand being more animated, factors were enabled in many cases to realize an improvement of ⅛c. on the figures accepted on Monday. A considerable part, or perhaps the bulk of the business was, nevertheless, at prices which showed no quotable change, and the actual improvement was mostly within the range of previous quotations. Low middling at the same time could hardly be bought, unless in exceptional transactions, at the inside prices of the day previous, which was the case with middling also. All other grades were reported steadier, without any quotable variation. The movement showed considerable spirit, and the business summed up 8,550 bales.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 16,500 bales, against 12,550 for the corresponding time last week and 18,859 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 977,373 bales, against 825,895 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 544,466 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 147,735 to Great Britain, of 47,687 to France, and of 121,631 to other foreign ports.

SUGAR.—On Tuesday 374 hhds. were received. There was a good demand, and 350 hhds. sold at 7⅛@7⅜c. for common, 8@8⅛c. for fair, 8⅛@8⅜c. for good fair, 9c. for fully fair, 9⅛@9⅜c. for prime, 9⅝c. for strictly prime to choice, 10⅛@11c. for yellow clarified, and 11@11⅛c. for white clarified.

MOLASSES.—The receipts are small, and there is very little movement. On Tuesday 125 bbls. were received, and 65 bbls. sold at 40@43c. for common fermenting, and 50c. for good fermentiug.

CORN.—On Tuesday the market was in good supply and demand, and the sales embraced 15,500 sacks, at prices leaning in favor of buyers, white and yellow mixed ruling at 63c., white and yellow 64c., and choice white 65c. ₱ bushel. At the close the market was firmer.

OATS.—On Tuesday 1,800 sacks sold at 42@44c., though subsequently a lot of 300 sacks brought 45c. ₱ bushel, and the market closed firm.

BRAN—Has been in good supply, with only a moderate demand. On Saturday 1,235 sacks sold at 95c.@$1 for bran, and $1.10 for ship's stuff.

PORK.—The market has been in light supply, and quiet but firm, with a small stock on hand. Mess is held at $17.25@17.37½ ₱ bbl., and is retailing at $17.75 ₱ bbl. On Monday 100 bbls. sold at $17.25, and on Tuesday 100 bbls. sold at $17.25 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—On Tuesday shoulders were quoted at 7¾c., clear rib sides 9¼c., clear sides 10¼c. ₱ lb. 25 casks clear sides sold at 9¼c., 10 do. at 10¼c., and 50 do., to arrive, on private terms.

HAMS.—On Tuesday there was a scarcity of supply and a good demand. 25 and 18 tierces sugar-cured sold at 14¼c., and 50 do., on the landing, at 15c. ₱ lb.

LARD.—Tierce is now quoted at 8¼c. for packers', and 8¾c. for refined, keg 9½@9¾c. ₱ lb. There have been no round sales.

DRY SALT MEAT.—On Tuesday 3,000 lbs. rib sides sold at 7½c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 114⅞@115⅛ (against 115¼ at New York,) and, after a fair business, closed at 114⅝@115 (against 115⅛ at New York.)

The sales of silver have been confined to limited retail transactions. American half dollars are quoted at 110@111, and Mexican dollars at 2¼ ₱ cent. premium in gold for new, and 5 ₱ cent. for old, showing a marked advance.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PHILIP WERLEIN'S

PIANO, ORGAN

—AND—

MUSIC WAREROOMS,

Nos. 80, 82 and 90 Baronne Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

We occupy almost one-half of an entire block frontage. Our stock consists of the largest collection of first-class PIANOS, Square and Upright, comprising the world-renowned Weber's, Dunham's, Hale's, Ziegler's, Mathushek's, Colibri, Grovesteen's, Pleyel's, etc., which we will sell at low prices for cash, and on monthly payments, if preferred, with full guarantee.

ORGANS.

Our stock consists of NEEDHAM'S WORLD-RENOWNED ORGANS, which are the best manufactured, and are sold at prices not higher than those of many inferior Organs.

Whoever purchases a Piano or Organ without first calling or writing to us for our prices and terms acts without reasonable prudence and care.

We have second-hand Pianos, guaranteed, at $125 to $225. New Pianos, a dozen different grades, in price from $200 to $600.

oc24 1y PHILIP WERLEIN.

EPITAPH ON GEN. HOOD'S LEG.

ere rests, and let no smicy knave
Pretend to sneer and laugh,
o learn that moldering in the grave
Is laid a Southern calf.

or he who writes these lines is sure
That those who read the whole ill find such laugh was premature,
For here too lies a sole.

nd here five little ones repose,
Twin-born with other five;
nhreded by their brother toes,
Who all now are alive.

leg and foot, to speak more plain,
Rests here with one commanding,
ho, though his wits he might retain,
Lost half his understanding.

nd when the guns, with thunder fraught,
Pour'd bullets thick as hail,
ould only in this way he taught
To give the foe leg bail.

nd now in Louisiana, just as gay
As in the battle brave,
oes to a rout, review or play,
With one foot in the grave.

ortune in vain hero shows her spite,
For he will still be found,
nould Louisiana's sons engage in fight,
Resolved to stand his ground.

il fortune's pardon I must beg;
She meant not to disarm;
or when she looped the hero's leg
She did not seek his harm;

nd but indulged a harmless whim;
Since he could walk with one,
he saw two legs were lost on him
Who never meant to run.

EMPLOYMENT OF TIME.

"We all complain," says the philopher Seneca, "of the shortness time; and yet we have more n we know what to do with. r lives are spent either in doing hing at all, or in doing nothing he purpose, or in doing nothing we ought to do. We are always plaining that our days are few, acting as though there would e end of them."

lfred the Great was one of the st, the best and most beneficent narchs that ever swayed the ter of this realm; and his exple is highly memorable. Every r of his life had its peculiar tted business. He divided the and night into three portions of ht hours each; and, though much icted with a painful disorder, he igned only eight hours to sleep, ls and exercise, devoting the aining sixteen, one-half to read, writing and prayer, and the er to public business. So sensi was this great man that time not a trifle to be dissipated, t a rich talent intrusted to him, which he was accountable to the at Dispenser of it!

We are told by historians that een Elizabeth, except when enged by public or domestic affairs, d the exercises necessary for the servation of her health and spir, was always employed either in ding or writing, in translating m other authors or in composin of her own.

Gasseudi, the celebrated philosher, was perhaps one of the rdest students that ever existed. e generally rose at three o'clock in e morning, and read or wrote till ven, when he received the visits his friends. He afterward, at elve, made a very slender dinner, which he drank nothing but water, d sat down to his books again at ree. There he remained till eight clock; and, after having eaten a ry light supper, he retired at ten.

Among the ancient Indians there re a set of men called gymnosoists, who had a great aversion to th and idleness. When the tables re spread for their repasts the assembling youths were asked by their asters in what useful task they d been employed from the sunse. One perhaps represented himlf as having been an arbitrator, d succeeded by his prudent mangement in composing a difference tween friends. A second had en paying obedience to his parit's commands. A third had made me discovery by his own applicaon, or learned something by anther's instruction. But he who had one nothing to deserve a dinner as turned out of doors without ne, and obliged to work while the thers enjoyed the fruits of their pplication.

TONE in painting, hitherto almost definable, and which has been so urrent a cant term in the vocabry of ignorant but would-be conoisseurs, has at length been deined by an artist of eminence, and hown to possess a real and very ositive meaning. In an essay reently delivered before the National cademy, by Mr. C. P. Cranch, that eriterious artist illustrated the eaning of the term by saying that painter, like a musician, must eep the key which he fixed upon hen he began. And he showed hat it was as hard to imagine different tones of color in the same icture as that the same note in a onata should be written in several eys. The key-note in painting carried with it, he said, the suggestion f a chord of tints; for as the musical ear demands chords, so does he eye demand a harmonious distribution of color in the different arts of a picture. To have what s called tone, therefore, a painting must be harmonious throughout.

A Beautiful, Touching Incident.

The Bible tells us that a woman is to be a helpmate to man, and the man is to be the support of the woman. To make married life a sonrce of happiness affection must rule the hearts of both. The married pair must be mutual helpers, one to the other. Then the conjugal state becomes a smooth and pleasant road, fringed with fragrant flowers, which bloom even in the depth of the winter of adversity and sorrow.

"I have read," says the author of a recent work, "a beautiful illustration of this point: A lady traveling in Europe visited, with her brother, a town in Germany, and took lodgings with a remarkable couple, an aged man and woman. They were husband and wife. They lived by themselves, without child or servant, subsisting on the rent accruing from the lease of their parlor and two sleeping-rooms. The lady, in giving an account of the persons, says: 'When we knocked at the door for admittance the two aged persons answered the knock together. When we rang the bell in our rooms the husband and wife invariably came, side by side. And our requests were received by both, and executed with the utmost nicety and exactness. The first night, having arrived late by the coach, and merely requiring a good fire and our tea, we were puzzled to understand the reason of this double attendance.'

"When the time to retire came the lady was surprised to see both husband and wife attending her to her chamber, and, on looking with some seriousness toward the husband, the wife, noticing her embarrassment, said to her: 'No offense is intended, madam; my husband is stone-blind.' The lady began to sympathize with the aged matron on the great misfortune of having a husband quite blind. The blind man exclaimed: 'It is useless for you, madam, to speak to my wife, for she is entirely deaf, and hears not a word you say!' Says the lady boarder: 'Here is an exemplification of the divine law of compensation. Could a pair be better matched? They were indeed one flesh. He saw through her eyes, and she heard through his ears. Ever after it was interesting to me to watch the aged man and his aged partner in their inseparableness. The sympathy for each other was as swift as electricity, and this made their deprivation as nothing.' This beautiful domestic picture would only suffer from any words of comment."—Lutheran Observer.

TOBACCO VS. INTELLECT.

At the nearest calculation the internal revenue report of last year showed that the United States consumed about ten million cigars during that time. Many old smokers prefer the pipe to the cigar, and probably as much tobacco is consumed in that way as in cigars. However out of the way numerically the previous statement may be, it is true that there are in this country twelve thousand two hundred and ninety-four manufacturers of cigars, and they employ seventy-one thousand four hundred and ninety-one men. Wherever tobacco can be raised the farmer finds it one of the most profitable crops, and consequently is very apt to cultivate it. Its use increases from year to year in a greater ratio than the population. People differ so widely as to its effects that it is only just, whenever a candid statement is made of any test, to give it publicity. Recently, at the Polytechnic School in Paris, one of the professors inquired into the habits of the one hundred and sixty students there, and then made a comparison between their devotions to study and to smoke. He found that one hundred and two were smokers, and fifty-eight never used, or said they never used, the noxious weed. He then found that in each grade of the school the students who did not smoke out-ranked those who did smoke, and that the scholarship of the smokers steadily deteriorated as the smoking continued. On account of several trustworthy reports of such a nature the minister of public instruction in France issued a circular to the directors of colleges and schools, forbidding tobacco to students as injurious to physical and intellectual development. But a writer in a Paris medical journal complains that the use of tobacco will not probably cease entirely so long as Sunday schools furnish meerschaum pipes as prizes to the best scholars.—Hartford Courant.

THE capital invested in British and Irish railways had attained last year the enormous sum of £2,763,400,000. The total length of the railways of the United Kingdom was, in 1871, fifteen thousand three hundred and seventy-six miles.

THE FUTURE looks dangerous. The French Academy of Sciences is occupied with the question of the sun's near extinction; and a rising philosopher announces that our globe may soon be expected to explode into a mass of cinders.

SPEECH-MAKERS.

The power of ready and fluent speech is very differently judged of by the reflective or philosophic, and by the popular mind. To the latter it seemed a wonderful endowment, and its possession a sure proof of superior abilities. A man who is able, by force of utterance, apt illustration, ingennity in meeting objections, clear statement and graphic description, to interest and control an audience, is thought to be capable of filling the highest posts to which he may aspire.

But to those who know how easily the arts of speech may be acquired by men of mediocre capacity, and how little of real mental discipline and grasp of mind—to say nothing of moral qualities—is demanded, the ordinary speech-maker ceases to be a person of much importance or interest. A man may have very little knowledge of a subject, and yet be able to conceal his ignorance from those who know less than himself, and even appear to them as a prodigy of information and of eloquence. To success as a popular speaker little more is needed, in addition to a certain intellectual quickness and flexibility, than a knowledge of the mental condition of his hearers, their modes of thought, their prejudices, their partialities and antipathies. What audiences seek, for the most part, in those who address them, is not instruction, nor investigation of truth, nor anything that compels thought, but an animated and flowing expression of their opinions and feelings. To see themselves reflected in the speaker, to hear him utter what is in their own minds, but in a better way than they could do it, this is the secret of the power of the popular orator. It is plain enough that to be the spokesman and to be the teacher of men are two very unlike things, and there are a hundred of the former for one of the latter.

THE following curious advertisement appeared in one of the Cincinnati papers the other day: "Personal—Wanted.—The undersigned, a healthy young man, unable to procure other employment at which he can make an honest living, desires to inform professors of medicine and surgery that he will submit himself to experimental operations of almost any description for reasonable compensation. Address Vivisection, box 2,845."

YOUNG AMERICA WONDERS.—I wonder what makes papa tell such nice stories to visitors about his hiding his master's rattan when he went to school, and about his running away from the schoolmistress when she was going to whip him, and then shut me up all day in a dark room, because I tried just once to be as smart as he has been?

Wonder what made papa say that wicked word when Betsy upset the ink all over his paper, and then slapped my ears when I said the same thing when my kite-string broke?

Wonder why mamma told Bridget, the other day, to say that she was not at home when Tommy Day's mother called, and then puts me to bed without my supper every time I tell a lie?

O, dear! there are lots of things I want to know. How I wish I was a man!

ANY LIMIT to confidence in God's wisdom, faithfulness and love is a heinous provocation.

MANY bring God's truth to their bar and cavil at it as an excuse for rejecting it.

SCHOOL BOOKS—SCHOOL BOOKS.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern mind not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-Books by eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, viz:

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. SCHELE DEVERE, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. GILDERSLEEVE, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. CARTER, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LECONTE, late of the University of South Carolina.

THURSDAY, MARCH 20, 1873.

SONG.

I made another garden, yea,
For my new Love:
I left the dead rose where it lay,
And set the new above:
Why did the summer not begin?
Why did my heart not haste?
My old Love came and walked therein,
And laid the garden waste.

She entered with her weary smile,
Just as of old;
She looked around a little while,
And shivered at the cold;
Her passing touch was death to all,
Her passing look a blight;
She made the white rose petals fall,
And turned the red rose white.

Her pale robe clinging to the grass
Seemed like a snake
That bit the grass and ground, alas!
And a sad trail did make.
She went up slowly to the gate,
And there, just as of yore,
She turned back at the last to wait
And say farewell once more.

THE AIRLESS MOON.

Among the illusions swept away by modern science was the pleasant fancy that the moon was a habitable globe, like the earth, its surface diversified with seas, lakes, continents and islands, and varied forms of vegetation. Theologians and savants gravely discussed the probabilities of its being inhabited by a race of sentient beings, with forms and faculties like our own, and even propounded schemes for opening communication with them, in case they existed. One of these was to construct on the broad highlands of Asia a series of geometrical figures on a scale so gigantic as to be visible from our planetary neighbor, on the supposition that the moon people would recognize the object, and immediately construct similar figures in reply! Extravagant and absurd as it may appear in the light of modern knowledge, the establishment of this terrestrial and lunar signal-service bureau was treated as a feasible scheme, although practical difficulties, which so often keep men from making fools of themselves, stood in the way of actual experiment; but the discussion was kept up at intervals, until it was discovered that, if there were people in the moon, they must be able to live without breathing or eating or drinking. Then it ceased.

There can be no life without air. Beautiful to the eyes of the distant observer, the moon is a sepulchral orb—a world of death and silence. No vegetation clothes its vast plains of stony desolation, traversed by monstrous crevasses, broken by enormous peaks that rise like gigantic tombstones into space; no lovely forms of cloud float in the blackness of its sky. There day-time is only night lighted by a rayless sun. There is no rosy dawn in the morning, no twilight in the evening. The nights are pitch-dark. In day-time the solar beams are lost against the jagged ridges, the sharp points of the rocks or the steep sides of profound abysses; and the eye sees only grotesque shapes relieved against fantastic shadows black as ink, with none of that pleasant gradation and diffusion of light, none of the subtile blending of light and shadow, which make the charm of a terrestrial landscape. A faint conception of the horrors of a lunar day may be formed from an illustration representing a landscape taken in the moon in the center of the mountainous region of Aristarchus. There is no color—nothing but dead white and black. The rocks reflect passively the light of the sun; the craters and abysses remain wrapped in shade; fantastic peaks rise like phantoms in their glacial cemetery; the stars appear like spots in the blackness of space. The moon is a dead world—she has no atmosphere. Harper's Magazine.

FAMILY GOVERNMENT.—The chief difficulty in family government arises from the fact that so few parents ever learn to govern themselves. It was said of old that "he who ruleth his own spirit is greater than he who taketh a city." The fact is that the ruling of his own spirit is about the last accomplishment ever arrived at by mortal man; and the remark is equally true as to mortal women. Hence the government of children is poor enough, as a general thing. In fact it is, in many cases, no government at all, but simply the venting of some father's or mother's or teacher's spite upon a child that has done something to stir up the evil passions of one's nature. Some say that the more they punish their children the worse they seem to grow. That may very well be, if parents punish them because they are annoyed or angered at something they have done. A parent should never punish a child when he is the least bit "put out" with it, or for any reason whatever except the highest good of the child itself.

A CELEBRATED POET at one time advertised that he would supply "lines for any occasion." A fisherman sought him shortly afterward, and wanted a line strong enough to catch a porpoise.

SELF-WISDOM is self-delusion.

SCIENTIFIC.

THE great fossil bed of South Carolina contains a wilderness of antediluvian remains, the bones of the megatherium, mylodon, megaloux, mastodon, mammoth, phocodon, sauri, etc., sharks' teeth in such quantities that Prof. Holmes, of Charleston College, has in his museum sixty thousand specimens of those alone, some weighing two and two and a half pounds; also teeth and bones of horses, dogs, sheep, oxen and hogs, differing in nothing from the present race; besides pottery and stone hatchets identical with those discovered near Abbeville, France. The strata in which these occur is designated in scientific parlance, post pleiocene; the marl which overlies it, eocene. The depths at which these remains lie is from four to twelve feet, and the rocks, all ocean-rolled, invariably phosphates.

THE DESERT SHALL BLOSSOM.—The following interesting fact shows the effect of the foliage of trees and crops in condensing the humidity of the air into showers: As the settlements spread beyond the Mississippi rains increase both in frequency and in the amount of water. Many beds of streams, which were uniformly dry in summer only ten years ago, are now full through the year. Travelers say the Laramie plains were once destitute of vegetation; now they have a luxuriant growth, and will raise large crops of wheat. Denver was built on the banks of an extinct creek, perfectly dry. Now it is full of water, and needs to be crossed by bridges. Salt lake is seven feet higher than ten years ago, and it is steadily rising. The vast plains which engineers once pronounced uninhabitable, and fit only for droves of buffalo, because destitute of streams and springs, may yet become great States, the home of a crowded population.

UNIVERSALITY OF SOUND.—The whole earthly universe is replete with sound. It fills every cubic inch of air, water and earth within human reach. It crowds all time, both of the day and of the night, so that there is not a moment in the life of any of us in which we listen to absolute silence. Indeed absolute silence is impossible at any place upon the earth, or under it, where we carry ourselves; for, when we have reached that intense solitude in which, by the cessation of other sounds, we are enabled, as by the help of a stethoscope, to hear the thump of our hearts, and the roar of the furnace-blast in our lungs, and "the voice of many waters" in our venous and arterial canals, and the busy whir of the various organs and intestines at work within us, we become conscious of the fact that we ourselves are vast laboratories, ever resonant with sounds which are not heard at ordinary times, simply because they are drowned in the din of surrounding tumult. It is probable that could we be carried wholly beyond the influence of our atmosphere into the deep solitude of transaerial space, we should be almost terrified at the consciousness of what we had never before had any just conception—the awfulness of absolute silence.—Appleton's Journal.

DR. JOHN W. CORSON has an article in the January number of the Medical Record, which is of great interest to public speakers and singers, submitting a remedy for sudden hoarseness which, he says, in mild attacks, often acts like magic. He sums up the results of his experience in the following brief conclusion: 1. That in sudden hoarseness or loss of voice in public speakers or singers, from "colds," relief for an hour or so, as by magic, may be often obtained by slowly dissolving and partially swallowing a lump of borax the size of a garden-pea, or about three or four grains, held in the mouth for ten minutes before speaking or singing. This produces a profuse secretion of saliva, or "watering" of the mouth and throat. It probably restores the voice or tone to the dried vocal cords, just as "wetting" brings back the missing notes to a flute when it is too dry. 2. Such "colds" may be frequently "broken up" at the very commencement; and this restorative action of the borax to the voice may be materially aided by promptly taking, the evening previous to a public effort, dissolved in a glass of sweetened water, a piece of the nitrate of potass or "saltpeter," a little larger than a garden-pea, or about five grains, on going to bed, and covering with an extra blanket. The patient should keep warm next day. This both moistens the dry throat and further relieves the symptoms of "cold" and slight blood-poisoning from suppressed perspiration by reopening the millions of pores of the skin more or less closed by cold. * * * Dr. Corson further states that these remedies are perfectly harmless, and that they are nearly or quite useless in the cure of long-continued chronic disease of the throat, or acute inflammation, or "tonsilitis." They are only serviceable in cases of sudden hoarseness or loss of voice, or in the early stages of what is known as a "common cold."

A REAL CHARM.—A young farmer found that he was not in good health, and that he was not getting on in the world. He went to a friend to ask his advice.

This friend knew him well, and, with a very grave face, he said to him: "I know of a charm that will cure you. Take this little cup. Drink from it every morning of the water you must get at the spring; but remember that you must draw it yourself at five o'clock, or the charm will be broken."

Next morning the farmer walked across his fields to the spring, which was a good way off. As he went he saw that some cows had broken through the fence, and were feeding among the green corn. He turned them out and mended the fence, as his men were not yet at hand. When they came they were long after their proper time, and were startled at seeing "master" out so early.

"Oh," said he, "I see how it is. All this comes of my not getting up in time."

This early rising soon became pleasant to him. His walk and cup of cold water made him ready for a good breakfast, and his health soon became better. His men, like himself, were now all at work early, and he began to prosper.

He soon saw that the advice his friend had given him was as good as it was simple.

A MEETING OF THE ELDERS at a certain kirk in Scotland had assembled for the purpose of determining on the position of a stove which was to be erected for the purpose of warming the building on Sabbath days. After considerable discussion an old man, who had hitherto said but little, was asked his opinion. He said: "The stove should be placed in the pulpit, for it is by far the coldest place in the kirk."

MANY would rather be convicted of want of principle than of want of talent.

THE wisest way to live down reproach is by consistent godliness.

PARLOR AND CHURCH ORGANS

—ARE—

NOT EQUALED FOR PURITY AND BRILLIANCY OF TONE.

Their peculiar construction and arrangement gives them extraordinary power.
Their Solo Stops are most remarkable for beauty and variety of effect.
They are constructed in the most thorough and perfect manner.
They invite special attention to their

SOLO STOPS.

THE VOX HUMANA,

PATENTED SEPTEMBER 13, 1870, AND JANUARY 23, 1872,

producing a beautiful and sympathetic quality of tone, capable of the most exquisite modulation, and when used with the "Tremolo," which accompanies it, resembles more than any other organ stop the peculiar trill of the human voice.

THE VOX CELESTE,

possessing a peculiar and thrilling quality of tone, most pipe-like in its nature, and which can be used in many passages with charming effect.

The above Stops are in every case separate, and additional sets of reeds, are entirely distinct from the "Tremolo," which always accompanies them, and which is never perfect without them, and can all be brought at will into the full organ, adding greatly to its power and richness of tone.

They take pleasure in announcing to the musical public and the trade the valuable addition to their Organs of a most beautiful Solo Stop,

THE ÆOLINE.

It is an additional set of reeds, exquisitely voiced and ingeniously arranged in a separate wind-chest (patented September 13, 1870.) Its quality of tone is the most delicate and soft imaginable. It is capable of the greatest variety of effects in combination with their other stops, the improved VOX HUMANA in particular. It has elicited the warmest encomiums from all organists and musicians who have examined it. It is perfectly simple in its construction, and they predict for it the highest degree of success. Its charming effects, especially when used in connection with their improved styles of cases, can but be appreciated by every musician.

IMPROVED CASES, ETC.

By the construction of these Cases the quality of tone in their Instruments has been greatly improved, every facility for the comfort and convenience of the performer has been provided for, and the effect of their beautiful and graceful design is such as to entirely obviate the disagreeable boxy appearance which has been for so long a time an unpleasant characteristic of the Reed Organ.

In addition to the above improvements, attention is called to

PERFECT VALVES and WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.

The Factories of GEORGE WOODS & Co. are among the largest, and probably without exception the best-arranged in the country. Their machinery is of the latest and most improved pattern, and all the labor is performed under the eyes of the employers, who are mechanics with reputations second to none for knowledge of the business, ingenuity, faithfulness and ability. With every advantage that extensive capital can command, they are determined that the Organs of their manufacture

SHALL BE IN EVERY RESPECT THE FINEST AND BEST.

They endeavor to obtain and secure the confidence of their agents, and to assist and encourage them in every possible way.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, March 20.—The United States fleet has left Rio Janeiro on account of yellow fever; seventy cases occur daily. The epidemic has extended to Bahia and Pernambuco, where it was confined to the shipping. The cholera is very fatal at Para. The United States school ship Mercury was at St. Thomas on the fourteenth. Two of the crew had died of the yellow fever.

The Tennessee Legislature has passed a bill allowing the local authorities to decide the question of tippling houses. The Governor will sign the bill.

CINCINNATI, March 20.—Six stores, the postoffice and twenty dwellings at Lake City, Chicot county, Arkansas, were burned.

NEW YORK, March 21.—Foster was executed at seventeen minutes past nine o'clock this morning.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 21.—The steamer Alaska, from Hong Kong, February 12, via Yokohama, February 24, has arrived.

Great apprehensions are felt of a Mohammedan invasion of Northern China.

The Grand Lama of Thibet professes allegiance to the young Emperor of China.

The clipper ship Serica was wrecked near Puracelles. Of the crew of twenty-nine, including the captain, only one man was saved. All hands at first escaped on a raft, which, four days afterward, went to pieces.

The Grand Duke Alexis sailed from Hong Kong January 27.

A special edict tolerating Christianity throughout Japan has been promulgated, and it is determined to throw the whole country open to foreigners.

The government is endeavoring to form a code based upon European systems.

The universal exhibition will be held in Japan—probably at Yeddo—within the next four years.

PHILADELPHIA, March 23.—Commodore Vanderbilt has given another $500,000 for the purpose of erecting a large seminary for females on the grounds of the Moravian church at New Dorpt, Staten Island, to be built on the plan of the seminary at Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, also endowed by him.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 25.—The Rev. H. Thomas, the newly-appointed peace commissioner to the Modocs, has gone to Van Bremers.

Captain Jack sent a squaw to the Klamath Indians, inviting them to join him. He says that as soon as the grass grows he will leave the lava beds, burn the ranches and kill the settlers.

The message causes fears of trouble with the Indians on the lower Klamath river, who belong to quite a formidable tribe.

There is no new movement of troops reported beyond the arrival of recruits.

Captain Caslot, of Oregon, has gone to Warm Springs to reorganize his famous Indian scouts as volunteers, to be used against the Modocs.

FOREIGN.

PANAMA, March 8.—On the twenty-sixth of September last the Secretary of State of Bogota issued a circular to all the governments of Central and South America, inviting them to co-operate with the United States of Colombia with a view to induce the United States of America to join with them in persuading Spain to recognize the independence of Cuba, and to accept an equivalent in money, the sum agreed upon to be made up by the different associated republics, and that in the meantime the war now going on shall be harmonized.

Congress, on the first of February, gave its approval to the proposition, and to a diplomatic note on the subject.

The most important feature of the present news from Peru is with regard to the strong desire expressed by the government that the republic take part in the search for an excavation canal across the Colombian Isthmus.

A protocol has been agreed upon between the Peruvian and Colombian representatives in Lima, but it is not yet decided when the Peruvian exploring party will be sent to the Isthmus.

There seems to be some trouble in the political atmosphere, between Peru and Chili, about the boundary line in the interior of the country.

El Porvenir, of Valle Gottel, of the twenty-second of February, says: "The practicability of a ship canal through Nicaragua has been settled by the labors of the present surveying party in Nicaragua."

PANAMA, March 19.—Shocks of earthquake continue to be felt in the unfortunate city of St. Vincent, Guatemala. The greater part of the houses in the valley of Lempa are uninhabitable. The scene, says the La Tribuna, presented by the city of St. Vincent is deplorable, and the melancholy, naked walls everywhere rent and threatening to fall to the ground; roofs useless, public edifices ruined, streets deserted, and miserable inhabitants are living in squares and vacant lots, sheltered by huts or by branches of trees and tents. For twenty-six days they have been living thus exposed to sundry night dews.

GENEVA, March 19.—The religious excitement in this city, caused by the preaching of Father Hyacinthe, is increasing. The Ultramontanes are much exasperated.

LONDON, March 20.—In the House of Commons this evening Mr. Gladstone announced that, the opposition having declined to form a new government, he had his colleagues would resume office. The announcement was received with cheers.

BERLIN, March 22.—To-day is a holiday in Berlin, it being the anniversary of the birth of Emperor William. Flags are flying from the public and private buildings, and the city will be illuminated to-night. The Emperor is seventy-six years old to-day.

ROME, March 22.—The appointment by the Pope of the following bishops for the United States is announced to-day: Very Rev. M. A. Corigan for the diocese of Newark, and Rev. Mr. Gross for the diocese of Savannah.

PARIS, March 23.—The French and German governments have exchanged ratifications of the treaties for the payment of indemnities and the evacuation of French territory.

MADRID, March 23.—The Assembly met yesterday with the understanding that the vote should be taken on the bill for the abolition of slavery in Porto Rico. A resolution was adopted at the beginning of the sitting that the Chamber would not adjourn until the subject had been disposed of. Senor Figueras announced that the ministry had decided to stand or fall with the measure. Contrary to general expectation, the House resolved not to continue the debate, and subsequently, by a unanimous vote, passed the bill for the immediate emancipation of slaves in the Island of Porto Rico. The announcement of the result was received with cheers.

The bill declares that the republic of Spain will preserve the integrity of the Spanish dominions, and provides that emancipated slaves in Porto Rico shall enjoy all the political rights accorded to citizens of Spain.

MADRID, March 24.—The bill passed by the Assembly on Saturday, abolishing slavery in the Island of Porto Rico, provides that abolition shall follow immediately upon the promulgation of the act.

The emancipated slaves will, however, be obliged to serve for three years with their present master or other resident on the island, and will enjoy the political rights of Spanish citizens after five years shall have elapsed.

The indemnity to be paid the slave-owner is to be charged exclusively to the account of the Porto Rico budget.

Soon after the adoption of the Porto Rico abolition bill the dissolution of the Spanish Cortes was unanimously voted, and the House broke up amidst great excitement in the building and on the streets, but there was no disorder, and the city has remained completely tranquil.

LONDON, March 25.—Dispatches from Madrid say it is reported there that Bismarck refuses to advise the recognition of the Spanish republic, declaring it does not represent the true will of the Assembly, which yielded to the pressure of the masses in proclaiming it.

It is also rumored the Russian and Austrian governments have intimated that they withhold recognition on similar grounds.

A New Church.

MR. EDITOR: Last summer we fully came to the conclusion that this community was much in need of a house designated and set apart exclusively for the worship of Almighty God. In obedience to that conclusion we went to work to raise subscriptions for that purpose; and as the fruits of our effort we have a house, of which we may be proud, now almost completed. The carpenters' work is about finished, and all the materials on hand and the plastering commenced.

The material of which it is composed is of the best, and is put together in a workman-like manner, be it said to the credit of the builder, Mr. John M. King. Being composed entirely of cypress—mostly heart cypress—and set upon brick pillars, I feel safe in saying it will be many years before any repairs will be needed.

The dimensions of the house are fifty by thirty-four feet on the inside. It has fourteen windows and two double doors—hence it is well ventilated; two aisles, each five feet in width; three tiers of pews, and ample space in front of the pulpit for an altar. The pews are comfortable and have a neat finish, and the pulpit is handsomely arranged.

We have for a number of years been using the courthouse for church purposes. In fact we never had any other, except a log-house, which was built for a school-house, and has long since rotted down, and nothing left to mark the spot where it stood. But a better day will soon dawn upon us, when we can worship God under our own vine and fig-tree, around the sacred altar in the edifice dedicated exclusively to this purpose.

A. W. MOORE.

WINNSBORO, LA., March 11, 1873.

DEMOPOLIS DISTRICT CONFERENCE, ALABAMA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.—Bishop Doggett notifies us that he will hold the Demopolis District Conference at Eutaw, Alabama, May 30 and 31st and June 1. Let every member be present, if possible, at the opening service. Preachers in charge will please raise the collections for the Bishops' support and bring it up to the conference.

Will not the members of the church on this district offer up earnest prayer daily for the blessings of God on the churches and ministry, and a mighty outpouring of the Spirit on all the people?

S. H. COX, P. E.

A Line by the Way from the Selma District.

MR. EDITOR: The old year 1872 has passed away, but long will it be remembered by the citizens of that portion of Alabama lying between the Alabama and Tombigbee rivers, and known among us as the Selma district of the Alabama Conference. To this district Bishop Pierce sent a corps of true and well-tried ministers of the gospel; the work being so well manned, it made but little difference who was put at the head as presiding elder, and we were appointed to the charge. As soon as I could move my family—wife and eight children—from Eufaula to Summerfield, a distance of one hundred and forty miles, things were properly adjusted, and we were all at work. Up to the first of July the prospect was truly flattering for a very prosperous year in every particular. But alas! on the twelfth of July an unprecedented flood came, filling the rivers, leaping over their banks, invading all the lower lands, and bearing off upon its surging bosom many horses, mules and cattle, together with the growing crops. Our district, bounded on the east by the Alabama and on the west by the Tombigbee river, with the Cahawba river and a host of smaller streams running through it, was almost one vast sea of water, which, subsiding, left a broad scene of utter devastation. Then came the army worm, invading the uplands and leaving the cotton fields bare and desolate. Sickness and distress followed in their train. The people's living was gone, and but for the timely assistance of Mobile and other more favored portions, great suffering must have ensued during the very long and bitter winter, which is still lingering in the lap of spring.

With this scene before our eyes it was hard to define how the ministry would be supported, much less meet the assessments of the Annual Conference. But our faith failed not, and, trusting in our Master, we went forward, willing to do and suffer, if needs be, for Jesus. A revival sprang up with Bro. Thomas, at Suggsville, in the southern portion of the district. God gave them the little town; the people shouted aloud and sung: "Victory." Bro. Evans, at Rehoboth, Orrville circuit, caught the sound and echoed it back, while the Lord gave him fifty souls in this small village. That grand old man, Bro. Thomas Abernathy, caught the spirit at Jefferson. Armed with the power of God, he went forth to battle, lifting high that banner which for more than fifty years he had borne triumphantly over many a well-fought field. He made a glorious charge upon the enemy, and when, from total exhaustion, he was about to fail, the noble Crawford, from Demopolis, was by his side, and, grasping the falling standard, lifted it higher still, and shouted, "Whosoever will, let him come," and some thirty souls took shelter under the "banner of the cross." The spirit still moved toward the northern boundary of the district, and at Uniontown Bro. Mangum was rejoicing in reaping the fruits of his labors, while at Summerfield Bro. Harris was earnestly invoking pardons for some thirty or forty at the altar seeking salvation. By this time the revival spirit had pretty well permeated the district, and Bros. Calhoun, Hundley, Ellis and Wade were having precious meetings.

We closed up the Conference year well. Sinners were convicted, mourners converted, and the church strengthened and built up in the faith of the gospel. We were very anxious to see the effect of these meetings on the finances in the full annual report. And from our Minutes we see, notwithstanding the hundreds that have drawn certificates and moved west, we have an increase over the former year of three hundred and fifty white members. Increase in Bishops' fund, $27; in Conference collection, $252; in missionary collection, $350; in presiding elder's receipts, $249; in receipts of preachers in charge, $2,684; in periodicals taken, 139. "A pretty fair exhibit," some brother will say. Oh! shame upon us, brethren. The increase ought to have been five times as much. Just think of it: twenty-six ministers and twenty-five hundred members of the church in the Selma district—enough to set the whole State on fire. Oh! come, brethren, let us get right under the cross and pray for a fresh anointing to "preach the word," and in the power of Elijah's God go forward urging sinners to repentance.

The year has just opened, and one of our watchmen has been called from the walls of Zion. It is the sound of our Master's feet behind us. Let us work while it is called to-day.

Bishop Doggett returned me to the district. I received my appointment on the eighteenth of December, and in ten days after I was upon the work, holding a Quarterly Conference on our first round, which we have just closed up at this place. Have met all our appointments, but through great tribulation, we will assure you, for the district at this time is flooded with water, and every creek in good swimming order. The fathers used to plunge their horses into these creeks and swim them. Upon this I am afraid to venture, for fear of separation of horse and rider, and then I am gone, for I never could "get the lick," although declared to be very simple. Had I am a good hand to "coon a log," and have practiced that extensively this round.

Your Bro. M. (once our Bro. M.) served one year as presiding elder of the Lowndesboro district. At the close of the year he was begging the Bishop to allow him to "lay his honors down;" and, relating a little blunder he had in the Pntsalagga, he declared that "the water scared him so bad it actually injured his health." His case came vividly to mind last Monday, when, in a leaking canoe, I was paddling for one and a half miles across Red creek, and then footing it five miles through mud and water to reach Clifton in time for the steamboat that brought me here, where I am comfortably quartered with Bro. J. H. Maloue, whose house is indeed a preachers' home. After two nights' sound sleep I find my health about the same—if anything, a little improved.

The preachers are all at work, except Bro. Cassady, whose failing health has forced him to desist from work, at least for a year. The brethren of the circuit deeply deplore the necessity, and I herewith forward you some resolutions passed by them in Quarterly Conference. In consequence of our failure in crop last year we are now passing through a trying ordeal financially; but the people are devising liberal means for the support of their pastors, and in no case have the assessments been reduced, but in many instances they have been increased. A good brother fears that in our devotion to the church and anxiety to have each appointment ably filled, we will lose sight of the interest of our men. From the exhibit of last year, and the appointments and assessments for the present, it will appear that the Lord is taking care of both.

The weather has been so severe that there has been but little done worthy of special note, except perhaps at East Selma, Bro. James W. Glenn, pastor, who is gradually building up the church in that portion of the city. His congregation and membership are increasing every Sabbath. Bro. Glenn is one of our best men, and the Bishop has given him a great work to perform, which he is doing so well that we confidently expect in a few years to have in Selma two first-class churches in every particular. Bro. Euclid Johnson, that staunch friend of Methodism and its ministry, has moved his membership from the West to the East Selma church, and others have followed his example, in order to build up the church in that portion of the city. Our West Selma church, Bro. M. S. Andrews, pastor, is one of the strongest, and in many respects the best in the Conference. We are anxious to build up another of like character, and to this end the brethren are working in the eastern portion of the city. May the Lord crown their labors with the greatest success.

I leave to-morrow for home, where I have spent one day in five weeks, only to commence my second round with Bro. Harris, at Summerfield. This round we will elect delegates to the District Conference, to be held at Uniontown in June. I cannot now say what Bishop will be with us, but the prospect is good for the secretary of the Board of Missions—Dr. J. B. McFerrin—to be present. Dr. A. S. Andrews and Bros. Moore, Massey and McVoy will be present, we trust, to represent their respective charges—our schools. It is encouraging to hear from our institutions. At Tuskegee the trustees declare that the college has lost nothing by the change which has been made in the presidency, and the institution is growing in favor every day. Old Centenary, the queen mother, is doing well. Her halls are well filled, and with some little regulations by the board of trustees, next year, they will be able to defy all opposition. The Southern University, at Greensboro, has one hundred and fifty students, and they are "still going in." The brethren have been at work for Greensboro, and it is showing itself in the daily increase of students. "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." May the Lord bless all our institutions of learning, and make them fountains of truth and piety, wherein shall emanate annually streams of goodness and salvation, which shall make glad the city of our God.

North Alabama Correspondence

MR. EDITOR: Huntsville has recently enjoyed a feast of reason and a flow of eloquence. Dr. W. E. Munsey has been here—delivered two of his superb lectures, electrified the cerebral forces of the literati, and aroused the wonder of the plebeians. Of course the doctor has been discussed, analyzed, weighed and measured. That a variety of conclusions have been reached is not strange when we remember that a variety of talent has been engaged in it. The truth is, the doctor is an intellectual giant, standing above and moving on a higher plane of thought than most men. The rules laid down in the books were not made to measure men of his intellectual proportions. If I were to say he has an abnormal mind I would intend it as a compliment; for if his mind does not conform to the rules by which we measure other men, it is because the rules fall short, not the man. They might as well try to compress the body and limbs of a physical giant into a suit taken from a Lilliputian nursery to clothe the far-reaching, deep-sounding and heaven-towering thoughts of a real genius with the tiny word-garments in which they swaddle their own thoughts. We must allow a genius—an original thinker—to break through the dykes that have held the stream of measure eloquence to the channels scooped out for it.

Dr. Munsey is a philosopher, an artist, an orator—a genius. As a philosopher his thesis is the result of intuition rather than any process of ratiocination. He can, however, demonstrate his thesis by an inductive course of reasoning eminently Baconian, or by a deductive method equally Platonic. There is no surface work with him—he dives to the bottom. He thinks—thinks abstractly, thinks synthetically, thinks profoundly, thinks on a grand scale. As an artist he paints after no man's model—he creates, but does not copy; he has imagination as well as fancy. The creative powers of his imagination are amazing. Like the eagle towering from his eyrie on the cliff, his imagination mounts above the high empyrean, and soars in the wonder-teeming space that stretches beyond; on it sweeps amid the glory-flashing splendor of ten thousand worlds, the light of which has never come within the range of any telescope—save the eagle eye of Munsey's imperial imagination.

Dr. Munsey is not an elocutionist, but he is an orator. His thoughts startle, instruct, stir, elevate, delight and move his auditors, while they are borne onward with a torrent of eloquence, "amid showers of pearls and diamonds and rarest jewels that pour down from the exhaustless urn" of his creative genius. After hearing his lecture on "Man" my brain reeled and whirled and throbbed and ached and boiled and rolled and surged and lashed, until Aurora in her chariot of state, drawn by steeds of fire, drove through the pearly gates of the east, and let the soft, mellow rays of another morn fall upon the curtains of my window.

Such men have their mission in the world. They may be considered erratic, wild and unsafe in their speculations; but they always knock out a window in the prison walls of error, and let a flood of light pour through the new-made aperture. They stir the world of mind around them, and put men to thinking. They are to the ocean of thought what the storms are to the seas. Barks that are not storm-proof had better stay within the harbor when these sons of Jupiter are abroad upon the vasty deep.

The Wesleyan University, another Methodist college, has been turned over to the State. This was the only male college under the control of the North Alabama Conference. At our last session we had this institution in charge. The agents of the Southern University and the Central University were before us seeking patronage and co-operation. The Conference was not disposed to accept a proposition from another while her own beloved remained unburied, or not legally divorced; so they laid all propositions from abroad on the table, and then appointed a committee, with plenary powers, to see what could be done for or with the Wesleyan University. That committee, after due deliberation and consultation with the board of trustees, decided to turn over the property to the State for a normal college. Knowing as much as I do about the situation, I indorse the action of the committee as being the best thing they could do, all things considered. The North Alabama Conference, as the matter now stands, has no male college in her bounds, and is not formally pledged to any beyond. But she is not indifferent to the subject of education. Her present unpleasant position is the result of a combination of circumstances too complicated to unravel here. As the case now stands, with the State University located at Tuskaloosa, and the State Normal College located at Florence, we will be forced to seek an educational alliance with some university or college beyond our bounds, as it would be folly to attempt to build another Methodist college on our territory. The settlement of this question will be before us at our next annual meeting.

As the question of a high grade of education is now agitating our entire church as it has never done before, it occurs to me that in our future operations we ought to utilize our past experience. That two such institutions of learning as the East Alabama Male College and the Wesleyan University should pass out of our hands at the very time that legally-appointed agents are calling for money to erect buildings for educational purposes, shows that there has been a mistake somewhere. To locate that mistake, or mistakes, so as to prevent a repetition in the future, is a theme worthy the pen of some ready writer and advocate for higher education. It is a fact patent to every observing mind that the educational system of Methodism needs methodizing. As the system now stands there is too much colliding of local interests, too much hasty, immature work, too much pulling down here and building up there, too much local and not enough connectional zeal. What we need is a connectional system of education that will guard every local interest by guarding the interest of all. Can we have such a system? Catholicism has it. Why can't Methodism?

In female colleges our Conference is thoroughly furnished, wanting nothing. The Huntsville Female College, with Rev. George W. F. Price, A. M., at the helm, is doing well. The Athens Female Institute, Rev. James M. Wright, A. M., president, is also a Conference school of long standing and growing prospects. The Tuskaloosa Female College, though the private property of President H. F. Lanahee, A. M., is yet a Methodist school, and is now enjoying a degree of prosperity beyond any period in its former history.

Baltimore Conference.

This Conference concluded its business on the ninth day of the session. We have already given a synopsis of the first six days. We give an abstract of the last three days, made up from the report of the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist:

A committee in the case of Dr. William E. Munsey reported that, in reference to certain rumors, they had carefully inquired into the matter, and that he was unanimously acquitted. Dr. Munsey was, on motion, at his own request granted a location, his physical condition demanding for the present a suspension of all ministerial labor.

The statistical report of the Conference was read, showing a total membership of 23,451—a net increase over last year of 356 members.

Charles Shipley, treasurer of the Missionary Board, presented his report, showing that $4,302.13 had been raised the past year for missions.

Rev. Dr. Poisal delivered an address in reference to the support of the superannuated preachers, in which connection he alluded to the remark of the famous "sailor preacher," Father Edward Taylor, who once compared superannuated ministers to "camels laden with precious spices browsing on the desert."

A collection of $700, the entire deficiency in this matter, was lifted, thus enabling the board of finance to pay the claimants in full.

The financial statistics of the various districts for the past year were received. The aggregate salaries assessed for the preachers the past year amounted to $76,404.13.

Bishop Doggett announced to the Conference that a telegram had been received from Bishop Keener, from Mexico, to the effect that they had recently purchased a house of worship in that city, and a Baltimore lady gave $50 toward paying for it.

Bishop Pierce briefly addressed the Conference in reference to a Spanish missionary by the name of Hernandez, who had recently been employed by Bishop Marvin to tell the story of the cross to a world in wickedness.

Revs. John Miller, John Bear, J. J. Largent, J. H. C. Dosh, George Hildt, J. N. Davis and Dr. Edwards, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, were introduced.

Rev. Dr. Edwards said: "I kindly reciprocate this expression of brotherly feeling, and accompany it with the prayer that peace, harmony and the triumphs of our common cause may prevail throughout our borders."

Rev. George Morrison, of the Presbyterian Church, was also introduced to the Conference.

Staunton was chosen as the place for holding the next Conference.

NINTH DAY.

In anticipation of the report of the committee in the Huston case, and the announcement of the appointments for the ensuing year, the basement of Trinity church was thronged at an early hour, and intense anxiety seemed to pervade the assembly to know the nature of the verdict.

At nine o'clock Bishop Doggett made his appearance in the Conference-room and called the body to order.

Religious services were conducted by Rev. Samuel Rodgers, who in an impressive prayer commended the Bishops in their personal and official relations to the great Head of the Church.

A hymn was then announced by the Bishop, and, after being sung by the Conference, Rev. David Thomas led the congregation in prayer.

The Journal of Thursday's session was read and approved.

Bishop Doggett announced that there was no special business before the Conference.

Rev. A. W. Wilson and Rev. Samuel Rodgers were requested to bear the fraternal greetings of this body to the Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, now in session in this city.

About eleven o'clock the committee in the Huston case entered the church, which was by this time crowded to its utmost capacity, while many remained standing in the aisles and near the door.

The chairman of the committee, Rev. S. Regester, D. D., entered the chancel, and took his seat alongside the presiding Bishop.

At a quarter past eleven o'clock Bishop Doggett said: "Are the committee in the case of L. D. Huston ready to report?"

Rev. Dr. Regester replied: "Ready, sir."

The following report was then read to the Conference:

"The committee to whom the case of Rev. L. D. Huston was referred beg leave to report that, after a careful examination of the evidence in said case, he has been found guilty of immorality, and said L. D. Huston has been expelled from the church."

The accused, through his counsel, Rev. S. S. Roszell, D. D., declared his intention of appealing to the General Conference.

Bishop Doggett announced that, according to the decision of the committee, L. D. Huston was expelled.

Rev. S. Rodgers said he had transmitted to him by mail, from some unknown source, the parchments of L. D. Huston, which were disposed of according to the usages of the church.

DR. JOHNSON, according to Boswell, thought more of dry land than the "mighty ocean." "I don't see," said the tidy doctor, "how any man who has contrivance enough to get into jail ever wants to be a sailor."

POWER AND GOODNESS OF GOD.

There's not a tint that paints the rose,
Or decks the lily fair,
Or streaks the humblest flower that grows,
But Heaven has placed it there.

At early dawn there's not a gale
Across the landscape driven,
And not a breeze that sweeps the vale,
That is not sent from heaven.

There's not of grass a single blade,
Or leaf of lowest mien,
Where heavenly skill is not displayed,
And heavenly wisdom seen.

There's not a tempest dark and dread,
Or storm that rends the air,
Or blast that sweeps o'er ocean's bed,
But Heaven's own voice is there.

There's not a star whose twinkling light
Illumes the distant earth,
And cheers the solemn gloom of night,
But mercy gave it birth.

There's not a cloud whose dews distill
Upon the parching clod,
And clothe with verdure vale and hill,
That is not sent by God.

There's not a place in earth's vast round,
The ocean deep, or air,
Where skill and wisdom are not found,
For God is everywhere.

Around, beneath, below, above,
Wherever space extends,
There Heaven displays its boundless love,
And power with mercy blends.

Original and Interesting Letters.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find an original letter of Bishop Asbury, addressed to the late Dr. M. Ruter, dated March 11, 1810; also an original letter of Dr. Adam Clarke, to N. Bangs and others, dated February 6, 1832. It is thought they might be interesting to the public. They were found by Sister Lewell Campbell among the papers of her father, Dr. M. Ruter, recently forwarded her from Texas. Yours truly, etc.,

JOHN C. MILLER.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., March 14, 1873.

FROM BISHOP ASBURY TO DR. RUTER.

"My Dear Son: God be gracious to thee, and glorious in the uncoverings of the Arm of his power among the people. In all our faintings and feelings and fearings we are comforted in the work of God, that we are assured is not in vain in the Lord. Good news from New Hampshire, Vermont, Maine and the old State. Increase about seven thousand in three Conferences; but this will certainly be the greatest year we have ever known in America, West and South. We go before the wind; in the center we are a little on the lees, but we are emptying a little from vessel to vessel, but are a little becalmed. We are throwing out the oars, calling in ordinary and extraordinary means—fasting, reforming, dressing our vineyards. Sure you will not falut now when victory has declared on our side. It is my wish that the Bishop and myself, after Conference, should go to Boston. Then I take the right on shore to Newport, New London and Gennessee. The Bishop takes Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont in the extreme; so on to Gennessee Conference. But we have not time to deliberate or hardly to speak to each other. I have given him the chair of every Conference; it is time, in the thirty-ninth year of my labors in America, to wind up. I have retired with great pleasure with a valedictory speech, yet I am willing to do all I can to spread abroad the salt of the earth.

"F. ASBURY.

"BALTIMORE, March 11, 1810."

FROM DR. CLARKE TO NATHAN BANGS AND OTHERS.

"To Messrs. J. Emory, B. Waugh, N. Bangs, F. Hall and George Lackley:

"Gentlemen and Rev. Brethren—Having been absent in the west of England for a considerable time, your letter did not reach my hand till some weeks after its arrival. Your kind invitation to visit the United States was gratifying to me, and had I been apprized of your intention a few months earlier I should most certainly have endeavored to meet your wishes, and, by doing so, I have no doubt I should have been both gratified and profited. But the warning is too short, and I am engaged so far, both to England and Ireland, in behalf of our missionary cause that I cannot by any substitute redeem those pledges. I had proposed also to have visited the Zetland Isles, if possible; but, as I had not pledged myself to the voyage, I could have waived my purpose in favor of America, to visit which I have been long waiting for an opening of Providence. I might add that I should have wished to have had the appointment of our Conference for the voyage.

"Now, although I feel a measure of regret that I am disappointed in this wished-for visit to the American continent, yet I am far from supposing that there may not be a providential interference in the way. I am, as no doubt you have already learnt, an old man, having gone beyond threescore years and ten, and consequently not able to perform the labor of youth. You would naturally expect me to preach much, and this I could not do. One sermon in the day generally exhausts me, and I have been obliged for several years to give up all evening preaching, as I found the night air to be peculiarly injurious to my health. My help, therefore, must have been very limited, and in many cases this would be very unsatisfactory to the good people of the United States. This deficiency, I grant, might be supplied by an able assistant, who might be inclined to accompany me, but even this would not satisfy the eye or ear of curiosity. But, as the journey is now impracticable, these reflections are useless. I respect and wish well to your State, and I love your church. As far as I can discern, you are close imitators of the original Methodists (than whom a greater blessing has not been given to the British nation since the Reformation,) holding the same doctrines and acting under the same discipline; therefore have you prospered as we have prospered.

"There is no danger so imminent, both to you and us, as departing from our original simplicity in spirit, in manners and in our mode of worship. As the world is continually changing around us, we are liable to be affected by those changes in our manners and in our mode of worship. We think, in many cases, that we may please well-intentioned men better, and be more useful to them, by permitting some of the mere innocent forms of the world to enter into the church. Whenever we have done so we have infallibly lost ground in the depth of our religion, and in its spirituality and unction. I would say to all: Keep your doctrines and your discipline, not only in your church-books, but in your society rules. Preach the former without refining on them; observe the latter without bending it to circumstances, or impairing its vigor by frivolous exceptions and partialities.

"As I believe your nation to be destined to be the mightiest and happiest nation on the globe, so I believe that your church is likely to become the most extensive and pure in the universe. As a church, abide in the apostolic doctrine and fellowship. As a nation, be firmly united, entertain no petty differences, totally abolish the slave trade (if it be not yet done,) abhor all offensive wars, never provoke even the puniest State, and never strike the first blow. Encourage agriculture and friendly traffic; cultivate the sciences and arts; let learning have its proper place, space and adequate share of esteem and honor; if possible, live in peace with all nations; retain your holy zeal for God's cause and your country's weal; and, that you may ever maintain your liberty, avoid, as its bane and ruin, a national debt. I say to you, as it was said to Rome of old:

Tu regere imperio populo, Romane, memento;
Hæ tibi erunt artes; pacisque imponere morem,
Parcere subjectis et debellare superbos.—Virg.

"But whither am I running! Will it be a sufficient excuse to allege: 'The zeal of your house hath eaten me up?' Truly, truly do I wish you good luck in the name of the Lord; and therefore, with my best prayers for your civil and religious prosperity, and hearty thanks to each of you individually for the handsome and honorable manner in which you have framed your invitation, I have the honor to be, gentlemen and reverend brethren, your obliged humble servant and most cordial well-wisher,

"ADAM CLARKE.

"HAYDON HALL, MIDDLESEX, Feb. 6, 1832."

Infant Church-Membership and Salvation.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of the twentieth of February I saw an article from W. under the above heading. Whether the opinion entertained by him has ever had an airing before I am unable to say. I penned an article five years ago on that subject, in connection with infant baptism, using similar arguments, but not so well put up, and forwarded it to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE; but it did not get into the ADVOCATE, but into the waste basket, I suppose.

This is a doctrine, so far as I know, that has not been as thoroughly investigated as it should be. It appears to be rather new. Most theologians adhere very tenaciously to the old and crude notions of the Calvinists that man is born a sinner, and his propensity to sin is so great that he naturally falls into it. This is lamentably true in a majority of cases; but the fault lies in the training. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he becomes old he will not depart from it."—Solomon. Addison says:

"'Tis education forms the common mind;
Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclin'd."

We believe this applies as well to infant-culture as to horticulture. Many, however, reject the doctrine of infant justification and regeneration, and contend most strenuously for regeneration just before, or in articulo mortis. We maintain that this cannot be established; it is a metaphysical position, and leads its defender into a labyrinth as dark and dreary as the shades of Hades. In reading W.'s article I was expecting to find the following Scripture: "For if by one man's offense death reigned by one, much more they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ. Therefore, as by the offense of one judgment came upon all men unto condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life."—Romans v, 17, 18.

Now in this I think I see the blotting out of what is known as original sin universally; and all are born into the world in a state of justification, "with the abundance of grace, and the gift of righteousness." Well, can any one be regarded by our Heavenly Father as righteous who is not regenerated? Can any individual be justified and at the same time be unregenerated? Calvinists regard justification and regeneration as synonyms. Arminians make a distinction, but admit that both take place at the same instant.

In the Presbyterian "confession of faith" we find the following language: "Elect infants, dying in infancy, are regenerated by the Holy Spirit, through the merits of the atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ." (Of course, if there be elect infants, there are reprobate infants.) I think this idea of regeneration in death had its origin in the above language.

I expected also to see W. quote the Savior's language, as given by Matt. xviii. When his disciples came unto Jesus and asked, "Who is greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" Jesus called a little child unto him and set him in the midst of them, and said: "Verily I say unto you, except ye be converted and become as little children ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever, therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven. But whoso shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were drowned in the depth of the sea." It is possible for a man to have what is called a historical belief or faith without being regenerated, having fallen from his first love; but to have such faith as is here attributed to the little child cannot be without regeneration.—Many interpretations are given to the above Scripture; but it admits of only one legitimate construction, and to give any other meaning than that little children "are believers" does violence to the language of the Savior, and subjects the critic to the sentence pronounced against those who "shall add to the sayings of this book." Certainly no other meaning can be given to the utterance of the Lord than that he intended to convey the idea that little children, all little children, are believers.

Here is a "great mystery." We are not able to comprehend how it is that they are such believers. But what is there in the works of God that is not mysterious and incomprehensible? If we set up the mystery as an argument against it we may go on ad infinitum, and say that nothing is true, because it is mysterious. Our own or the conversion of any other individual is as mysterious as the assertion of Jesus that little children are believers. It is enough for us to know that he said so, and be silent; not to inquire how it is, doubt his language, or put a different meaning from what he designed upon his declaration.

Then, if what Bro. W. has said be true, and if what I have said will bear the test of criticism, children should by all means, if baptized, be regarded as church-members. If their salvation, while in infancy, is secure, and their chance for heaven uncertain, they are of all persons the fittest subjects for baptism. Hope to hear from W. again. Keep the subject before the people and let them weigh it.

JOHN SARPLE.

Impressions of a Transfer.

MR. EDITOR: Let me comply with your request by giving you the impressions of "a transfer" to the Opelousas district. The change, sir, from woodland, worn hillsides and broomsedge fields to open prairies, level farms, extensive districts of virgin soil carpeted with luxuriant green; from iron rails to conservatism and steamers; from Sunday laws to Sunday appropriation; from Protestant to Catholic dominion, places one so far out of his accustomed channels that for a time he is unprepared to comprehend the situation.

The geographical change is pleasant, even to exhilaration—to the eye, as it sweeps over these vast undulating prairies; to the physical man, inhaling its invigorating breezes; to the inner man, contemplating the promise of abundant harvest. These feelings are soon abated by the impress of conservatism. Some of its features retain national peculiarities original from the rural districts of France; others are blended with our own cosmopolitanism. All classes and occupations manifest the utmost respect for this legis, venerable with years, by a tacit obedience to its authority. Sunday appropriation seems to result as a legitimate consequence; the conservatism of Monday defers a part of its duties to Tuesday, and by Saturday an entire day is lost. Accepting the lesson that a man must "be just before he is generous," Sabbath is appropriated to complete six days' work, disregarding the right and authority of him who commands us "to remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy;" actually taking seven days to do the work that others, with all ease, do in six days. Perhaps some may be like Bishop Kavanaugh's preacher, who, being charged with laziness upon the passage of his character, denied the charge; said he was not lazy, but tired; had been tired all his life. No Sunday law is adapted to develop "the tired estate."

Catholicism is dominant. Its influences are more potent and subtle than external appearances indicate. With concentration of purpose and in a quiet manner their talents are all consecrated to one end, with a zeal and devotion worthy of imitation. They retain their national politeness, and their intercourse with me has been marked by great kindness and cordiality.

But, rising above all this, there is to be seen one lone stand of colors unfurled to the breeze. Upon one side a motto is plainly visible: "Spreading scriptural holiness all over these lands;" on the other side: "Methodism." The last page of its history furnishes this: "Over seven hundred souls enrolled under this banner in the Opelousas district in 1872." With this standard, this history and these veterans there is enough life and aggression to weigh this ballast.

The first minister of the district I met was at the junction of the Red and Mississippi, where he got aboard with his family, en route to his appointment—a mission. By Methodistic intuition we soon had each other by the hand, he saying to me: "I most cordially welcome you to our Conference. We have so many destitute fields, I had rather go and labor in them, that others may be induced to come and fill our occupied places; and, since Bishop Pierce's sermon to our Conference, I think the most of our ministers are of the same mind." I "thanked God and took courage," as did Paul when "met by the brethren at Appii Forum and the Three Taverns." Our first Quarterly Conference was advertised to be held two weeks after our arrival. The presiding elder, who lives here, was off on the district and would not be here until then. The day before our meeting he had a long drive to make across the prairies. It was cold, raining, with a driving wind. I anxiously watched the weather, and at last gave him up. Morning dawned; the first bell; ready to preach; a tap at the door, and I stood for the first time face to face before Rev. B. F. White. "He brought the fire with him," and we all felt it good to be there, and, I am grateful to say, "the fire" is still here. From the other ministers I have met I take the two alluded to above as representative men of this district. With men of such consecration, such devotion and spirit, is the result of last year surprising? As a commander places upon posts of danger his most reliable men, so I feel toward these veterans, and entertain for them the greatest admiration. Perhaps you would like to know how this "transfer" is pleased after an insight to both sides of the picture. I will answer by asking you to think how you fare and are pleased when realizing that you are living in the hearts of your flock. So I am faring and pleased.

A TRANSFER.

Moral Perjury.

MR. EDITOR: What is moral perjury? Was not this the sin of Ananias and Sapphira, which was visited with instant death and damnation? They were accused of lying "to the Holy Ghost"—of lying "not unto men, but unto God;" and for this they were struck with instant death to impress on all who might come after them the awful turpitude of this sin; and that they went quick into hell we learn from many scriptural denunciations against false swearing and lying, especially that which declares that "all liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death." There was no law of the church which imperiously required them to sell any part of their land and turn the money over to the church; for Peter inquired: "While it remained was it not thine own? and after it was sold, was it not in thine own power?" The point of their guilt was not in selling the land or in keeping the money, but in their concurrent lying about the matter. When in a good state of religious feeling, and emulated by the example of their fellow-Christians, they "sold a possession"—whether the whole of their estate or not is not stated—and vowed to devote the entire proceeds to religious purposes; but before they "paid their solemn vow to God" they let their cupidity gain the ascendancy, and they agreed to violate their promise of entire consecration by secretly keeping back "a part of the price." This is called "lying unto the Holy Ghost—lying unto God." This is moral perjury, and their terrible punishment shows how exceedingly offensive it is in the sight of God to make solemn religious vows of obedient consecration to him and then deliberately break them. It is undeniable that the Scriptures recognize religious vows—or, if you please, our solemn church covenants—as having all the attributes of the most binding oath. Of the many texts that might be quoted on the affirmative side of this question I will only mention one. The psalmist, in Psalms cxix, 106, uses the following language: "I have sworn, and I will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments." What is this but a solemn religious oath to live in obedience to the will and commandments of God? This is the view Mr. Wesley takes of our church covenants. In his sermon on Scriptural Christianity he uses the following language: "Yea, are there not a multitude of you that are forsworn? I fear a swiftly increasing multitude. Be not surprised, brethren. Before God and this congregation I own myself to have been of the number solemnly swearing to observe all those customs, which I then knew nothing of; and those statutes, which I did not so much as read over, either then or for some years after. What is perjury if this is not? But if it be, oh what a weight of sin, yea, sin of no common dye, lieth upon us! And doth not the Most High regard it? May it not be one of the consequences of this that so many of you are a generation of triflers—triflers with God, with one another and with your own souls?" Yes, Mr. Wesley, in the days of his ignorance and unbelief, was guilty of moral perjury in violating his baptismal and confirmation vows, but never again after God so "strangely warmed his heart." O how many in outward church fellowship with us to-day have the same awful sin resting upon them, and pressing them down to death and hell! They have voluntarily taken upon themselves the most solemn obligation to be governed by the rules of the church only, it would seem, first or last, to wilfully violate almost the entire code. Before God they are guilty of moral perjury, and without speedy repentance must endure the terrible penalty.

Letter from Pleasant Hill.

MR. EDITOR: We had a long trip to this work—from Floyd to Delhi; thence by rail to Vicksburg and New Orleans; thence by water to Brown's Landing, on Red river; thence by hack and wagon to this point. The weather too, for the most part, was bad—rain and snow. But we are here, by God's special grace, and physically none the worse for travel and exposure, although damaged materially financially.

It vexed your correspondent much to meet with Mississippi preachers on the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern railroad, with half-fare and free tickets, while he had to pay full fare each way—and not his fault. Those railroad princes must for some reason prefer preachers who hail from that State, or it may be that our city parsons neglected their duty to arrange for the accommodation of our preachers in this way, over the roads, by not applying at the right time.

At New Orleans we took passage on the good steamer Rapides, Captain Flateau (the owner,) master. He learned in some way, after the boat left, that we were a preacher and his family en our way to a new field of labor; and he put us through, including boxes and trunks, at half fare. We were never more kindly treated by intimate friends than by this gentlemanly stranger and his corps of officers. May blessings ever attend his footsteps. The friends here have very kindly received us; have "fixed up" and furnished the parsonage from front to rear, and we are in possession.

These good people lost their house of worship last year by fire, and are now pushing on to completion a new building, which will be commodious and comfortable when finished.

The college has been reopened by Bros. Morse and Foster, with good prospects ahead. We commend this institution to all the citizens of this part of the State who have children to educate.

There are two camp grounds at the ends of the circuit, only twenty miles apart. They are in good condition, and, I judge, well located; and as we expect to have a meeting at each during the late summer and the early fall ensuing, we give you and the publisher, R. J. Harp, a hearty invitation now to be present at the appointed time, which will be announced in due season.

What package of ADVOCATES for distribution came duly to hand, and some of them have already gone out to do good. I intend to introduce our paper into every Methodist family on the work. I regret our poor mail facilities, which will be a serious drawback in this effort; but we may hope for better things in this direction.

I might speak of other matters, but, as editors and readers dislike long letters, etc., I desist. Yours, etc.,

JAMES E. BRADLEY.

Rev. J. J. Cassady.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Quarterly Conference at Sweet Water church, Choctaw Corner circuit, Selma district, Alabama Conference, February 22, 1873:

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with our brother, Rev. J. J. Cassady, appointed to this work for the present year, in his severe affliction—his health having failed, forcing him to retire from the work—and that we pray for his restoration to health, and support by divine grace in any and all events.

Resolved, That we will pay all expenses which Bro. Cassady incurred on or getting to our circuit.

Aggressive Work for Christ.

One thing is always safe, and that is hearty, believing work. We shall not repel the assaults of skepticism by building defenses around the church. We must become aggressive, and go forth in the spirit of Christ to conquer. Nothing silences all cavils to objections like loving work for Christ. A Christian woman gathering lambs for Christ in lanes and alleys; a sister of mercy ministering by the bed of the sick and dying; men leaving home and kindred to carry the gospel to the heathen; men of business trafficking in the market to gain the means to be almoners for God—present the divine character of our religion so as to stop the mouths of all gainsayers. It may be the time is at hand when, to save the church and bring the world into subjection to our King, we shall have to fall back upon the rule of the apostolic church, when "all that believed were together and had all things common, and sold their goods and possessions and parted them to all, as every man had need, and they continued daily with one accord in the temple, and, breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favor with all the people, and the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." God is punishing us for our unhappy divisions. He has permitted us to see such a school of infidelity as the world has never seen. It will soon be a hand-to-hand conflict for all that we hold dear for time and eternity. This will compel all who love Christ to become one. I believe that the faith and love and work of a reunited church will bear such fruit in works of love that it will draw many irresolute souls to find safety in its fold. When the church shows in its practice the lessons of brotherhood and citizenship in the kingdom of God as clearly as she teaches the faith in her creeds, the world will bow to her who is not of the world, and all men take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus.—Bishop Whipple.

OBITUARIES.

JOSEPH LEAKE, son of Rev. W. C. and Anna S. Haislip, was born in New Iberia, Louisiana, August 16, 1871, and died of enteric fever, in Paris, Texas, March 8, 1873.

REBECCA CLARK was born in South Carolina, December 30, 1797; moved to Georgia and was married to William Yarborough in 1812; moved to Marion county, Mississippi, in 1818, and joined the Methodist Church in 1826; died of pneumonia, in St. Helena parish, Louisiana, at the residence of her sons, John and Elijah, January 28, 1873, aged seventy-five years and twenty-nine days. Her example was uniform, and calculated to teach. Her last illness was borne with patience, looking to the end of life with trustful confidence.

C. C. WATKINS.

MIRO H. RODDY was born in St. Helena parish, Louisiana, September 24, 1849, joined the Methodist Church September 24, 1860, professed religion shortly afterward, and to the end of life maintained the exalted Christian profession marked out in her conversion. She was married to Asa H. Adams January 25, 1865, and died January 21, 1873. Sister Adams was a consistent Christian. When she felt that death was near her faith failed not, "but was strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." She spoke to her friends of her readiness to depart and be with Christ, and sent word to her aged and afflicted mother not to grieve for her—that she was prepared to go. She leaves a husband and three children in sorrow, but not without hope.

C. C. WATKINS.

IT BECOMES our painful duty to announce the death of an interesting and much-beloved youth, WILLIE, the son of David and Frances Ann Riffle, who departed this life October 26, 1872, at ten minutes after two o'clock P. M., aged twelve years and eleven days.

We truly sympathize with the afflicted parents and family in their bereavement, for little Willie was much cherished and loved by all who knew him, for his manly deportment and moral conduct made him quite a favorite. But we have this consolation—to know that he has gone to his home in heaven, where he will meet with those who have gone before, where there is no more death and separation, to be happy forever. Therefore we will exclaim, in the language of good old David: "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord!"

A FRIEND.

JOHN BROWN, an old and esteemed citizen of this community, has passed away from earth. He was born in South Carolina, June 9, 1789, and died, at his residence near Pushmataha, Choctaw county, Alabama, December 8, 1872, aged eighty-three years, five months and twenty-nine days. In 1830 he moved to Alabama and settled in Greene county; thence, in 1837 or 1838, to this county. A pioneer to this State, he has witnessed the many changes which have taken place to the present. Here, before the Indians were carried to the West, he aided in their removal.

At the age of thirty-three years Bro. Brown made a profession of faith in Christ and united with the Methodist Church. To his death he remained a prominent and earnest member. From the commencement of his last illness, which lasted several weeks, he was impressed that he would not recover. He was much drawn out in prayer. God, in answer, gave great peace and confidence to his dying servant. He testified to all that he was "willing to die," "ready to go." In his expiring moments, calling on Jesus, he said: "Not my will, but thine be done."

C. B. D.

MRS. NANCY MAGLIN BROWN was born November 19, 1804. She was married to Bro. John Brown, the subject of the above notice, in 1819, and died, at her home in the vicinity of Pushmataha, Choctaw county, Alabama, December 21, 1872, aged sixty-eight years, one month and two days. She survived her husband only thirteen days.

In 1824 she united with the Methodist Church. Sister Brown was a most worthy and amiable lady, an exemplary wife and a devoted mother. Her unceasing watchfulness around the sick-bed of her husband brought on the attack which terminated her life. At first, in viewing the change which was rapidly approaching, she was much disturbed; her mental anguish was intense. Her attending physician, a man of piety, exhorted her "to look to Jesus," "to trust in Jesus." She did so, and joy and peace which passeth understanding filled her soul. To the last moment of her life she was constantly happy, rejoicing in hopes of the glory of God. Thus quickly she has followed her beloved husband to the "city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

C. B. D.

MRS. SUSAN MCCALL, late of Tensas parish, Louisiana, was the daughter of Jeremiah and Phœbah Coleman, and was a lineal descendant of Rev. Samuel Swayze, Congregationalist minister, who settled on the Homochitto river, near where Kingston now stands, in Adams county, Mississippi, in 1773. She was born February 14, 1800, and grew to womanhood near Selsertown, in Adams county, Mississippi. Her father assisted in organizing the first Presbyterian church in Mississippi, and her mother was a devoted member of the Baptist Church. She was married to Mr. Dougald McCall April 6, 1826, and settled near Oakland College, in Claiborne county, Mississippi. Soon after their marriage they became members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and continued steadfast in the faith until death. While the piety of each was undoubted, their manner of expressing their religious emotions was quite antipodal. Mr. McCall was excitable, demonstrative, and at times decidedly noisy in the manifestation of his joyous emotions, while she was like the bosom of the mountain-inclosed lake, with only now and then a perceptible ripple on the surface. Her docility was remarkable. She much preferred sitting at the feet of others to learn the way of the Lord more perfectly than to assume the prerogatives of a teacher herself. After the death of her husband, November, 17, 1854, she removed to Tensas parish, Louisiana, where she lived with her two sons in the enjoyment of peace and plenty, and of her much-loved church privileges, until the beginning of the late ill-advised and disastrous war. Then came trouble, sorrow and irreparable loss to this quiet and happy Christian family. Her youngest son, E. S. McCall, entered the Confederate army at an early date, and by his superior skill and prowess soon graduated to a major's command, which he retained to the close of the war. Their plantation was overrun and broken up by the Federal army, so that, at the close of the war, her two sons retired to Texas to commence the struggle of life anew, while she went to close her earthly pilgrimage with her only daughter, Mrs. William W. Watson, of Cross Keys, Tensas parish. Here she lived in great retirement—not able to attend church at a distance, and seldom seeing either member or minister. But still her course was heavenward. She loved to read her Bible and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and felt an abiding interest in the prosperous movements of the church at a distance. After the utter ruin of their once fine estate she quietly betook herself to the industrial habits of her early life, which she kept up to its close. She died more from the physical exhaustion of old age than from any special disease, having nearly completed her seventy-third year. She had been troubled somewhat with slight hemorrhages, palpitation of the heart and an inclination to faint for some time, until, February 5, 1873, without any conscious pain or suffering except exhaustion, she calmly breathed her last and went to her long-sought rest above. Life's terrible battle was well and successfully fought to the final victory, and she has received her crown of life. Blessings from our covenant-keeping God on her children and grandchildren is the earnest prayer of their friend and relative,

THE NEW DAY.

BY LOUISA BUSHNELL.

Silent has been the night, and O so long!
With weary moon forever sailing west;
Save that a bird at midnight trilled a song,
A dream of daylight, from its moonlit nest.

The hills lay couched in slumber, range on range,
The earth was floating in a silver web—
That mystery of calm before a change!
That lull of waters at the lowest ebb!

Some drowsy notes were all the bird could sing,
Soft as the scattered drops of summer dew;
Then, hushed within the quiet of his wing,
He sang no more; but now the dream comes true.

A thrill runs through the spaces of the night,
And flutters on the wavy eastern line;
Beyond the stars dilates a distant light,
The luminous outflow of a day divine.

With slow approach it deepens into bloom,
Faint jasmine yellow, with a flush of rose;
And, brightening till it makes the stars a gloom,
O'er all the long uncertainty it flows.

What though the perfect day is yet unborn!
Sweet was the carolled vision of the bird;
Glad are the tidal colors of the morn,
And Heaven is pledged without a single word.

The waves of light are breaking on the shore,
Pulsing in cadence to a mightier flow—
The strong uplift of nobler hopes before,
The great new future rising in the glow.

Above the hills surges the day at last—
The longed-for day, effulgent, high and wide;
Turn, turn, gray earth, and leave the darkened past,
And swing thyself upon the incoming tide!

Elect Infants.

In a courteous allusion to our recent article in these columns on "A Question of Historic Fact," the Herald and Presbyter, of Cincinnati, makes no attempt to dispute the correctness of the representation given in said article, as to the historic position of the Calvinistic churches and creeds on the subject of infant salvation and damnation. It is not even disputed that the language of the Westminster Confession, with respect to "elect infants dying in infancy," as used by its authors, implied that a part of those dying in infancy were not elect. The only thing attempted is a defense of the use of such language by those who believe in the salvation of all infants dying in infancy. The vindication runs as follows:

"As the Scriptures speak of the saved as elect, why should not those who hold to the salvation of all infants speak of them as elect? This does not imply that any are non-elect. If a vessel at sea is about to sink, and the master decides that the women and children shall first be admitted to the lifeboat, to be saved, then all women and children may be called his elect or chosen ones. To call them elect don't imply that they are chosen from among women and children, but from all on board."

We are not certain that we get the full force of this explanation as it strikes a Calvinistic mind; but to our humble capacity it seems that, in order to make the illustration at all pertinent, it would be necessary for the writer to justify the supposed shipmaster in issuing such a proclamation as the following: "Elect women and children, about to sink with the foundering ship, will be put in the lifeboat and saved by the first mate, through the boatswain, who worketh when and where and how he pleaseth. So also other elect persons who are incapable of being directed by the orders of the captain. Others, not elected, although they may be ordered about by the captain, and be brought by the boatswain down the common plank almost into the lifeboat, never being effectually helped in, cannot be saved."

What would be thought of the captain who, amid the horrors of a sinking vessel, should issue such an announcement? Would it instantly bring relief to every husband and father, assuring them that at least all of the women and children were to be saved? Would the women and children at once understand that they were all to be "first admitted to the lifeboat?" Would they say that the captain's use of the term elect "does not imply that any are non-elect?" Would they congratulate each other as all elect, and say that the captain called them so, not as a part in distinction from the others, but as a whole in distinction "from all on board?"

Were any captain, in the supposed emergency, to issue the above proclamation, merely to announce to his crew and passengers "that the women and children should be first admitted to the lifeboat," I fear he would stand in no small danger of an early discharge, if on no other ground than on that of inability to express his orders intelligibly.

The statement that the expression elect infants "does not imply that any are non-elect," ought to call out a protest on the part of every Calvinistic organ in the country. Here is what Father Calvin himself thought of it:

"Many, indeed, as if they wished to avert odium from God, admit election in such a way as to deny that any one is reprobated. But this is puerile and absurd, because election itself could not exist without being opposed to reprobation."

To the same effect is the language of the "Exposition of the Westminster Confession," published by the Presbyterian Board of Publication:

"Some who allow of personal and eternal election deny any such thing as reprobation. But the one unavoidably follows from the other; for the choice of some must unavoidably imply the rejection of others. Election and reprobation are correlative terms; and men impose on themselves, and imagine they conceive what it is impossible to conceive, when they admit election and deny reprobation."

"Elect infants," therefore, did not use to mean all infants. And Dr. Hodge's charge, that Dr. Krauth had "put his own construction" upon the Westminster Confession, is, to express it mildly, at least, headed the wrong way.—Western Christian Advocate.

WHEN once any proposition is clearly demonstrated to be true, it ought not to disturb us that there be perhaps perplexing difficulties on the other side, which merely, for want of adequate ideas of the manner of the existence of the things demonstrated, are not easy to be cleared.—Clarke.

A Catechism.

Rev. J. Hyatt Smith, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, is the author of a work against close communion, entitled "The Open Door." Mr. Spurgeon has read this book, and says of it to the author: "If this communion question must be discussed, I wish every success to the Christian versus the Baptist side of it. I dare not be a strict communionist. Yet, mark you, the laxity of my brethren here influences me in the direction of strict communion; and only my persuasion that it is not according to the mind of the Spirit keeps me from it."

Among other good things in Mr. Smith's book is the following brief Baptist catechism:

"Question. Of whom is the church composed?

"Answer. Of baptized believers only.

"Question. What are the ordinances of the church?

"Answer. There are two ordinances—baptism and the Lord's Supper.

"Question. What only is baptism?

"Answer. Immersion.

"Question. Who only may administer the ordinance?

"Answer. The regular officers of the church, in the church.

"Question. The church being a body of baptized believers, can an unbaptized minister administer the ordinance of baptism?

"Answer. It is impossible; for, being unbaptized, he is not in the church; his act, therefore, cannot be baptism.

"Question. The man nominally thus receiving baptism, being unbaptized, is he not equally disqualified with the man who assumed to baptize him, and must not this disqualification continue in an endless succession?

"Answer. Yes! the tree being evil, the fruit must also be evil. 'A corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit.'

"Question. Was Roger Williams baptized; and did he baptize his deacon (Ezekiel Holliman?)

"Answer. He was not baptized when he immersed the deacon, therefore the deacon was not baptized when he immersed him. The church only hath power to baptize. Williams, being unbaptized, was not in the church. Not being in the church, he could not administer the ordinance; and the disability of the minister is by necessity the disability of the deacon; for the latter, not being baptized, was also without the church; and, therefore, the immersion of Roger Williams at his hand was not baptism, for the same reason that his previous immersion by Mr. Wtlliams was not baptism.

"Question. Did Roger Williams establish really a Baptist church?

"Answer. He did in form, but he did not and could not in practice, for 'a church is composed of baptized believers,' and those who received immersion by himself or his successors, to the latest generation, were not baptized. (Benedict calls the Roger Williams Church 'the ancient and prolific mother of Baptist churches in this country.')

"Question. Did Christ baptize?

"Answer. 'Jesus himself baptized not.'—John iv, 2.

"Question. Who baptized the first man, and was the administration of the ordinance afterward by him valid?

"Answer. By the logic of the church, the first administrator being unbaptized, he had not power to baptize, and of necessity this disability has descended through the succeeding ages and generations of men.

"Question. Is there a true church on earth?

"Answer. There is not—there never has been—and there never can be. The argument is simple, and the chain is perfect. The church is composed only of baptized believers. He who is immersed by an unbaptized man is not himself baptized, and his successors are in equal disability. The first professed administrator being of necessity unbaptized, his act was invalid, and his failure of title disinherits all his descendants.

"Question. Should we not deny a doctrine which forces us to such a conclusion?

"Answer. The premise is wrong, the argument ridiculous, and the conclusion both false and foolish."

Waiting.

The following is taken from the "Home Interest" column of the Tribune, edited by Mrs. Joseph B. Lyman, of Richmond Hill: "Did any one ever compute the number of hours, days, months, years, mortals spend in waiting? We wait for the train; we wait for an expected visitor; we wait for the golden opportunity; and all the time the precious sands are slipping through the hour-glass. Some wait a lifetime for their moment of triumph, and find it only at their exit from the mortal stage. Happy they if at that late period fruition overtakes them. The young man waits his majority to begin life for himself; the young woman waits the coming of another morn risen on mid-noon and a sphere congenial to her nature; and so, from the cradle to the grave, 'man never is, but always to be blest.'

"Now we have a pet theory of life which sets it to quite another tune than that of waiting. We believe that there is in human affairs a system of promotion, often invisible to mortal eyes, by which, when one is fitted for a higher place than that he now occupies, he will be advanced to it. Instead of waiting for the hour when he shall step up higher, let him diligently improve every moment of time in qualifying himself for the position to which he aspires. While absorbed in the pursuit of those things which will enable him to hold successfully the vantage ground he is fighting for, he may find himself in possession of that vantage ground unawares; one step upward at a time, persevered in, will conquer the highest mountain, and give the climber time to look on all the vast landscape below.

"There is nothing so idle as mere waiting; and provision should always be made by which this profitless waste of time may be prevented. A bit of crochet work or embroidery in one's pocket, an interesting book, a vexed social question, may fill the gap made by a delayed train, a tardy guest or an untoward accident. If dinner is not ready on the moment, the master of the house will find space to read the market reports; and if he is slow to answer the dinner-bell, his wife and daughters can improve the time in gleaning the journals for the latest news. It is monotony of labor that wearies. Work can be adjusted that one variety shall furnish rest from another. When one has gone through severe intellectual labor, nothing is more refreshing than the rest that comes after physical toil. The broom should succeed the needle, and not the needle the broom. It is in the power of many of us so to adjust our daily lives that but few of the allotted hours shall be passed in waiting. The amount of actual performance one can show who makes a judicious use of every moment of time is almost incredible. The greatest worker in this country possesses the happy secret of going to sleep when he is tired and has nothing for the hour to occupy him, and of waking up refreshed when duty summons him to action. The veil which hides the future from our eyes is impenetrable, and we cannot know to what peculiar end we are polishing our faculties, storing our minds, cultivating our moral natures; but we may be sure that when we are ready for the niche we are designed to occupy, it will be ready for us, and there will be no waiting till it is filled."

A Striking Conversion.

I had the privilege of dedicating a beautiful country church in my State, in a neighborhood surrounded almost entirely with infidels. The preacher directed my attention to a tall, manly, vigorous man in the congregation, and said he would give me his history when the service was over. He was, it seems, a violent, passionate, close-fisted man. Not a solitary farthing could anybody get out of him for the salvation of souls or for the elevation of humanity. He went to the altar a few months ago, said the minister, and gave his heart to Jesus. The infidels in the community said: "Wait a little while—touch his pocket, and you will see where his religion is." "Presently," continued my friend, "I came to him with my subscription-paper, and spoke of the difficulties and embarrassments under which we labored in the neighborhood for the want of a church." "Well," said the man, "let us build a house." "What will you give?" inquired the preacher. "Fifty dollars," was the prompt reply, and the minister passed through the community with the subscription-paper, at the head of which was this amount, written in the gentleman's own handwriting, which surprised everybody. A few days afterward the most trying circumstance of his life occurred. His dear wife trembled for him. "O my husband!" she exclaimed, "don't go." His reply was: "I must go; my duty calls me there; I am perfectly cool and collected. I shall become excited, but I will not say a word or do a thing out of the way." He passed through the fiery ordeal without the least taint of anger upon him. The community then said: "Surely there is something in this; you have reached his pocket, you have conquered his anger, and you have subdued the man. There is power in this gospel of Christ." A few weeks after my visit there I received the sad intelligence that that gentleman had been buried. He had gone out into the forest, and, unfortunately, a tree fell upon him and crushed him to the earth, and yet did not entirely destroy him. They carried him to the house, and sent for a physician and the minister. He calmly asked for the Bible, and read in a clear voice a chapter in John's gospel. After shutting the Bible he closed his hands upon his breast, "and such a prayer," said my ministerial brother, "I never heard from mortal lips, for his wife, his children, for his pastor, for the church and for his infidel friends." In a moment or two after saying amen he closed his eyes, and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. The infidels said: "There is something in religion." A few weeks since I met with that good pastor again. I inquired what about his infidel neighbors, and he replied: "All of them but one are happily converted to God."—Bishop Bowman.

The Test of Prayer.

A curious case, which is intended to combat Prof. Tyndall's idea of testing the efficacy of prayer, is found in the story of a Dissenting exhorter in England. This man had acquired considerable local fame, and he attracted the confidence of a lady who heard him. After his sermon she went to him to relate an incident of personal experience, which, as she thought, might afford him aid in his exhortations. The preacher listened to her with peculiar interest and in great excitement; and, when she had finished, he requested her as a special favor not to repeat the circumstance until he should come round again. It was some time after that the preacher visited the locality, and he found the same lady among his audience. As a conclusion to his sermon on the value of prayer, he said that, a few years before, a lady living in an out-of-the-way place, in an old-fashioned house, and almost alone in the wing in which her bedroom was situated, discovered, upon retiring to her room at midnight, that a man was concealed under the bed. She was afraid to go out, lest the burglar should suspect that she was going to call for help, and so attack her. She took out her Bible and read the parable of the prodigal son. Then she kneeled down by her bedside and prayed aloud. She prayed for those who had been exposed to temptation, for the outcasts and the wrong-doers. She begged that she might be spared from peril during the night. She asked that mercy might be vouchsafed to all who repented.

Having concluded her earnest and eloquent prayer, she retired. The burglar came from under the bed and said to her: "I mean you no harm, ma'am; I am going to leave the house, and I thank you for your prayer." He then went away, and the lady soon heard him jumping out of the window to the lawn below. "The good woman of whom I have told you," added the exhorter, in a broken voice, "is with us now, and the sinner to whom her simple womanly prayer was shame, remorse, penitence, and a future of repentant expiation, is he who here confesses himself to you and his Maker."

The story is an affecting one, and no doubt true.

Brazil as a Mission Field.

We published in January of last year a letter from Rev. J. E. Newman, who, soon after the war, moved to Brazil, giving an account of that vast country as an inviting missionary field. We have lately been favored by W. W. Newman, Esq., of Hanover county, a brother of the Brazilian settler, with another letter from that gentleman, from which we give a few extracts:

"I am well satisfied that our extemporaneous manner of preaching will please the Brazilians. Are you aware that there is scarce any more preaching among this people than in Central Africa? And we have as much religious freedom here as was in England forty years ago; and this is the most hospitable people I ever saw. They seldom ever charge a traveler, and very many of them are "Free-Thinkers," and have a thorough contempt for all the tricks and devices of Romanism. Some day when I have time I will write an article to try and give you some idea of Romanism as it is here. Money, money, money, is what every 'Padre' is after, and they get it by thousands.

"Why do not some of our people emigrate to this goodly land? The healthfulness and pleasantness of the climate can hardly be exaggerated; and as to its productions, it is easier to live in plenty here than on half fare in the States. By paying out $40 or $50 here my boys and myself cleared last winter over thirty acres; and after land is cleared and well cultivated one year, it is then a real pleasure to cultivate these beautiful red lands. I heartily wish that you and all our family were settled in this beautiful country. Everything that man needs for food is raised here in abundance, and for milk and butter, cattle and hogs, no country can surpass it. Poultry can be raised here without trouble. We have more than we can use, and never 'set a hen.' Here we have, indeed,

"'Sweet fields arrayed in living green,
And ever-blooming flowers.'

"Every sober and industrious young man of our race in this country could find a dozen openings for profitable business.

"This was written yesterday at noon, while resting. The weather is now quite warm—warm as we ever have in this country; it is our midsummer.

"In regard to our religious prospects in San Paulo, I can say we still have indications of good, and some pleasant meetings. I recently baptized, by immersion, two of our most respectable American ladies—the first baptisms I have performed by immersion in Brazil. I have good congregations, and though we have Presbyterians and Baptists and Episcopalians, I see no difference between them and the Methodists in attending my appointments, and I visit all alike.

"The Methodists in the South have shown such perfect indifference to my appeals in favor of planting a church in this country that I have seriously thought of proposing to our Protestant people here an organization on such a basis as all could unite upon, especially Methodists and Presbyterians. Again I have seriously thought of opening correspondence with the Wesleyan Methodists of England. Indeed, I should have done this ere now, but I did not know how to direct a letter or to whom. And if our people do not soon take some steps toward starting a mission here, I want you to call on the editor of the Richmond Advocate, and get him to assist you in giving me the address of the secretary of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society of England. Be sure to get this. We are greatly in want of hymn-books, Disciplines, catechisms, etc. And it is so far to send a small amount of money that we have as yet sent for none. Within three or four months I hope to be able to send $100 or $200 to the States for books and papers for our church here.

"Tell Dr. Duncan if he can induce two or three young men of the right sort to come to San Paulo, that they will have a very fine field for usefulness, and they can live among our people here almost free from cost until they are ready to preach in Portuguese."—Richmond Christian Advocate.

DR. CHALMERS beautifully said: "The little that I have seen in the world and known of the history of mankind teaches me to look upon their errors in sorrow, not in anger. When I take the history of one poor heart that has sinned and suffered, and represent to myself the struggles and temptations it passed through—the brief pulsations of joy; the tears of regret; the feebleness of purpose; the scorn of the world that has little charity; the desolation of the soul's sanctuary, and threatening voice within; health gone; happiness gone—I would fain leave the erring soul of my fellow-man with him from whose hands it came."

DO THINK.—"Two things a master commits to his servant's care," said one—"the child and the child's clothes." It will be a poor excuse for the servant to say at his master's return: "Sir, here are all the child's clothes, neat, clean, but the child is lost!" Much so with the account that many will give to God of their souls and bodies at the great day: "Lord, here is my body, and I am very grateful for it. I neglected nothing that belonged to its content and welfare; but for my soul, that is lost and cast away forever. I took little care and thought about it."

Religious Intelligence.

DR. STRONG, of Madison, professor in Drew Seminary, is president of a grand exploring expedition about to start for the Holy Land.

OVER 300 have professed conversion in the Methodist church at Keyport, New Jersey, under the pastorate of Rev. R. J. Andrews, this winter.

DURING the last ten years 385,000 copies of the Scriptures have been circulated in Turkey, for which nearly £18,000 had been paid, the principle being that gratuitous distribution was to be avoided.

THE Evangelist says of Dr. Cuyler's church, Brooklyn: "The present number of members is 1,575. During the twelve years of Dr. Cuyler's pastorate there have been 2,230 members received, of whom over 1,000 have united on profession of faith."

THE death of the Rev. Daniel Macafee, of the Irish Conference, is announced. Mr. Macafee was eighty-one years of age. He was most distinguished by the controversy which he carried on with Daniel O'Connell when the latter was at the height of his popularity. In him Mr. O'Connell found a match.

ACCORDING to the Yale record the receipts from Prof. Tyndall's lectures in this country are to be distributed as follows: The sum of $1,500 is to go to the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington, $500 to the Yale Scientific Club, and $15,000 to a committee as a trust fund for the education of one or two young men for the scientific career. The gift to Yale is to found a Tyndall prize in the Sheffield school.

THE latest English religious papers come to us filled with indignation at the tone of the Roman Catholic archbishop's recent address at Sheffield. He openly declared and defended the doctrine of subordinating his loyalty to his country to his loyalty to the Pope. First a Romanist, then an Englishman! Very naturally such double-faced patriotism is resented by every true Briton who believes that Christ and one's country is not a conflicting allegiance.

THE Baptist Year-Book will contain a summary of returns, showing that somewhat more than 84,000 baptisms have been reported. Last year the summary gave a total of 85,321. But last year blanks of the 250 associations that did not send reports were filled out by taking the number of baptisms reported in the latest minutes available. This year no attempt is made to give the number of baptisms when no reports have been received.

PASTEUR JAULMES COOK reports a Sunday school in the Waldensian valleys which commences at five o'clock in the morning, because most of the scholars have to watch the cattle on the mountains during the day. Even before that early hour the pastor in charge of the school finds the children gathered at the church door, awaiting his coming; and he is waked sometimes by their singing of the sweet Sunday school hymns, as they stand there watching. Children on both sides of the ocean are more willing to be taught than Christians are to teach them.

OLD CATHOLICISM.—Bishop Littlejohn, who was sent out to attend the convention, has returned and reports that the entire affair is without any consistency or force. Dr. Wellman, who has recently been traveling in Germany, told the Boston ministers, a week or two ago, that Prof. Tholuck confirmed his own judgment that the Old Catholic movement would come to nothing; that sooner or later most of those concerned in it would drift into the Roman Catholic Church. Not until men give up the priestly system entirely will they break away from Rome effectually. The Romish system cannot be reformed; it must be destroyed, root and branch.

THE question of prison reform is solved in the Ohio Penitentiary in what to most evangelical Christians must be a very satisfactory way. The Rev. O. H. Newton, chaplain of that penitentiary, reports that about a year and a half ago a prison church was organized, and since that time about 960 of the convicts have supposed they were converted and have professed religion. About 100 of these have been discharged from the prison in that time, and almost without exception they have united with churches outside. In this penitentiary about 400 of the prisoners attend the Sabbath school of the prison and nearly 500 attend the prayer meetings. Often in these meetings the prisoners take part, and ordinarily the greatest seriousness prevails.

THE Baptist churches in Russia and Turkey have formed an association, which met recently for organization in a spacious school-house at Alt Danzig, and continued in session for five days. The London Freeman states that many recent cases of baptism are reported in Russia, and the truth in that empire is making progress. Among the converts are persons of note, as an elder, a judge, and more than one schoolmaster. Among the Lettish brethren it is said the wonders of divine grace in the conversion of sinners exceed all conception. There are about 100 Baptist members in Riga, and thirteen in St. Petersburg. The work of grace in Courland is of wide proportions. In that province and Livonia, including Riga, there are more than 2,000 members. Occasionally persecution seems too ready to burst upon the little flock; but with a few exceptions it has been averted.

THE Jews in Germany are marching with the times. A conference has just met at Berlin, convened by the "Alliance Israelite Universelle," at which seventy delegates attended. The efforts of the old orthodox party to preserve unity on the ancient basis, and to keep one with the French body, utterly failed, and the reformers carried the day, agreeing to establish a separate "Alliance" for Germany. The tendency of this movement is toward the rationalizing philosophy of the German mind, as expressed in the closing words of the president of this conference: "The Jews are called by their destiny to spread abroad the principle of a humanitarianism (Humanitat,) superseding every difference in faith, pure, free and sacrificing, since they are brought into contact with the spirit and ideas of nearly every nation in the world." In fact this movement results in Unitarianism, pure and simple, and it is at least notable as among the hitherto immovable Jews.

UNDER THE BAN.—Switzerland has added a new article to its constitution, declaring that "the order of the Jesuits and the societies connected with it may not be revived in any part of Switzerland; and all action in the church and schools is forbidden to their members. Monasteries and convents may not be established or re-established." The latest telegram from Rome states that the committee of the Chamber of Deputies of the Italian Parliament have resolved "that the suppression of the Society of Jesus, including the chief establishment of the order in Rome, is imperatively demanded by the interests of the nation." It is added that this announcement was received by the Liberal deputies with enthusiastic applause. Such are the responses of the European nations to the Vatican Council. Are Americans asleep over perils that are so forcibly resisted in the Old World?

THE New York Church Journal, speaking of the prevailing feeling of its own (the Protestant Episcopal) church, says: "The sect-idea has been largely got rid of by the vast majority of the clergy, and by a large mass of the intelligent laity. They have accepted—and are heavily blamed, sneered at sometimes, and sometimes ignorantly scolded at for so doing—the conviction that the Protestant Episcopal Church is the Catholic Church in faith, orders and history of this land and people." The same paper gives, in another column, the following statistical item: "Communicants—number in the whole church, about 235,000." There are nearly ten times as many Baptist communicants in the country, and fully ten times as many Methodists, to say nothing of the Congregationalists, Presbyterians, etc., and yet this comparatively little communion of our Protestant Episcopal brethren stands forth pluckily as "the Catholic Church, in faith, orders and history of this land and people." The people vote nay on that point.—Methodist.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.—The stated meeting of the board of managers was held at the Bible House, Astor place, on Thursday, the sixth of February. Dr. William H. Allen, president, in the chair. Four new auxiliaries were recognized: one in each of the States of South Carolina, Missouri, Indiana and Nebraska. Interesting communications were received from friends of the Bible cause in Turkey, China, Italy and the Sandwich Islands. Grants of books were made to the American Missionary Association; to the New York Prison Association; to the Friends' Freedmen's Association, of Philadelphia; to the Western Methodist Book Concern; to Kansas Bible Association of Friends; several grants to railroads for cars and stations; and to the Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago, for caboose-cars; with numerous grants to feeble auxiliaries at the South and West. The total number of volumes granted is 12,795, including twenty volumes in raised letters for the blind, besides others to the amount of $300. In funds, $1,000 were granted to the Valparaiso Bible Society, Chili.

TWO NUMBERS of the Deutscher Merkur, of the fourth and eleventh of January, which is the recognized organ of the Old Catholics, contain some matters of interest in regard to the principles and progress of the movement. In Cologne, on the twenty-ninth of December, a great crowd filled the Church of St. Pantaleon, at the service of mass. About the same time a meeting of the committee, having in charge the matter of the election of a bishop, took place, and some preliminary arrangements were made. The opinion found expression that one bishop would not suffice, but that there would be needed one for North Germany, one for South Germany and one for Switzerland. The movement makes such progress that the necessity for a firm organization daily becomes greater. In Bonn worship is soon to be established, the King having given them the Schlosskapelle for present use. The Roman Catholic preachers of the city—one of them a brother of Prof. Reinkens—warned their congregations against attending the schismatic and sacrilegious worship. In Crefeld some 180 families have been enrolled as members of an Old Catholic congregation, and the church, which holds some 500 persons, is filled every Sunday.

THE following is the "confession of faith" of the American Union Church of Rome, a confession made not in the ear of a priest, but before God and the world: "Called in God's providence to dwell for a time in the city made sacred by the labors of the great apostle to the Gentiles, we desire to emulate his example as faithful servants of God, by witnessing a good confession of our faith before the world. We believe in the necessity and efficiency of an organized and visible church; in the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper; in the faithful ministry of the word and attendance upon the same; in the assembling of ourselves together in prayer; and in the devotions of the closet, as divinely appointed means by which we shall be enabled to walk worthily and acceptably before God. We recognize the unity of the church of Christ on all the world, and extend to all believers the hand of Christ's fellowship upon the basis of the great fundamental truths held in common by those who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth; and we make confession of these essential truths as they are revealed to us under the inspiration of the Spirit in the Holy Ghost. Coming into divine presence with this preparation of mind and heart, we are ready to affirm with the apostles that 'We believe in God the Father Almighty,' etc.

God's Chastisements.

The afflicted are tempted to distrust the paternal goodness of God because they are called to suffer. The very opposite conclusion, however, is the true one—"For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." This is a peculiar stamp of acceptance and seal of sonship. God is dealing with us as with sons, not as with enemies and rebels, when he permits the rod to fall upon us. Great trials and sore tribulations are therefore to the Christian full of comfort, since they indicate God's fatherly love, and their own filial relation to him whose throne is in the heavens:

A common mistake made by suffering believers is in their estimate of the results of affliction. We frequently hear them declare that they get along better in religion when in prosperity and health, and that pain and trouble only bring darkness and dissatisfaction. They do not propose to deny the scriptural teachings that benefits, most important and glorious, flow from the afflictions of the present life. They only propose to constitute themselves exceptions to the general law. David was right when he said: "It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy statutes. Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept thy word." Paul was not beside himself when he gloried in infirmities and tribulations, and with a towering faith exclaimed: "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Generally true, they are the exceptions. There are those who take this view of the subject: that it is better for them to be exempt from trouble, and who really think that the tendency of sorrow and trial with them is to depress their faith and to mar their spiritual life.

This is a very natural mistake, and one which Paul anticipates: "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." The present seeming is grievous indeed. A fierce struggle is aroused; the soul is overwhelmed and tempted to rebel. Faith, so far from being strengthened, wavers, and the buddings of doubt and distrust appear. It is afterward that the peaceable fruit of righteousness is yielded. Submission may not be reached at once, but the opposite self-will, and even defiance, awake as never before. There is no clear vision. Clouds and darkness are round about, the spirit is broken, hope almost gone, and faith in God is shaken. But afterward the victory comes out of this fearful conflict, and all the graces are refined and perfected by the ordeal through which the soul has been made to pass. The peaceable fruit is after the smoke, dust and din of the battle-field are over. A present joyousness is not the sign of profitable chastening. Here we run into the error that affliction is not good for us, however it may benefit others. The seemingly untoward effects really are the precursors of the good. The present grievous aspect of God's dealings, the cheerless and terrible upheaval, the stirring up of rebellion, doubt and other repulsive sediments of the corrupt heart are to be followed by the calm of a resigned and submissive spirit.

It is a dangerous condition to be in when a man concludes that he is an exception to the law of suffering, and that his religious welfare is best promoted by prosperity. The peril lies in this: that when the trial comes he will fail to see the Father's hand, and will miss the blessing which infinite love and wisdom have designed for him. Because the present seeming is grievous, he resents this mark of his sonship, and the peaceable fruit is never realized. While God has dealt with him as with a son, he has alienated himself from this dear relationship; and, by his willfulness, that which would have proved the peaceable fruit of righteousness is blighted in the bud. The course of safety and comfort is to surrender ourselves to the inspired teaching, and to cultivate subjection unto the Father of Spirits. Grievous as is the present, and as it must be to do us good, there is the joyousness of the afterward. How long sorrow may continue, how long the pain and the travail, we may not tell. But the afterward, even in this life, is blessed; the peaceable fruit is sure to come out of this tearful sowing. In this life, but certainly and completely in the life to come, will the fruit appear. "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."

Most Humiliating.

It has been a matter of respectful protest and deep regret on the part of Protestant Christians that the Louisiana State Fair has heretofore been conducted in a manner most offensive to their views of religion and good morals. The prominence given to horse-racing, and the disregard of the Sabbath, which have marked the management in other years, is to be crowned this season by a grand lottery. It is most humiliating and sad that an institution avowedly started for the improvement of the industrial interests of the country should be made the means of stimulating the passion for gambling, and of corrupting the morals of the people. Amidst the depressing circumstances which surround us, this is one of the most serious indications of general decay and demoralization. This grand lottery of the State Fair is authorized by the Louisiana State Lottery Company, and both are equally respectable, and both may be patronized with equally good consciences by the followers of Christ. To touch an admission ticket to the Fair Grounds, which entitles the holder to a chance in the lottery, is to become a partaker in the sin. It would be an indorsement of one of the most pernicious organizations which a degenerate legislation has ever imposed upon our State, and it would be a direct personal contribution to the destruction of those principles and virtues which are the foundation of all social happiness and material prosperity.

We are aware of the plea set up by the association that this measure is necessary in order to raise the funds needed to perpetuate the institution: An institution, however, that can exist only by joining hands with a lottery company, and by other questionable means, had much better die. If the lottery expedient, in addition to the horse-racing and Sabbath desecration, should prove remunerative temporarily to the stockholders, the general effect upon the country cannot be otherwise than most unfriendly, if not disastrous. As the matter now stands, we do not see how Christian people can have anything to do with the fair and maintain a good conscience. These ungodly and most offensive expedients really exclude all who desire to promote the highest well-being of society, and to keep themselves unspotted from the world. They can no more visit the grounds, nor exhibit their goods and inventions, than they can buy tickets in the State lottery, or engage in raffles and games of chance generally.

As the directors of the association show no respect to the religious and moral convictions of a large class of our people, it is to be hoped that the friends of piety and sound morality will so far respect themselves and their Christian obligations as to let the State Fair severely alone. As it now presents itself to the public, and appeals for patronage, it is an unclean thing, which involves its patrons in the appearance of evil, if it does no. make them partakers in some of the worst immoralities which afflict society. We wish most heartily to favor all legitimate means for the improvement of our agricultural, mechanical and manufacturing interests, but we are not willing to sacrifice the most vital interests of morals and religion for any temporal end whatever. It is, however, a short-sighted policy that ventures upon these doubtful expedients. Lotteries and other measures offensive to the Christian conscience may bring up the stock of the Fair Association for the time; the slow but sure effects upon the country, however, will be to discountenance industry and economy, and to undermine and debase the moral character of the people.—"Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people."

Mexico.

OUR CHURCH-BUILDING.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 27, 1873.

MR. EDITOR: In the last letter I simply stated that I had bought a chapel—"Capilla de San Andres"—and that it was built for earthquakes. I did not enlarge at that time, though the theme was inspiring. The fact is, the deed was not signed, and nothing is more uncertain than the mood in which a Mexican approaches the point of actually closing a bargain, specially if he knows that he is selling it to a Protestant for a church. But on yesterday I paid down the cash payment, signed the papers, and the "Capilla" became henceforth a stronghold of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the heart of Mexico. This is the first piece of property secured by Methodism in the city of the Montezumas. It has quite a Gibraltar expression: buttressed, arched and groined, it might be resorted to as a sanctuary in the day of trouble. The chapel cost twice as much as I paid for both chapel and an adjoining lot. This lot has on four sides of it walls as high as the church; so that, with very little expense for roofing and flooring, it can be made part of the chapel. The whole is fifty-five by sixty-six. Since the confiscation of church property the "Capilla" has been put to profane uses; its beauty has been marred, yet within has retained all its architectural merit. It is now being repaired—the walls freshly painted, a new floor put in, with altar, pulpit, etc., suited to that faith which comes by hearing, and that hearing which implies a preacher. It is admirably located, being within one square of the theater at present used for the meeting of Congress, and one of the College of Mines, a very extensive and finely-built structure; it stands on the corner of the square, and on the sunny side of the street. The shady side is avoided here because, for a considerable part of the year, the temperature is a little cool, when the sun is very grateful; and at another part there is a good deal of rain every day for several months. After securing this house I cannot tell you how much freer I breathe. Other parties, as wise and active as anybody need be, had been at work for a full month before my arrival, and, though always just about to secure property for Protestant uses, have so far been steadily foiled, and I began to fear for myself the same result. Besides, time is pressing; those district meetings and Centenary are not to be put off much longer. The brethren all rejoice in our success, and were soon round to look at the prize.

I had expected to be present at the Baltimore Conference to urge a collection for Mexico, but now see that to be quite impossible. The work of securing property cannot be put off. Presently many Americans will be here, attracted by the facility of reaching this beautiful land. Other churches will be here seeking location, and advantages will probably never be so fair again for giving Southern Methodism the full force of position. Not only is this city the center of everything in Mexico, but it is very populous, and presents a field white to the harvest, which ever way the eye turns. Protestant worship is protected at the capital more efficiently than in other places, though at present the authorities have been prompt to maintain freedom of religious opinion in every instance of attempted interference. At Toluen there is a congregation of one hundred and fifty served by a Mr. Paseo, an English gentleman, who has long been in the country and speaks Spanish perfectly. On last Sabbath night a mob gathered about the church, threw stones, etc., and cried: "Death to the Protestants." This continued at intervals until Wednesday night, when the prayer meeting was held and well attended. The mob was arrested in mid-career by the police, six of them imprisoned, and the whole resulted in a first-rate meeting, great peace, and an inquiry for Bibles which Mr. Paseo was not able to satisfy. Thursday all quiet. One naturally inquires whether this Protestant movement is healthy—whether permanent or reactionary. The best way to answer this is to note the fact: 1. That there are probably forty or fifty congregations of Bible-reading people at work already in various parts of Mexico. 2. That this has been the work of the Mexicans themselves, and not of missionary societies from without, though for the last three years some few of these assemblies have been aided by the Foreign Christian Union. 3. That the growth of religious freedom in this republic is a remarkable instance of steady purpose, maintained amid much political change and fitful violence. The history of the reform movement in Mexico is this: After the war of independence, which lasted from 1810 to 1821, when General Iturbide entered the City of Mexico at the head of a numerous army, and was made Emperor—but retired from this position in 1823—the country was often distracted by civil war. The Roman Catholic or clerical party, then wealthy and powerful, was a chief cause of these wars, which continued with little interruption till the year 1855, when General Comonfort became President of Mexico, though violently opposed by the clerical party, which made itself strong in the city of Puebla. To this city he laid formal siege; during which it is related that the friars joined the soldiery in defense of the place, which, however, surrendered on the twenty-third of March, 1856. After this the reform laws were passed, Comonfort being assisted by Senor Lerdo until December, 1857, at which time a reactionary war commenced, and lasted until 1860, when, Don Benito Juarez having become President, the reform laws became effectively established, the power of the clerical party completely destroyed, and further political strife, so often stirred up previously by it, prevented by the confiscation of all the church property. The nunneries and monasteries were opened; poor nuns who had for years looked upon no face but that of individuals of their own order were then released from a living death. The friars were started outdoors without cloak or hood; vaults and dark passages leading from churches to convents were explored by the public for the first time; and the bones of little children, and bodies of persons who had evidently died a violent death, were discovered in these sacred inclosures, some having been walled up while alive, and fed for a time through apertures afterward closed.

The extent of these convents and religious houses was far beyond anything usually conceived of. They covered a large part of the city, and they supply a great deal of the material at present needed for building.

It is therefore very certain that the work of reformation is both solid and permanent. Not a nun remains in this city, nor any friar, monk or priestly-dressed person. The clergy dress as other gentlemen. They affect a cloak, but so do many others; so that the eye is relieved of those long-gown fellows who unsex themselves, and who appear quite too frequently in the cities of the United States. A few sisters of charity remain, but one scarcely ever sees them. Church-bells are not permitted to din the life out of the public, but are allowed a ringing only at healthy intervals, say on every Sabbath morning. These people, as a people, are done with this huge imposture called Roman Catholicism. It has purged itself out of their good will. Infallibility, the immaculate conception and the general triumph of Jesuitism over Old Catholicism have come too late to save it. I wonder that Dollinger and Hyacinthe do not have their representatives in Mexico. In my opinion they have but to appear to sweep away this refuge of lies.

In addition to the places already named, and preachers engaged in the reform movement, there are congregations at Ayapango, at Tecuico, Ozumba, Amantla, Chimalhuacan Chalco, Tepetlixpa, Ilalamac, Texcalpa and Tepeacula. Each of these congregations is served by a native Mexican. They vary in numbers from fifty to three hundred. I have addressed a circular letter in Spanish to each of them, and shall have their answers forwarded promptly by the Rev. Mr. William Parkes, the agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society resident in Mexico.

As this letter is quite long enough, I will write you again on to-morrow; and, as my mission for the present here is evidently drawing to a close, I may bring it with me. The English steamer leaves Vera Cruz on the fourth of March, and my purpose is to return in her via Havana.

Centenary College.

MR. EDITOR: Our March exhibition was held last week. The selected speeches and dialogues on Wednesday night, and the original speeches by the representatives of the literary societies on Thursday night, were, in the opinion of many and competent judges, highly creditable.

We feel truly thankful to the Promoter of all worthy objects for the encouragement he has given us this session.

One hundred and sixteen students have matriculated up to this time; and still they come in—three this week, and three last. They are generally well-behaved, and disposed to make the best of their time.

There is a flourishing council of the Friends of Temperance in the town, of which the students form a considerable part. For the present term one of them was its president, another its associate, and another its chaplain.

Quite a number of the students are Christians, and the religious interest seems to be increasing. On Sabbath a week ago three came forward at the regular morning service and were received into the church.

You will rejoice with us that the scaffolding around the center building is down at last. Now the massive edifice greets the vision unobstructed. The general appearance is vastly improved by the change in its construction, the greater exposure of columns rendering it decidedly more imposing.

We will have the roof of the center building and that on the east wing made as good as ever in a short time. Then we only need to get a new galvanized iron roof on the west wing, and the entire property, saved from leakage and waste, will be ready for all practical purposes, while the work of beautifying and perfecting can go leisurely and, we trust, perpetually forward.

Hitherto the Lord hath helped us; and though much, very much remains to be done, we believe he will help us to the end. Oh that his Spirit may move the hearts of his faithful stewards to respond speedily and liberally to our necessities.

C. G. ANDREWS.

Our Missionary Policy.

The Richmond Christian Advocate, noticing Bishop Keener's letters, indicates a line of policy for our American churches. Dr. Bennett says:

We publish on our first page a letter from Bishop Keener. Our readers, we know, will be pleased to read this letter from the active Bishop. He is looking with keen eyes upon Mexico, and will be sure to find the best points for missions.

In this connection we give expression to a conviction of our own mind, and that is, that the American churches should take in hand the mission work for the American continent, while the churches of Europe might devote their money and their energies to the work in the vast fields of the East. Our own feeble but exceedingly expensive mission in China might be turned over to some church that has had more success than we in that country, and our recalled missionaries could do much among the Chinese of California, or, if they should prefer to remain in China, they might labor in connection with the missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church, from whose ample treasury they might receive a ready and certain support.

We have made a fair experiment in China. We have had some of our best men there for many years, and have labored earnestly to gain a foothold. Shall we hold on to this field, or shall we retire, and try our strength on some other this side the ocean, which promises better results? If there were no men in China to occupy the ground we might surrender, we should say: Keep the men in the field; but when there can be no loss to the people from whom we retire, and a prospect of greater good opens in another direction, there should be no hesitation in the matter. We are not of those who would keep up a distant, weak and expensive mission merely for the sake of saying we have a mission in such or such a field. We hope never to have any such church pride.

We expect opposition to this view, and we hope some one who knows more of the inside of the China mission than we do will give light on the subject; but at the same time we know that we do not stand alone in our view of this matter.

The true policy of the church should be to establish missions where the expenditure of men and means will bring the best returns in the direct religious influence exerted upon the masses and in the number of souls saved.

On this continent we can use all the men and money we can command for the next fifty years.

COMMODORE VANDERBILT'S $500,000 gift to the Central University is a very handsome thing in its way, and we suppose insures the success of that most important enterprise. That half million is money well invested, and will continue to bless the country and the church for centuries to come.

THE New Orleans District Conference meets at Baton Rouge on Friday, April 4, at nine o'clock A. M. All the preachers, local and traveling, and the members of the Quarterly Conferences are members of the District Conference. All are pressingly invited to attend.

A MIDDAY PRAYER MEETING has been held in the Carondelet Street church for nearly three weeks. During the present week there have been services every night. These meetings have been well attended, and we trust much good has been accomplished.

MRS. MARY A. BREWER, wife of George Brewer, died at the family residence, in this city, on the eighteenth of March. Sister Brewer was for many years a consistent member of the Methodist Church and a most happy Christian. Her end was peace.

REVS. J. H. ST. CLAIR and J. R. Hicks, of the St. Louis Conference, have been sojourning in our city for the past two weeks. We wish them a pleasant and health-improving stay among us.

THERE is neither presumption nor enthusiasm in looking for the literal fulfillment of God's promises.

Books and Periodicals.

BITS OF TALK ABOUT HOME MATTERS. By H. H. Boston: Roberts Bros., 1873.

Kuln & Co. send us this beautiful and thoughtful little volume. The thought is not all conclusive or useful, as we judge, but there is much thought, and much of it is good. We note especially the chapter on Death-Bed Repentances as exceptionable—the statement of a serious error. The great want of the times is the preaching of hell—the awakening of the fears of the ungodly.

OUR Sunday school publications for April are as bright and beautiful as the season which brings them to us. We are impressed with the excellent taste and judicious learning which Dr. Haygood exhibits in the preparation of the monthly supply of entertaining and instructive literature. We are also deeply impressed with the painstaking and hard work which these publications manifest. The Magazine is a valuable auxiliary to the teacher, and the Illustrative Readings, and the Notes for Teachers and Bible Students, are most capital productions. We see a great deal of the Sunday school literature of the day—monthly and weekly—and we soberly think that Dr. Haygood gets out the best.

FROM A. S. Barnes & Co. we have received a small pamphlet entitled "An Examination of the Demonstrations of Davies' Legendre." Also from the same publishers "The Critical Speller." It is a blank-book prepared for written exercises. "The Revival Hymn and Tune-Book" is a sixty-page paper cover, from Horace Waters & Son, New York. "Sunshine for Sunday Schools" is a new collection of original and selected music. Published by John Church & Co., Cincinnati.

THE AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST for March is a very fine number, and filled with useful engravings and reading matter for farmers and housekeepers. We have also received the Rural Alabamian, published at Mobile, Alabama; the Gardeners' Monthly, Philadelphia; the Poultry World, Hartford, Connecticut; the Household, Brattleboro, Vermont, and the Musical Independent, Chicago, Illinois, for March.

THE GALAXY for April is able and varied, as usual. The number has: Joseph Arch and the New Emancipation; France and Louis Napoleon, and the concluding article on Life Assurance. The Old Dominion for February has come to hand. Good Words for March is a fine number of this always excellent magazine.

Our Church at Brandon, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: The Methodist church edifice at this place is about completed, at a cost of over $6,000. The amount yet unpaid is about $2,500. We have sent twice North to solicit aid, and received just a little over the expenses of traveling. We have learned that Southern Methodists have but few friends at the North.

We wish to have it dedicated in April, provided we can pay for it. We intend never to dedicate it until the last cent is paid. Our people have contributed liberally, but we need help from abroad. Can't the good friends of the church help us? We have received already a few liberal donations from your city, honorable mention of which was made in our local paper. We need help. Can't the friends give us aid?

A SUBSCRIBER.

DEATH OF REV. M. M. DANCE.—This venerable member of our Conference, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, died at his residence, in Prince Edward county, on the eighth instant, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. He entered the Virginia Conference in 1812, and for many years filled some of the most important charges. After ill health forced him to leave the regular work he resided in the county of Prince Edward, working for the church to the utmost of his strength, and beloved by all who knew him. A better man never lived than Matthew M. Dance. His aged companion, in feeble health, yet lingers on this side of the river. May God's blessing come down richly on her and her family in this hour of sorrow.

DEATH OF REV. GREENBERRY GARRETT.—This venerable minister died in Summerfield, Alabama, on Thursday, March 20. At the time of his death he was on the superannuate list of the Alabama Conference, and had been a preacher since 1821. His last hours were eminently happy and triumphant. An obituary, prepared by Rev. A. D. McVoy, and received just before going to press, will appear in the ADVOCATE next week. Bro. Garrett was a pillar in the church, and a chief man among his brethren. His character was a rare combination of strength, simplicity and nobleness.

Notice.

It is proposed to hold continuous religious services for six hours, from ten o'clock A. M. to four o'clock P. M., in the Carondelet Street church, next Friday, the twenty-eighth instant, under the conduct of ministers of various denominations, the leader being changed every hour. It will be in order to come in and go out at any time.

MR. D. L. MOODY, a revivalist from Chicago, has been preaching at the Baptist church, on Coliseum place, during the past two weeks. The services have been well attended, and a number, we believe, have professed conversion.

REV. A. P. BLACK, of the Pacific Conference, died in great peace on the third of March.

ners of the Opelousas District.

Conference of the Ope- Louisiana Conference, Franklin, commencing the eighth of May, at M., continuing until May.

rs in the district are quested to report to me mes of all delegates ren who are likely to brethren proposing to bers of the conference get their quota. When ...ities are provided for the whole number of official members whose names are sent, it often occurs that many families are without guests, while others have their full quota. It will save much trouble to the pastor, and prevent disappointment to those who so kindly open their doors for entertaining the conference, by furnishing me at once with the names of those only who intend coming. We desire a full attendance.

AMICUS W. WILLIAMS, P. C.

FRANKLIN, March 18, 1873.

THE Right Rev. Charles Pettit Mellvaine, D. C. L., Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Ohio, died last week, in Florence, Italy. Bishop Mellvaine was born in 1798, in Burlington, New Jersey, graduated at Princeton in 1816, was ordained deacon in 1820 and priest in 1822, and became Bishop of Ohio in 1832. He was an earnest champion of evangelical or low church views, and labored with especial zeal against the Oxford Tractarian movement, in opposition to which he wrote a book. His learning was reckoned greater than that of the majority of his associates among the American bishops. He received the degree of D. C. L. from Oxford in 1853, and that of L. L. D. from Cambridge in 1858.

THE Yale College library contains sixty thousand volumes, exclusive of several thousands of pamphlets. The libraries of the various schools and societies attached to the institution include some twenty-six thousand more, making in all eighty-six thousand volumes.

MESSRS. NAVRA & OFFNER, 174 Canal street, sell, for cash, China and crockeryware and household comforts at greatly reduced prices.

DO YOU GET YOUR PAPER?—Subscribers will oblige us by giving prompt notice when their papers do not come regularly. Everything in our power will be done to correct irregularities. We have had very few complaints, and those mostly from offices which are reached by routes where we have reason to believe irregularity prevails in the transmission of the mails. This we may not be able to remedy, but will if we can.

IMPROVED BARBARIN GASLIGHT APPARATUS.—The manufacturers of this apparatus claim that it is safe and economical, and the brilliancy of the light unsurpassed. The leading insurance companies have declared that it is not dangerous, and have not increased the rates of insurance where it is used. Numerous testimonials attest its successful use. The offices of the company are at No. 2 Triangle building and 255 Peters street, where further information can be obtained. Post-office address, lock-box 748.

DRESSMAKING.—It gives us pleasure to call attention to the advertisement of Mrs. Tournaben, in another column, whom we have known for several years, and can safely assure our friends who patronize her that they may expect good and faithful work. Mrs. Tournaben displays fine taste in trimming, and we know of no dressmaker who can fit more gracefully. She is worthy of patronage, and we have no hesitation in recommending her.

DR. JAMES PORTER advertises in our columns to cure chronic diseases by magnetic treatment. He gives testimonials of residents of the city, with their names and places of residence. His public clinics are at the Temperance Hall, over the Bible House, 163 Camp street. His private parlors are at No. 242 Camp street.

PROCTER & GAMBLE'S OLIVE SOAP is a superior article. Its introduction in a household is a sure guarantee that none other will be used. It is sold at the price of ordinary soap, and can be procured in any quantities from the New Orleans jobbers and wholesale agents. See advertisement elsewhere.

THE OCEAN SPRINGS HOTEL, with the standing furniture complete, is offered for sale or rent. The hotel is situated at Ocean Springs, Mississippi, a resort noted for its healthfulness. For terms, etc., apply to Messrs. Schmidt & Ziegler, No. 49 New Levee street.

THE NATIONAL LINE, sailing from London, Liverpool, Queenstown, etc., affords great advantages to parties visiting Europe, or those sending for friends in the old country. P. F. Gogarty, No. 151 Camp street, is the agent in this city.

MESSRS. BRASELMAN & ADAMS, Nos. 586 and 588 Magazine street, are offering great bargains in domestics, linens, white goods and dress goods. Purchasers will do well to call at this popular establishment.

L. P. DESMOISSEAUX, No. 535 St. Charles street (Bailejo's market), keeps on hand Western beef, veal, mutton, pork, poultry, fish, eggs, and fresh vegetables and fruits.

RESIDENTS of the Fourth District will find at the establishment of A. W. Skardon & Co., corner of Jackson and Rousseau streets, a large and fresh stock of family groceries.

SEPTOLINE OIL COMPANY, No. 62 Camp and 15 Dauphine street, offer lamps, trimmings, chandeliers, etc., in great variety and at reasonable prices.

WE INVITE the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Messrs. Hillman & Manard, grocers and commission merchants, No. 157 Poydras street.

NEW ORLEANS MANUFACTORY of liquid blueing, for families and laundries. L. Wilkins, proprietor, No. 114 Carondelet street.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

UNDISPUTED FACTS.—It has been truly and significantly said that domestic happiness is more dependent on good digestion than virtuous creeds or moral codes. If the dogma holds, the oracle can be consulted by a prompt application to Price, the Dolphic author of the Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Wherever, within the length and breadth of the land, Price's Bitters have penetrated, every household has been illumined by the sunshine of an unclouded joy, and every family reveled in the sweets of health and contentment. The sparkling eye, the ruddy cheek, the cheerful smile and happy glance, no less than the elastic step and the unfaltering tread, what are they but the eloquent telltales of some vitalizing elixir? No secret botany holds the charm, no scientific alchemy creates the spell. The days of miracles are gone; the magic, mysteriously-working wonders have passed away, and the age—a plain, practical one—gives us a simple tonic that, by a happy amalgamation, restores to energy and strength the enervated system. Take Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters, and you bid an eternal farewell to such unwelcome guests as dyspepsia, indigestion, nervousness, neuralgia, flatulency and debility.

THE entire population of the globe is in greater or less degree infected with the taint of Scrofula. It appears in various forms, such as White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the skin, Sore Eyes, etc. For these as well as all other constitutional diseases, DR. TUTT'S SARSAPARILLA AND QUEEN'S DELIGHT has proven itself in a thousand instances a positive antidote.

Fevers, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which prevail in the valleys of rivers and other miasmatic districts through the summer and autumn, are invariably accompanied by derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. There is always a weakness and irritable state of the stomach, and torpor of the bowels. DR. TUTT'S LIVER PILLS are peculiarly adapted to such cases. mh27 1t

GEMS OF BEAUTIFUL WRITING.

A new Compendium of Penmanship, comprised in a complete series of copy-slips, has just been published. The author,

PROF. GASKELL,

President of the Bryant & Stratton College, Manchester, New Hampshire, has long been known as the "Prince of American Penmen," and since the death of Father Spencer there has been no one to dispute this title.

This Compendium is having a large sale in all the principal cities and throughout the country, as nothing so complete, beautiful and useful for self-instruction has ever before been offered. It supplies a great want. Book-keepers, clerks, teachers, farmers' sons, all want to learn to write rapidly and elegantly, and nowhere else can they get so good instruction as in this way. It is sent by mail, to any address, for $1. Write for it. Address

God's Chastisements.

The afflicted are tempted to distrust the paternal goodness of God because they are called to suffer. The very opposite conclusion, however, is the true one—"For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." This is a peculiar stamp of acceptance and seal of sonship. God is dealing with us as with sons, not as with enemies and rebels, when he permits the rod to fall upon us. Great trials and sore tribulations are therefore to the Christian full of comfort, since they indicate God's fatherly love, and their own filial relation to him whose throne is in the heavens.

A common mistake made by suffering believers is in their estimate of the results of affliction. We frequently hear them declare that they get along better in religion when in prosperity and health, and that pain and trouble only bring darkness and dissatisfaction. They do not propose to deny the scriptural teachings that benefits, most important and glorious, flow from the afflictions of the present life. They only propose to constitute themselves exceptions to the general law. David was right when he said: "It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy statutes. Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept thy word." Paul was not beside himself when he gloried in infirmities and tribulations, and with a towering faith exclaimed: "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Generally true, they are the exceptions. There are those who take this view of the subject: that it is better for them to be exempt from trouble, and who really think that the tendency of sorrow and trial with them is to depress their faith and to mar their spiritual life.

This is a very natural mistake, and one which Paul anticipates: "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." The present seeming is grievous indeed. A fierce struggle is aroused; the soul is overwhelmed and tempted to rebel. Faith, so far from being strengthened, wavers, and the huddlings of doubt and distrust appear. It is afterward that the peaceable fruit of righteousness is yielded. Submission may not be reached at once, but the opposite self-will, and even defiance, awake as never before. There is no clear vision. Clouds and darkness are round about, the spirit is broken, hope almost gone, and faith in God is shaken. But afterward the victory comes out of this fearful conflict, and all the graces are refined and perfected by the ordeal through which the soul has been made to pass. The peaceable fruit is after the smoke, dust and din of the battle-field are over. A present joyousness is not the sign of profitable chastening. Here we run into the error that affliction is not good for us, however it may benefit others. The seemingly untoward effects really are the precursors of the good. The present grievous aspect of God's dealings, the cheerless and terrible upheaval, the stirring up of rebellion, doubt and other repulsive sediments of the corrupt heart are to be followed by the calm of a resigned and submissive spirit.

It is a dangerous condition to be in when a man concludes that he is an exception to the law of suffering, and that his religious welfare is best promoted by prosperity. The peril lies in this: that when the trial comes he will fail to see the Father's hand, and will miss the blessing which infinite love and wisdom have designed for him. Because the present seeming is grievous, he resents this mark of his sonship, and the peaceable fruit is never realized. While God has dealt with him as with a son, he has alienated himself from this dear relationship; and, by his willfulness, that which would have proved the peaceable fruit of righteousness is blighted in the bud. The course of safety and comfort is to surrender ourselves to the inspired teaching, and to cultivate subjection unto the Father of Spirits. Grievous as is the present, and as it must be to do us good, there is the joyousness of the afterward. How long sorrow may continue, how long the pain and the travail, we may not tell. But the afterward, even in this life, is blessed; the peaceable fruit is sure to come out of this tearful sowing. In this life, but certainly and completely in the life to come, will the fruit appear. "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."

Most Humiliating.

It has been a matter of respectful protest and deep regret on the part of Protestant Christians that the Louisiana State Fair has heretofore been conducted in a manner most offensive to their views of religion and good morals. The prominence given to horse-racing, and the disregard of the Sabbath, which have marked the management in other years, is to be crowned this season by a grand lottery. It is most humiliating and sad that an institution avowedly started for the improvement of the industrial interests of the country should be made the means of stimulating the passion for gambling, and of corrupting the morals of the people. Amidst the depressing circumstances which surround us, this is one of the most serious indications of general decay and demoralization. This grand lottery of the State Fair is authorized by the Louisiana State Lottery Company, and both are equally respectable, and both may be patronized with equally good consciences by the followers of Christ. To touch an admission ticket to the Fair Grounds, which entitles the holder to a chance in the lottery, is to become a partaker in the sin. It would be an indorsement of one of the most pernicious organizations which a degenerate legislation has ever imposed upon our State, and it would be a direct personal contribution to the destruction of those principles and virtues which are the foundation of all social happiness and material prosperity.

We are aware of the plea set up by the association that this measure is necessary in order to raise the funds needed to perpetuate the institution: An institution, however, that can exist only by joining hands with a lottery company, and by other questionable means, had much better die. If the lottery expedient, in addition to the horse-racing and Sabbath desecration, should prove remunerative temporarily to the stockholders, the general effect upon the country cannot be otherwise than most unfriendly, if not disastrous. As the matter now stands, we do not see how Christian people can have anything to do with the fair and maintain a good conscience. These ungodly and most offensive expedients really exclude all who desire to promote the highest well-being of society, and to keep themselves unspotted from the world. They can no more visit the grounds, nor exhibit their goods and inventions, than they can buy tickets in the State lottery, or engage in raffles and games of chance generally.

As the directors of the association show no respect to the religious and moral convictions of a large class of our people, it is to be hoped that the friends of piety and sound morality will so far respect themselves and their Christian obligations as to let the State Fair severely alone. As it now presents itself to the public, and appeals for patronage, it is an unclean thing, which involves its patrons in the appearance of evil, if it does not make them partakers in some of the worst immoralities which afflict society. We wish most heartily to favor all legitimate means for the improvement of our agricultural, mechanical and manufacturing interests, but we are not willing to sacrifice the most vital interests of morals and religion for any temporal end whatever. It is, however, a short-sighted policy that ventures upon these doubtful expedients. Lotteries and other measures offensive to the Christian conscience may bring up the stock of the Fair Association for the time; the slow but sure effects upon the country, however, will be to discountenance industry and economy, and to undermine and debase the moral character of the people.—"Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people."

Mexico.

OUR CHURCH-BUILDING.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

City of Mexico, Feb. 27, 1873.

Mr. Editor: In the last letter I simply stated that I had bought a chapel—"Capilla de San Andres"—and that it was built for earthquakes. I did not enlarge at that time, though the theme was inspiring. The fact is, the deed was not signed, and nothing is more uncertain than the mood in which a Mexican approaches the point of actually closing a bargain, specially if he knows that he is selling it to a Protestant for a church. But on yesterday I paid down the cash payment, signed the papers, and the "Capilla" became henceforth a stronghold of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the heart of Mexico. This is the first piece of property secured by Methodism in the city of the Montezumas. It has quite a Gibraltar expression: buttressed, arched and groined, it might be resorted to as a sanctuary in the day of trouble. The chapel cost twice as much as I paid for both chapel and an adjoining lot. This lot has on four sides of it walls as high as the church; so that, with very little expense for roofing and flooring, it can be made part of the chapel. The whole is fifty-five by sixty-six. Since the confiscation of church property the "Capilla" has been put to profane uses; its beauty has been marred, yet within has retained all its architectural merit. It is now being repaired—the walls freshly painted, a new floor put in, with altar, pulpit, etc., suited to that faith which comes by hearing, and that hearing which implies a preacher. It is admirably located, being within one square of the theater at present used for the meeting of Congress, and one of the College of Mines, a very extensive and finely-built structure; it stands on the corner of the square, and on the sunny side of the street. The shady side is avoided here because, for a considerable part of the year, the temperature is a little cool, when the sun is very grateful; and at another part there is a good deal of rain every day for several months. After securing this house I cannot tell you how much freer I breathe. Other parties, as wise and active as anybody need be, had been at work for a full month before my arrival, and, though always just about to secure property for Protestant uses, have so far been steadily foiled, and I began to fear for myself the same result. Besides, time is pressing; those district meetings and Centenary are not to be put off much longer. The brethren all rejoice in our success, and were soon round to look at the prize.

I had expected to be present at the Baltimore Conference to urge a collection for Mexico, but now see that to be quite impossible. The work of securing property cannot be put off. Presently many Americans will be here, attracted by the facility of reaching this beautiful land. Other churches will be here seeking location, and advantages will probably never be so fair again for giving Southern Methodism the full force of position. Not only is this city the center of everything in Mexico, but it is very populous, and presents a field white to the harvest, which ever way the eye turns. Protestant worship is protected at the capital more efficiently than in other places, though at present the authorities have been prompt to maintain freedom of religious opinion in every instance of attempted interference. At Toluca there is a congregation of one hundred and fifty served by a Mr. Pasco, an English gentleman, who has long been in the country and speaks Spanish perfectly. On last Sabbath night a mob gathered about the church, threw stones, etc., and cried: "Death to the Protestants." This continued at intervals until Wednesday night, when the prayer meeting was held and well attended. The mob was arrested in mid-career by the police, six of them imprisoned, and the whole resulted in a first-rate meeting, great peace, and an inquiry for Bibles which Mr. Pasco was not able to satisfy. Thursday all quiet. One naturally inquires whether this Protestant movement is healthy—whether permanent or reactionary. The best way to answer this is to note the fact: 1. That there are probably forty or fifty congregations of Bible-reading people at work already in various parts of Mexico. 2. That this has been the work of the Mexicans themselves, and not of missionary societies from without, though for the last three years some few of these assemblies have been aided by the Foreign Christian Union. 3. That the growth of religious freedom in this republic is a remarkable instance of steady purpose, maintained amid much political change and fitful violence. The history of the reform movement in Mexico is this: After the war of independence, which lasted from 1810 to 1821, when General Iturbide entered the City of Mexico at the head of a numerous army, and was made Emperor—but retired from this position in 1823—the country was often distracted by civil war. The Roman Catholic or clerical party, then wealthy and powerful, was a chief cause of these wars, which continued with little interruption till the year 1855, when General Comonfort became President of Mexico, though violently opposed by the clerical party, which made itself strong in the city of Puebla. To this city he laid formal siege; during which it is related that the friars joined the soldiery in defense of the place, which, however, surrendered on the twenty-third of March, 1856. After this the reform laws were passed, Comonfort being assisted by Senor Lerdo until December, 1857, at which time a reactionary war commenced, and lasted until 1860, when, Don Benito Juarez having become President, the reform laws became effectively established, the power of the clerical party completely destroyed, and further political strife, so often stirred up previously by it, prevented by the confiscation of all the church property. The nunneries and monasteries were opened; poor nuns who had for years looked upon no face but that of individuals of their own order were then released from a living death. The friars were started outdoors without cloak or hood; vaults and dark passages leading from churches to convents were explored by the public for the first time; and the bones of little children, and bodies of persons who had evidently died a violent death, were discovered in these sacred inclosures, some having been walled up while alive, and fed for a time through apertures afterward closed.

The extent of these convents and religious houses was far beyond anything usually conceived of. They covered a large part of the city, and they supply a great deal of the material at present needed for building.

It is therefore very certain that the work of reformation is both solid and permanent. Not a nun remains in this city, nor any friar, monk or priestly-dressed person. The clergy dress as other gentlemen. They affect a cloak, but so do many others; so that the eye is relieved of those long-gown fellows who unsex themselves, and who appear quite too frequently in the cities of the United States. A few sisters of charity remain, but one scarcely ever sees them. Church-bells are not permitted to din the life out of the public, but are allowed a ringing only at healthy intervals, say on every Sabbath morning. These people, as a people, are done with this huge imposture called Roman Catholicism. It has purged itself out of their good will. Infallibility, the Immaculate conception and the general triumph of Jesuitism over Old Catholicism have come too late to save it. I wonder that Dollinger and Hyacinthe do not have their representatives in Mexico. In my opinion they have but to appear to sweep away this refuge of lies.

In addition to the places already named, and preachers engaged in the reform movement, there are congregations at Aynpango, at Tecalco, Ozumba, Amantla, Chimalhuacan Chalco, Tepetlixpa, Ilalamac, Texcalpa and Tepeeaculn. Each of these congregations is served by a native Mexican. They vary in numbers from fifty to three hundred. I have addressed a circular letter in Spanish to each of them, and shall have their answers forwarded promptly by the Rev. Mr. William Parkes, the agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society resident in Mexico.

As this letter is quite long enough I will write you again on to-morrow; and, as my mission for the present here is evidently drawing to a close, I may bring it with me. The English steamer leaves Vera Cruz on the fourth of March, and my purpose is to return in her via Havana.

Centenary College.

Mr. Editor: Our March exhibition was held last week. The selected speeches and dialogues on Wednesday night, and the original speeches by the representatives of the literary societies on Thursday night, were in the opinion of many and competent judges, highly creditable.

We feel truly thankful to the Promoter of all worthy objects for the encouragement he has given us this session.

One hundred and sixteen students have matriculated up to this time; and still they come in—three this week, and three last. They are generally well-behaved, and disposed to make the best of their time.

There is a flourishing council of the Friends of Temperance in the town, of which the students form a considerable part. For the present term one of them was its president, another its associate, and another its chaplain.

Quite a number of the students are Christians, and the religious interest seems to be increasing. On Sabbath a week ago three came forward at the regular morning service and were received into the church.

You will rejoice with us that the scaffolding around the center building is down at last. Now the massive edifice greets the vision unobstructed. The general appearance is vastly improved by the change in its construction, the greater exposure of columns rendering it decidedly more imposing.

We will have the roof of the center building and that on the east wing made as good as ever in a short time. Then we only need to get a new galvanized iron roof on the west wing, and the entire property, saved from leakage and waste, will be ready for all practical purposes, while the work of beautifying and perfecting can go leisurely and, we trust, perpetually forward.

Hitherto the Lord hath helped us; and though much, very much remains to be done, we believe he will help us to the end. Oh that his Spirit may move the hearts of his faithful stewards to respond speedily and liberally to our necessities.

C. G. Andrews.

Our Missionary Policy.

The Richmond Christian Advocate, noticing Bishop Keener's letters, indicates a line of policy for our American churches. Dr. Bennett says:

We publish on our first page a letter from Bishop Keener. Our readers, we know, will be pleased to read this letter from the native Bishop. He is looking with keen eyes upon Mexico, and will be sure to find the best points for missions.

In this connection we give expression to a conviction of our own mind, and that is, that the American churches should take in hand the mission work for the American continent, while the churches of Europe might devote their money and their energies to the work in the vast fields of the East. Our own feeble but exceedingly expensive mission in China might be turned over to some church that has had more success than we in that country, and our recalled missionaries could do much among the Chinese of California, or, if they should prefer to remain in China, they might labor in connection with the missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church, from whose ample treasury they might receive a ready and certain support.

We have made a fair experiment in China. We have had some of our best men there for many years, and have labored earnestly to gain a foothold. Shall we hold on to this field, or shall we retire, and try our strength on some other this side the ocean which promises better results? If there were no men in China to occupy the ground we might surrender, we should say: Keep the men in the field; but when there can be no loss to the people from whom we retire, and a prospect of greater good opens in another direction, there should be no hesitation in the matter. We are not of those who would keep up a distant, weak and expensive mission merely for the sake of saying we have a mission in such or such a field. We hope never to have any such church pride.

We expect opposition to this view, and we hope some one who knows more of the inside of the China mission than we do will give light on the subject; but at the same time we know that we do not stand alone in our view of this matter.

The true policy of the church should be to establish missions where the expenditure of men and means will bring the best returns in the direct religious influence exerted upon the masses and in the number of souls saved.

On this continent we can use all the men and money we can command for the next fifty years.

Commodore Vanderbilt's $500,000 gift to the Central University is a very handsome thing in its way, and we suppose insures the success of that most important enterprise. That half million is money well invested, and will continue to bless the country and the church for centuries to come.

The New Orleans District Conference meets at Baton Rouge on Friday, April 4, at nine o'clock A. M. All the preachers, local and traveling, and the members of the Quarterly Conferences are members of the District Conference. All are pressingly invited to attend.

A Midday Prayer Meeting has been held in the Carondelet Street church for nearly three weeks. During the present week there have been services every night. These meetings have been well attended, and we trust much good has been accomplished.

Mrs. Mary A. Brewer, wife of George Brewer, died at the family residence, in this city, on the eighteenth of March. Sister Brewer was for many years a consistent member of the Methodist Church and a most happy Christian. Her end was peace.

Revs. J. H. St. Clair and J. R. Hicks, of the St. Louis Conference, have been sojourning in our city for the past two weeks. We wish them a pleasant and health-improving stay among us.

There is neither presumption nor enthusiasm in looking for the literal fulfillment of God's promises.

Books and Periodicals.

Bits of Talk About Home Matters. By H. H. Boston: Roberts Bros., 1873.

Kain & Co. send us this beautiful and thoughtful little volume. The thought is not all conclusive or useful, as we judge, but there is much thought, and much of it is good. We note especially the chapter on Death-Bed Repentance as exceptionable—the statement of a serious error. The great want of the times is the preaching of hell—the awakening of the fears of the ungodly.

Our Sunday school publications for April are as bright and beautiful as the season which brings them to us. We are impressed with the excellent taste and judicious learning which Dr. Haygood exhibits in the preparation of the monthly supply of entertaining and instructive literature. We are also deeply impressed with the painstaking and hard work which these publications manifest. The Magazine is a valuable auxiliary to the teacher, and the Illustrative Readings, and the Notes for Teachers and Bible Students, are most capital productions. We see a great deal of the Sunday school literature of the day—monthly and weekly—and we soberly think that Dr. Haygood gets out the best.

From A. S. Barnes & Co. we have received a small pamphlet entitled "An Examination of the Demonstrations of Davies' Legendre." Also from the same publishers "The Critical Speller." It is a blank-book prepared for written exercises. "The Revival Hymn and Tune-Book" is a sixty-page paper cover, from Horace Waters & Son, New York. "Sunshine for Sunday Schools" is a new collection of original and selected music. Published by John Church & Co., Cincinnati.

The American Agriculturist for March is a very fine number, and filled with useful engravings and reading matter for farmers and housekeepers. We have also received the Rural Alabamian, published at Mobile, Alabama; the Gardeners' Monthly, Philadelphia; the Poultry World, Hartford, Connecticut; the Household, Brattleboro, Vermont, and the Musical Independent, Chicago, Illinois, for March.

The Galaxy for April is able and varied, as usual. The number has: Joseph Arch and the New Emancipation; France and Louis Napoleon, and the concluding article on Life Assurance. The Old Dominion for February has come to hand. Good Words for March is a fine number of this always excellent magazine.

Our Church at Brandon, Miss.

Mr. Editor: The Methodist church edifice at this place is about completed, at a cost of over $6,000. The amount yet unpaid is about $2,500. We have sent twice North to solicit aid, and received just a little over the expenses of traveling. We have learned that Southern Methodism have but few friends at the North.

We wish to have it dedicated in April, provided we can pay for it. We intend never to dedicate it until the last cent is paid. Our people have contributed liberally, but we need help from abroad. Can't the good friends of the church help us? We have received already a few liberal donations from your city, honorable mention of which was made in our local paper. We need help. Can't the friends give us aid?

A Subscriber.

Death of Rev. M. M. Dance.—This venerable member of our Conference, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, died at his residence, in Prince Edward county, on the eighth instant, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. He entered the Virginia Conference in 1812, and for many years filled some of the most important charges. After ill health forced him to leave the regular work he resided in the county of Prince Edward, working for the church to the utmost of his strength, and beloved by all who knew him. A better man never lived than Matthew M. Dance. His aged companion, in feeble health, yet lingers on this side of the river. May God's blessing come down richly on her and her family in this hour of sorrow.

Death of Rev. Greenberry Garrett.—This venerable minister died in Summerfield, Alabama, on Thursday, March 20. At the time of his death he was on the superannuated list of the Alabama Conference, and had been a preacher since 1821. His last hours were eminently happy and triumphant. An obituary, prepared by Rev. A. D. McVoy, and received just before going to press, will appear in the Advocate next week. Bro. Garrett was a pillar in the church, and a chief man among his brethren. His character was a rare combination of strength, simplicity and nobleness.

Notice.

It is proposed to hold continuous religious services for six hours, from ten o'clock A. M. to four o'clock P. M., in the Carondelet Street church, next Friday, the twenty-eighth instant, under the conduct of ministers of various denominations, the leader being changed every hour. It will be in order to come in and go out at any time.

Mr. D. L. Moody, a revivalist from Chicago, has been preaching in the Baptist church, on Coliseum place, during the past two weeks. The services have been well attended, and a number, we believe, have professed conversion.

Rev. A. P. Black, of the Pacific Conference, died in great peace on the third of March.

To the Preachers of the Opelousas District.

The District Conference of the Opelousas district, Louisiana Conference, will be held at Franklin, commencing on Thursday, the eighth of May, at ten o'clock A. M., continuing until the eleventh of May.

The preachers in the district are respectfully requested to report to me by letter the names of all delegates or official brethren who are likely to attend, so that brethren proposing to entertain members of the conference may certainly get their quota. When homes are provided for the whole number of official members whose names are sent, it often occurs that many families are without guests, while others have their full quota. It will save much trouble to the pastor, and prevent disappointment to those who so kindly open their doors for entertaining the conference, by furnishing me at once with the names of those only who intend coming. We desire a full attendance.

AMICUS W. WILLIAMS, P. C.

FRANKLIN, March 13, 1873.

THE Right Rev. Charles Pettit McIlvaine, D. C. L., Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Ohio, died last week, in Florence, Italy. Bishop McIlvaine was born in 1798, in Burlington, New Jersey, graduated at Princeton in 1816, was ordained deacon in 1820 and priest in 1822, and became Bishop of Ohio in 1832. He was an earnest champion of evangelical or low church views, and labored with especial zeal against the Oxford Tractarian movement, in opposition to which he wrote a book. His learning was reckoned greater than that of the majority of his associates among the American bishops. He received the degree of D. C. L. from Oxford in 1853, and that of L. L. D. from Cambridge in 1858.

THE Yale College library contains sixty thousand volumes, exclusive of several thousands of pamphlets. The libraries of the various schools and societies attached to the institution include some twenty-six thousand more, making in all eighty-six thousand volumes.

MESSRS. NAVRA & OFFNER, 174 Canal street, sell, for cash, China and crockery-ware and household comforts at greatly reduced prices.

DO YOU GET YOUR PAPER?—Subscribers will oblige us by giving prompt notice when their papers do not come regularly. Everything in our power will be done to correct irregularities. We have had very few complaints, and those mostly from offices which are reached by routes where we have reason to believe irregularity prevails in the transmission of the mails. This we may not be able to remedy, but will if we can.

IMPROVED BARBARIN GASLIGHT APPARATUS.—The manufacturers of this apparatus claim that it is safe and economical, and the brilliancy of the light unsurpassed. The leading insurance companies have declared that it is not dangerous, and have not increased the rates of insurance where it is used. Numerous testimonials attest its successful use. The offices of the company are at No. 2 Triangle building and 255 Peters street, where further information can be obtained. Post-office address, lock-box 748.

DRESSMAKING.—It gives us pleasure to call attention to the advertisement of Mrs. Tournalon, in another column, whom we have known for several years, and can safely assure our friends who patronize her that they may expect good and faithful work. Mrs. Tournahen displays fine taste in trimming, and we know of no dressmaker who can fit more gracefully. She is worthy of patronage, and we have no hesitation in recommending her.

DR. JAMES PORTER advertises in our columns to cure chronic diseases by magnetic treatment. He gives testimonials of residents of the city, with their names and places of residence. His public clinics are at the Temperance Hall, over the Bible House, 163 Camp street. His private parlors are at No. 242 Camp street.

PROCTER & GAMBLE'S OLIVE SOAP is a superior article. Its introduction in a household is a sure guarantee that none other will be used. It is sold at the price of ordinary soap, and can be procured in any quantities from the New Orleans jobbers and wholesale agents. See advertisement elsewhere.

THE OCEAN SPRINGS HOTEL, with the standing furniture complete, is offered for sale or rent. The hotel is situated at Ocean Springs, Mississippi, a resort noted for its healthfulness. For terms, etc., apply to Messrs. Schmidt & Ziegler, No. 49 New Levee street.

THE NATIONAL LINE, sailing from London, Liverpool, Queenstown, etc., affords great advantages to parties visiting Europe, or those sending for friends in the old country. P. F. Gogarty, No. 151 Camp street, is the agent in this city.

MESSRS. BRASELMAN & ADAMS, Nos. 586 and 588 Magazine street, are offering great bargains in domestics, linens, white goods and dress goods. Purchasers will do well to call at this popular establishment.

L. P. DESMOISSEAUX, No. 535 St. Charles street (Ballejo's market,) keeps on hand Western beef, veal, mutton, pork, poultry, fish, eggs, and fresh vegetables and fruits.

RESIDENTS of the Fourth District will find at the establishment of A. W. Skardon & Co., corner of Jackson and Rousseau streets, a large and fresh stock of family groceries.

SEPTOLINE OIL COMPANY, No. 62 Camp and 15 Dauphine street, offer lamps, trimmings, chandeliers, etc., in great variety and at reasonable prices.

WE INVITE the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Messrs. Hillman & Manard, grocers and commission merchants, No. 157 Poydras street.

NEW ORLEANS MANUFACTORY of liquid blueing, for families and laundries. L. Wilkins, proprietor, No. 114 Carondelet street.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

UNDISPUTED FACTS.—It has been truly and significantly said that domestic happiness is more dependent on good digestion than virtuous creeds or moral codes. If the dogma holds, the oracle can be consulted by a prompt application to Price, the Delphic author of the Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Wherever, within the length and breadth of the land, Price's Bitters have penetrated, every household has been illumined by the sunshine of an unclouded joy, and every family revoled in the sweets of health and contentment. The sparkling eye, the ruddy cheek, the cheerful smile and happy glance, no less than the elastic step and the unfaltering tread, what are they but the eloquent telltales of some vitalizing elixir? No secret botany holds the charm, no scientific alchemy creates the spell. The days of miracles are gone; the magic, mysteriously-working wonders have passed away, and the age—a plain, practical one—gives as a simple tonic that, by a happy amalgamation, restores to energy and strength the enervated system. Take Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters, and you bid an eternal farewell to such unwelcome guests as dyspepsia, indigestion, nervousness, neuralgia, flatulency and debility.

The Child's Corner.

LULLABY.

Baby, what do the blossoms say
Down in the garden walk?
They nod and they bow in the twilight gray;
Pray, can you hear them talk?
They say: "Oh, darling baby bright,
We are going to sleep; good night! good night!
For the lullaby breezes have come to sing
How God takes care of everything."
Sleep! sleep!

Baby, what does the robin say?
Do you hear his evening song?
He sits and sings his sunset lay
With a heart all blithe and strong.
He sings: "Good night, my baby dear;
Sleep soft, sleep well, and do not fear;
For somehow I know, as I sit and sing,
That God takes care of everything."
Sleep! sleep!

Baby, what does the cricket say?
Do you hear his measured voice?
He says: "The sun has gone away,
And I've come out to rejoice;
For the cold dew falls upon the grass,
And the fireflies whisper as they pass,
Cricket, cricket, come out and sing,
How God takes care of everything."
Sleep! sleep!

Baby, what are your mother's words,
As you nestle upon her breast?
She says: "Come hither, my sweetest of birds,
For you must seek your nest.
The flowers and the robins have gone to sleep,
The crickets and glow-worms their watches keep;
And your mother will sit by your cradle and sing
That God takes care of everything."
Sleep! sleep!

Taking Legal Advice.

Rennes, the ancient capital of Britany, is a famous place for law. People come there from the extremities of the country to get information and ask advice. To visit Rennes without getting advice appears impossible to a Briton." This was true at the latter end of the last century, just as it is at present, and especially among the country people, who are a timid and cautious race.

Now it happened that a farmer named Bernard, having come to Rennes on business, bethought himself that, as he had a few hours to spare, it would be well to employ them in getting the advice of a good lawyer. He had often heard of Monsieur Potier de la Germondaie, who was in such repute that people considered a lawsuit gained when he undertook their cause. The countryman inquired for his address, and proceeded to his home in Rue St. Georges. The clients were numerous, and Bernard had to wait some time. At length his turn arrived, and he was introduced. M. Potier de la Germondale signed to him to be seated, then, taking off his spectacles and placing them on his table, he requested to know his business.

"Why, Mr. Lawyer," said the farmer, twirling his hat, "I have heard so much of you that, as I have come to Rennes, I wish to take the opportunity of consulting you."

"I thank you for your confidence, my friend; you wish to bring an action, perhaps?"

"An action! oh, I hold that in abhorrence! Never has Pierre Bernard had a word with any one."

"Then it is a settlement—a division of property?"

"Excuse me, Mr. Lawyer; my family and I have never had a division, seeing that we all draw from the well, as they say."

"Well, is it to negotiate a purchase or a sale?"

"Oh, no; I am neither rich enough to purchase nor poor enough to sell."

"Will you tell me, then, what you do want of me?" said the lawyer in surprise.

"Why, I have already told you, Mr. Lawyer," replied Bernard. "I want your advice—for payment, of course, as I am well able to give it to you, and I don't wish to lose this opportunity."

M. Potier took a pen and paper, and asked the countryman his name.

"Pierre Bernard," replied the latter, quite happy that he was understood.

"Your age?"

"Thirty years, or very near it."

"Your vocation?"

"My vocation! Oh, that means what I do? I am a farmer."

The lawyer wrote two lines, folded the paper, and handed it to his strange client.

"Is it finished already? Well and good. What is the price of that advice, Mr. Lawyer?"

"Twenty francs!"

Bernard paid the money and took his leave, delighted that he had taken advantage of his opportunity.

When he reached home it was four o'clock; the journey had fatigued him, and he determined to rest for the remainder of the day. In the meantime the hay had been two days cut, and was completely cured. One of the workingmen came in to ask if it should be drawn in.

"What, this evening?" exclaimed the farmer's wife, who had come in to meet her husband. "It would be a pity to begin the work so late, since it can be done to-morrow without any inconvenience." The man objected that the weather might change; that the horses were all ready and the hands idle. But the farmer's wife replied that the wind was in a good quarter, and that night would set in before their work could be completed. Bernard, who had been listening to the argument, was uncertain which way to decide, when he suddenly recollected that he had the lawyer's advice in his pocket.

"Wait a minute," he exclaimed; "I have an advice—and a famous one too—that I paid twenty francs for; it ought to tell us what to do. Here, Theresa, see what it says; you can read writing better than I."

The woman took the paper and read these lines:

"Never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day."

His wife ventured a few more objections, but he declared that he had not bought a twenty-franc opinion to make no use of it, and that he would follow the lawyer's advice. He himself set the example by taking the lead in the work, and not returning till all the hay was brought in. The event seemed to prove the wisdom of his conduct, for the weather changed during the night; an unexpected storm burst over the valley, and the next morning it was found that the river had overflowed, and carried away all the hay that had been left in the fields. The crops of the neighboring farmers had been completely destroyed. Bernard alone had not suffered.

The success of the first experiment gave him such faith in the advice of the lawyer that from that day forth he adopted it as the rule of his conduct, and became, by his order and diligence, one of the richest farmers in the country. He never forgot the service done him by M. Potier de la Germondaie, to whom he carried a couple of his finest fowls every year as a token of gratitude.

Playing Restaurant.

"Sidney, I am tired of this," said little Harry Hunter, as he threw down his bat and ball. "What else shall we play?"

"I know," said Sidney; "let's play keeping-restaurant. I'll be the barkeeper, and you make believe you are coming in to get a drink. I'll fix this board on these bricks for the place where the man stands behind when he pours out the drinks; I'll put these old bottles on it, and these blocks for cigar-boxes, as we see them fixed in the windows. There now, that's right; but I bet you can't do your part, Harry; you're too little."

"Can't I?—'deed I can, though—elegant," said Harry gleefully; "'cause I saw pa do it, and he ought to know how."

"I'd like to know where you saw pa taking a drink, Harry? I don't believe it," said Sidney.

"But I did see him," said Harry stoutly. "I went walkin' with him yesterday, and when we got by the place at the corner where the windows are fixed up like our bar here, only ever so much nicer—well, pa told me to wait a minute, 'cause he wanted to see a man in there, and when he opened the door I saw such pretty things—big glasses and pictures, and shiny fixin's, and lots of other things; so I pushed the door open a wee little mite and peeped in."

"Well," said Sidney, who was much interested, "what did pa do?"

"I can't show you without a tumbler," was Harry's reply; "but I'll find one," and he scampered into the kitchen, and was back in a twinkling, with a cracked glass he found on the table. "There! now I'll show you," and he placed the glass on the make-believe bar.

He went off a short distance and returned with his hands in his pockets, walking with a comical strut, in imitation of his father's long strides. "Brandy," said he, elevating his childish voice.

Sidney turned around and pretended to pour something in the glass, which he gave to Harry, and he could hardly keep from laughing as the mimic toper turned his head back, as if draining out the last drop of the supposed contents, and smacked his lips, wiped them with his tiny handkerchief, and, placing on the bar a piece of paper as a substitute for a stamp, strutted away.

Sidney could hold out no longer, but burst into a roar of laughter, upsetting in his merriment the whole establishment, and sending blocks, boards, bricks and tumbler all in one confused pile at his feet.

"Now, Harry, did pa really look that way? I didn't know he ever drank any liquor. Ma says it's wrong," said Sidney, as soon as he could get his face straight.

"Yes, he did do just that way I showed you, and when I'm a man I'll do so too. When he started to come out I ran out on the pavement, and I heard a man say: 'If Hunter goes on in this way he'll be in danger soon.' What did he mean, Sidney?"

Before Sidney could reply the dinner-bell was rung, and the hungry little fellows rushed into the house.

Seated at the window overlooking the play-ground the father of these children had seen and heard, through the half-closed blinds, all that had transpired. Words are powerless to express the feeling that agitated his breast. The childish lesson, so unconsciously taught, was not lost, for never again did he drink a glass of liquor; the little ones had cured him by "playing at keeping a restaurant." The Little Sower.

The Crowns of Gold.

"Children, if to each of you were given a crown of gold, what would you do with it?" asked the superintendent of a Sunday school.

"I would sell mine and buy me a soldier's coat and a tall fur hat like father's, when he marches with his regiment," was Johnny's quick response.

"I would buy a big balloon," said Willie.

Robert said he would put his crown on his head and walk through the streets, that people might know how great and rich he was.

"I would rather have a box of carpenter's tools," said Claud.

Henry, who had just been reading about the poor Indians, thought he would like to purchase Bibles and comfortable clothes to carry to them.

"Now I would like to know what the little girls would do," said the superintendent.

"I would keep my crown, and wear it when I have my next birthday party;" replied Dora, smoothing back her long brown curls.

"I think I'd rather have a big wax doll, and a doll's house full of all sorts of nice furniture," eagerly spoke up little Bessie.

"I would give mine to Mrs. Gray, to get some medicine for sick little Jenny," timidly replied Katy Brown. "They are so poor; yes, a great deal poorer than we are."

Mary had tried to speak, but there was something in her throat that almost choked her.

Presently the superintendent noticed her, and his kind "Come, Mary, it is your turn now," encouraged her to reply.

"Oh! sir," said she, "I would lay my crown at Jesus' feet!"

Dear little readers of our paper, what would you do had you a crown of gold?—Morning Light.

CHILDREN AND THE GOSPEL.—The gospel has no conditions which a child cannot fulfill.

The death of Jesus is the child's plea.

The grace of Jesus is the child's strength.

Pleasing Jesus is the child's earnest rule of right.

And going to be with Jesus is the child's best thought of heaven.

Comparative Amount of Cream

FROM DEEP OR SHALLOW SETTING OF MILK.

Thomas Edge, of Chester county, Pennsylvania, has made the following experiment:

After mixing milk, the quantity not stated, so as to have it homogeneous, he divided it into two equal parts, putting as much in one can, 12 inches in diameter, 20 inches deep, as in 6 shallow pans. He added three pints of water to each can, and a half pint to each pan, and put the cans and pans into cold spring water, so that the surface of milk in each was level with the surface of water. The skimmings of cans and pans on six successive days were done at the same time. The daily amounts, as given, make the total of cream from the cans, 68 pounds; from the pans, 48¾ pounds; showing an excess of 19¼ pounds, or a fraction over 39 per cent. of gain over the pans, though the experimenter states, not in accordance with his other figures, that the excess was 18¾ pounds. These two lots of cream being churned on the same morning, that from the cans yielded 14 ounces more butter than that from the pans; the respective quantities of butter are not given. During the experiment he noticed that the cream from the cans was less solid and tenacious, more easily strained, and thickened less after straining, than that from the pans; also that if both lots were not skimmed till the pans were ready, that in the cans soured and sometimes thickened, and no more cream rose after skimming; but if both were skimmed when the cans were ready a small amount of cream would subsequently rise in the pans. On the other hand, members of the Solebury Farmers' Club, Bucks county, Pennsylvania, made experiments, in which the difference in depth was much less, with the following results: Henry Wildman, beginning June 3, mixed and divided into two equal parts the milk of fourteen milkings, the aggregate weight of which was 555 pounds. One-half was set 6, the other 2½ inches deep. The cream from the deep-set made 12 pounds 8 ounces of butter; from the shallow-set, 13 pounds 3 ounces, a difference of 11 ounces in favor of the latter. The temperature and other particulars affecting the result are not stated.

During the week following May 27 E. Reeder put each morning 24 pounds of milk into two pans 4 inches deep, and 24 into four pans 2½ inches deep; each evening 36 pounds into three pans 4 inches deep, and 36 into six pans 2½ inches deep, making a total of 840 pounds. The temperature of the milk-room, carefully noted, ranged from 56 to 60 degrees, and the milk stood forty-eight hours before skimming. From the deep-set, 43 pounds of cream were obtained; from the shallow-set, 46 pounds. The time required for churning the cream, put into the churn at a temperature of 56 degrees, was 18 minutes for that from the former weighed in the lump, 19 pounds; from the latter, 18 pounds and 9 ounces; a difference of 1 pound and 13 onces in favor of the latter. The milk was the mixed product of 5 cows, and the butter averaged 1 pound for every 24 of milk.

E. Michener states that he "set four milkings 5 inches deep and 3 inches," and obtained from the deep-set 6½ pounds of butter, from the shallow-set 7 pounds, but gives no further particulars, except the statement that his family considered shallow-setting less trouble than deep.—Agricultural Report for December.

PLOW DEEP.—Now that we have no scorching suns to bake the soil, and that we have the valuable aid of the winter frosts to disintegrate and pulverize it, we should keep every plow going, and see that it is driven as deep into the earth as the team can pull it. By deep plowing we do not mean necessarily turning up the soil from a great depth and turning under the surface. Except where there is a quantity of vegetable matter or stubble to be turned under and covered we do not advocate the use of the large turning-plow. We recommend deep breaking without much turning of the surface. It is the subsoil we want to render loose and porous. It is this that must be broken if we would raise good crops. The large turn-plows used at the North where the winters are long and the frosts sufficiently severe to pulverize the soil to a depth of several inches, are not adapted to our climate, except, as before remarked, where it is desired to cover up a heavy stubble or coating of vegetable matter. The ordinary turn-plow (Brinly's is the best we know,) followed by the subsoiler, does the best possible work in our opinion. The great defect in our system of plowing is that it is delayed too long, until there is no time to break the ground properly before planting-time comes. Fall and winter plowing provides the only remedy, and this is effectual.—Southern Farm and Home.

BAKED POTATOES.—Potatoes are more nutritious baked than they are cooked in any other manner, and they relish better with those who have not been accustomed to eat them without seasoning. Wash them clean, but do not soak them. Bake them as quickly as possible, without burning in the least. As soon as they are done press each potato in a cloth, so as to crack the skin and allow the steam to escape. If this is omitted the best potatoes will not be mealy. They should be brought immediately to the table.

CURRY OF VEAL.—Cut part of a breast of veal into moderate-sized pieces; put it in a stew-pan, with an onion and a shallot sliced fine, a slice of lemon, one ounce of butter, a little parsley and thyme, a tablespoonful of curry-powder mixed with the same quantity of flour; let the whole sweat together until the meat is slightly brown; add sufficient broth or water for the sauce; let it boil gently till the veal is done; strain the sauce through a sieve, pour it over the veal quite hot, and serve with rice in a separate dish.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.
The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

WANTED—MEN WHO WANT TO MAKE Money.—Here is an opportunity for making money rarely presented in a lifetime. We have got the best and surest-selling article ever invented, that every housekeeper buys on sight. It is a small Furnace, weighing only six pounds, that can be used with or without a stove. It will fit in the holes of any sized stove or range, and will do as much work with one quart of fuel—charcoal, chips, coke, corncobs, wood or soft coal—as can be done on any stove with one bushel. It will boil, broil, roast, toast, bake and stew. It is the best flat-iron heater in the world. Its economy in saving fuel is marvelous. You have no smoke, gas or heat in the room. It sells the year round. Retail price only $2. Thousands are sold every week. Any man with a small capital can clear from $20 to $40 per day by owning the right of any good county, and a whole state is of incalculable worth to a man of enterprise. We will send a sample Furnace to any part of the United States on receipt of $2. Address, for circular,

A CHALLENGE

Is extended to the world to place before the public a better Cough or Lung remedy than

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.

IT HAS NO EQUAL. Read what well-Known Druggists of Tennessee say about Allen's Lung Balsam:

SPRINGFIELD, TENN., Sept. 13, 1872.

GENTLEMEN: Please ship us six dozen Allen's Lung Balsam. We have not a bottle in the store. It has more reputation than any Cough Medicine we have ever sold. Have been in the drug business twenty-seven years. We mean just what we say.

Very truly yours, HURT & TANNER.

What the Doctors Say.

Drs. Wilson & Ward, physicians and druggists, write from Centerville, Tennessee: "We purchased Allen's Lung Balsam, and it sells rapidly. We are practicing physicians, as well as druggists, and take pleasure in recommending a great remedy, such as we know this to be."

Physicians do not recommend a medicine which has no merit. What they say about Allen's Lung Balsam can be taken as a fact. Let all afflicted test it at once, and be convinced of its real merits.

It is harmless to the most delicate child. It contains no Opium in any form.

Directions accompany each bottle.

WASHING MACHINES, PORTABLE ENGINES, ETC.

J. C. TILTON, PITTSBURG, PA.

WOMAN'S FRIEND AND STEAM WASHER

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND SOLD.

WILL CLEANSE YOUR CLOTHES WITHOUT RUBBING.

EVERY ONE SOLD IS FULLY WARRANTED.

NO FLUIDS OR EXTRA SOAP USED.

IT CONSUMES LESS SOAP, LESS TIME AND LESS FUEL THAN THE USUAL method. It saves Labor, Wear and Tear, and the Annoyance of Wash-day. It requires no attention while the process of cleansing goes on. It will do the Washing of the Family while you are eating breakfast and doing up dishes.

Steam has long been known as the most powerful agent in removing dirt, grease and stains from clothing, and bleaching them white. Papermakers have for many years used steam in cleaning and bleaching their rags, and they succeed in making, by its agency, the lilthiest picking from the gutter perfectly pure and white. Until the invention of the STEAM WASHER or WOMAN'S FRIEND, although often attempted, no method had been discovered of applying Steam directly to the clothing, which could be used in a portable manner for domestic purposes. The WOMAN'S FRIEND washes without labor. It will do the washing of an ordinary family in from thirty minutes to an hour. The STEAM WASHER is superior to all other devices for the following reasons:

1. It does its own work, thereby saving a large portion of the time usually taken in a family.
2. It uses much less soap than is required by any other method.
3. It requires no attention whatever while the process of cleansing is going on. A lady can do her washing while she is eating her breakfast and doing up the breakfast dishes.
4. Clothing wears double the time, washed in this Washer, that it will washed by a machine, or by hand-labor or a washboard.
5. Lace Curtains and all fine fabrics are washed in a superior manner. For Flannels this Washer is most desirable, as it will not full them, as a machine or hand-rubbing does. All fabrics, from the finest lace to a bed-blanket, can be washed perfectly and with ease without the rubbing-board.

IT IS TRULY A LABOR AND CLOTHES-SAVING INVENTION.

READ THE FOLLOWING TESTIMONIALS:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 16, 1873.

This is to certify that I have used the Steam Washer sold by E. B. Hayes, General Agent, and fully indorse all the claims for it, having used it four or five weeks.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., February 5, 1873.

MR. E. B. HAYES: After a thorough test of your Steam Washer, or Woman's Friend, I pronounce it the most wonderful invention of the age. It was with much difficulty that I succeeded in getting my washerwoman to try it, being opposed to washing machines generally; but she is perfectly delighted with this, and I can cheerfully recommend it to every family.

(Signed) MRS. W. W. CARRE, 360 Rampart St., corner Clio.

NEW ORLEANS, February 4, 1873.

MR. E. B. HAYES, NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Sir: I take pleasure in testifying to the superior merits of your Steam Washer, or Woman's Friend. From the use I have made of it I feel sure that all you claim for its performance is a success. Every family ought to have one.

(Signed) MISS E. C. WINGATE,
Principal Trinity Church Girls' School, Jackson street.

NEW ORLEANS, February 4, 1873.

This is to certify that I have purchased from Mr. Hayes the Steam Washer known as the "Woman's Friend," and must say I consider it the best Washing Machine I have ever seen. In fact there is nothing equal to it. It saves labor, soap, fuel and clothes, and I fully recommend it to every family as the best and most perfect Washing Machine in use. (Signed) MRS. S. P. RUSS.

NEW ORLEANS, February 5, 1873.

I have used the Steam Washer, or Woman's Friend, sold by Mr. Hayes, general agent, and fully indorse all he claims for it. Every family ought to possess one.

(Signed) E. B. ROTH, 406 Josephine street.

NEW ORLEANS, February 8, 1873.

MR. E. B. HAYES—Sir: The Washing Machine known as the Woman's Friend, or Steam Washer, purchased from you, has proven all you say of it. I cheerfully recommend it to all.

Yours truly, (Signed) MRS. S. BOULLETMET.

NEW ORLEANS, March 11, 1873.

MR. E. B. HAYES—Sir: I am delighted with your Washing Machine. It is indeed most happily called the Woman's Friend. I fully indorse every word of praise accorded by all who have given it a trial. Respectfully, (Signed) MRS. F. W. GUSTIN.

NEW ORLEANS, March 10, 1873.

MR. E. B. HAYES, GENERAL AGENT—Sir: I have used your Steam Washer, or Woman's Friend, and find that it performs satisfactorily all that you claim for it as a labor-saving machine—saving time, fuel, soap and, more particularly, the clothes. I cheerfully recommend it to all my friends and all housekeepers. (Signed) MRS. R. J. MONROE, widow of Ex-Mayor Monroe.

MEDICAL.

PHŒNIX OIL.—PREPARED BY J. J. LINK, New Orleans.—This valuable Liniment has no equal, and can be depended on as one of the best offered to the public. The proprietor, therefore, leaves it to them to judge of its merits, feeling satisfied that its virtue will speak for itself. This Liniment will cure the following diseases if the directions are strictly followed, viz.: Piles or hemorrhoids; cases of twenty-five years standing have been cured with this Liniment. Who will suffer with this painful disease any longer, when so cheap and easy a remedy is offered? For burns or scalds the proprietor challenges the world to produce its equal; it will instantly give relief. For old indolent sores it has effected cures where the most scientific failed. For fresh cuts, sprains, bruises, tetterworm, ringworm, scald head, erysipelas, sting of a wasp, spider or snake-bite, chapped lips, chapped hands, sore mouth, sore throat, sore or caked breast, rheumatism, and pain in the side, breast or back. In cases of pneumonia it will give great relief, where there is much pain in the side or breast, by rubbing the patient with it. For warts and corns it is good, and will remove them if the directions are strictly followed. This Liniment will be found a certain cure for the following diseases in Stock: For foot-evil it is a sovereign remedy; fistula, poll-evil, galls, scratches, sprains, bruises, sweeny, and mange on dogs. In fact no plantation or family will be without this valuable preparation after it becomes generally known. Liberal discount to retailers. For sale by

THE GREAT HOUSEHOLD REMEDY.

AS AN INVIGORATOR, LIVER CORRECTOR

AND BLOOD RENOVATOR

Is superior to all the Bitters, Elixirs, Cordials and Sarsaparillas in use.

It is so adapted to the whole system that every organ and function in the body is brought under its exhilarating influence. It gives tone and strength to the digestive apparatus, dispels languor and debility, invigorates the Liver, regulates the Kidneys and Bowels, removes the effect of excess or over-taxation of any kind, and gives vitality and richness to the blood.

Its curative powers alter and completely reorganize the entire mass of fluids, and even the solids of the human system, thereby preventing and curing Dyspeptic and Consumptive symptoms, Fever and Ague, Bilious diseases, Fevers of all kinds, Nervous Debility, Affections of the Stomach and Bowels, etc. As a mild and delightful Invigorant for delicate females it has no superior.

By its use new life and vigor is given to both body and mind, sending a glow of vitality through every part, which is PERMANENT AND LASTING.

It is the most effectual remedy for the relief of human suffering ever discovered, and is pleasant to the taste.

On Saturday the movement commenced with a fair degree of spirit at full prices, without any quotable change, but with occasional sales of desirable lots at an improvement of ¼c., after which, as the extent of the demand was developed, the competition among buyers enabled factors to establish an advance of ¼@⅛c. In good ordinary, ⅛c. In low middling, and ¼c. In the higher grades, low middling continuing in good request, but showing more irregularity, and advancing less than other grades from having been disproportionably higher on the day previous. The sales summed up 8,900 bales. On Monday buyers came forward with unabated spirit, but, the movement being checked by light offerings of the kinds most wanted and the high pretensions of factors, the business did not exceed 7,000 bales, at irregular but fuller prices, especially for low middling and the higher grades. Ordinary, somewhat dusty, sold at 13c., good ordinary at 16, 16⅛@16¼c., good ordinary to strict good ordinary at 16⅜@17c., strict good ordinary at 17⅛, 17⅛@17⅜c., the last for high style, low middling at 18@18⅛c., strict low middling at 18⅜@18⅝c., strict low middling to middling at 18⅝c., and high style middling at 19⅛c. An offer of 20⅛c. was refused for good middling. On Tuesday the market opened with some inquiry, but the actual demand was limited, and the movement during the morning was confined to a few hundred bales at about previous prices for desirable kinds, while other descriptions exhibited rather a downward tendency, after which, as factors met the demand more freely, buyers came forward with rather a better spirit, especially toward the close, but at no time was there much activity, and the sales were confined to 3,700 bales, the closing rates showing a partial falling off of ⅛c. The business included some very dusty inferior at 9c., and some middling fair at 21c.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 19,600 bales, against 16,590 for the corresponding time last week and 12,550 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,006,814 bales, against 845,774 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 568,264 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 133,492 to Great Britain, of 59,654 to France, and of 119,919 to other foreign ports.

SUGAR.—The market has continued dull, with the tendency in prices in favor of buyers. There is no demand for round lots except at concessions in prices which holders refuse to make. The receipts on Saturday and Monday comprised 431 hhds., but the sales were confined to 150 hhds., at 8¼c. for good fair, 8⅜c. for fully fair, 8⅝c. for fully fair to prime, 9½c. for strictly prime, and 11¼c. for white clarified.

MOLASSES.—The receipts of Louisiana are small, and there is very little movement in consequence. Only 99 bbls. were received on Saturday and Monday, and only a few small sales were made at 55c. for fair reboiled and 60c. for prime fermenting. On Tuesday 74 bbls. were received, and 55 bbls. sold at 55c. for fair reboiled and 64c. for prime plantation.

CORN.—The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 10,700 sacks at 62@63c. for mixed, 64c. for yellow, 64c. for white mixed, and 65c. for white. On Tuesday 8,600 sacks sold at 60@61c. for yellow mixed, 62½@63c. for choice white, and 63@65c. for yellow.

OATS.—On Tuesday 1,500 sacks choice sold at 43½@45c. ₱ bushel.

BRAN.—On Saturday 800 sacks sold at 90c., and on Monday 500 sacks at 92@92½c. ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Saturday 150 bbls. mess sold, in two lots, at $17 ₱ bbl., while on Monday 1,025 bbls. sold, in five lots, at $16.75@17 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—On Tuesday clear sides were in demand, but clear rib sides and shoulders were dull. 300 casks sold at 7c. for shoulders, 9⅛@9½c. for clear rib sides, and 9⅞@9¾c. for clear sides.

HAMS.—On Saturday 10 tierces sold, on the spot, at 15½c., and 100 tierces, seller's option, April 15 to May 15, at 14½c. ₱ lb. On Monday 25 tierces sold, to arrive, at 14½c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday 10 and 10 tierces sold at 15c. ₱ lb.

LARD.—On Tuesday 50 and 100 tierces refined sold at 8¾c. ₱ lb.

BREAKFAST BACON—Is scarce and in demand at 12½@13c. ₱ lb. On Saturday 25 boxes sold at 13c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 114¼@114¾ (against 115¾ at New York,) and, after a fair business, closed at 114¼@114¾ (against 115¾ at New York.)

The sales of silver have been confined to $2,000 in American half dollars, in two sums, on Monday, at 111, $1,500 do. at 111¼, and $10,000 in Mexican dollars at our quotations. American half dollars are quoted at 110@111, and Mexican dollars at 2¼ ₱ cent. premium in gold for new, and 5 ₱ cent. for old.
